PREFACE.

It is known to all who have bestowed attention upon the early history of Shakespeare's writings, that his dramas came originally from the press in a most imperfect state: so inaccurate, indeed, so defective and mutilated were the first editions of some of these admirable productions, that, were they reproduced at the present day with all the faults of their primitive typography, it is doubtful whether their transcendent merits would be discovered, even by many who are now their sincerest admirers. They were often without stage directions, and deficient in all the divisions of act and scene; halting rhymes and intolerable rhythm disfigured every speech; prose was solemnly measured off into verse, and verse unmercifully degraded into prose; omissions and redundances rapidly succeeded each other; they abounded with blunders in grammar and in sense, in orthography and punctuation, and with incoherences and inconsistencies of every imaginable description.

For so much of this gross carelessness as may fairly be attributed to the printers, it may be remarked in extenuation, that in the age of Shakespeare the art of printing was comparatively in its infancy. The correction of the press, as it is called, or the business of securing the most perfect accuracy in printed works, was not then, generally, as it has since become, a distinct department, intrusted to an experienced person specially trained for the purpose; but was often exercised at haphazard, either by the proprietor of a printing-office, who was sometimes incompetent, or by one of his deputies no better qualified than himself. It is true that among the old printers there was not wanting here and there one, who justly prided himself upon the superior accuracy with which he executed the works intrusted to his care; but it was not the good fortune of Shakespeare's plays, on their first publication, to fall into any such competent hands.

The carelessness or ignorance of printers was not, however, the only source of inaccuracy. The unwillingness of the old stage-managers to have their popular acting dramas printed, and thus made accessible to the public—probably through fear that such publicity would tend to diminish the desire to witness their performance at the theatre—often rendered the publication of a play a surreptitious work. Publishers being thus driven to indirect means to obtain possession of a manuscript copy, the author of a play, by his joint interest with the manager, was necessarily excluded from furnishing it, as well as from any supervision of his own production while passing through the press. That such was the case with the first impression of Shakespeare's plays there can be no doubt. The manuscript from which they were printed was evidently an imperfect copy, obtained from the memory of subordinate many of the most valuable of these emendations the reader will desire no authority; they carry conviction on their face, and that they are the genuine language of the poet becomes at once self-evident. If, however, there are a few which seem to deserve only a qualified approbation, we hazard nothing in saying, that from the large majority it will be found utterly impossible to dissent.

The text of Collier being without notes, or any means of distinguishing the new readings, for the present work we have collated it with the best modern editions, principally with those of Verplanck and Singer, and denoted its variations from them by figures, which are placed before the word or passage referred to. The reading of former editions is inserted, under corresponding figures, in the "NOTES TO THE EMENDATIONS" at the close of the volume. The means are thus furnished not only of comparing this edition with previous ones, but of restoring the former reading whenever desirable. As the drama of "Pericles" is not contained in the folio of 1632, none of the proposed emendations can of course be applicable to it: the text, in this instance, is that of the most authentic impressions.

Our text of the Poems is from Collier's edition of 1844.

Collier's "History of the English Stage to the Time of Shakespeare," affording, as it does, a view of the poet's stand-point at the outset of his career, is of great value in forming an estimate of the creative and reformatory power of his genius. It contains, however, much irrelevant matter of inferior interest, and has accordingly been abridged for the present work. The Life of Shakespeare and the Introductions to the Plays inserted in this edition have also been abridged from the same source.

As something of interest to the reader, the preliminary matter belonging to the folio of 1632—consisting of "The Dedication," "Commendatory Verses," &c.—has been reproduced in the form and order there observed.

More than ordinary pains have been bestowed upon the foot-notes of this edition, in order to obviate the necessity of looking beyond the volume itself for any thing needful to its proper elucidation. While many difficult words and passages hitherto neglected have been explained, many lengthy interpretations of commentators have also been condensed; and it is believed these notes, as now arranged, will afford all the essential aid that can be derived both from a glossary of antiquated words, and a commentary upon obscure or involved passages, obsolete customs, &c. The foot-notes are referred to by letters of the alphabet, which, in the text, are placed before the word or passage to be explained.

Mr. Collier says of the "recently-discovered Folio": "The singularity and interest of the volume arises out of the fact that from the first page to the last it contains notes and emendations in a handwriting not much later than when it came from the press. . . . . As there is no page without from ten to thirty of these minor emendations they do not in the whole fall short of 20,000. . . . . Corrections only have been hitherto spoken of, but there are at least two other peculiar features in the volume. Many passages in nearly all the plays are struck out with a pen as if for the purpose of shortening the performance. [See Fac-simile.]. . . . . To this fact we may add that hundreds of stage-directions have been inscribed in manuscript as if for the guidance and instruction of actors in order that no mistake might be made in what is denominated stage-business."

Corrections, contained in a copy of the Folio of 1632, in the possession of J. Payne Collier, Esq." London. One vol. 12mo, reprinted by J. S. Redfield, New York, and to be had of the booksellers generally throughout the United States.
Enter Charles, Alansin, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somerset brought rescue in, We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the yong whelpe of Talbot, raging wood,
Did sfe his puny sword in Frenchmens blood.

Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I laid: Thou Maiden youth, be vanquishd by a Maide.
But with a proud Majestical high scorn
He answer'd thus: Yong Talbot was not borne
To be the pillowage of a Giglot Wench,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtlesse he would have made a noble Knight.
See where he lyes inherced in the armes
Of the blood-nurser of his harming.

Bast. Hiew them to peecees, hack their bones asunder,
Whose life was Englands glory, Gallia's wonder:

Char. Oh no for bare: For that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Lucy.

Luc. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
To know who hath obtained the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive missage art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission Dolphin? Tis a mere French word:
We English Warrior's wot not what it means.
I come to know what Prisoners thou hast tane,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners aslitt thou? Hell our prison is.
But tell me whom thou seek'st.

Luc. But wheres the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
Created for his rare success in Armes,
Great Earle of Wastford, Waterford, and Valentia,
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Vrchifield,
Lord Strange of Blackmore, Lord Verdon of Alton, Lord Cromwell of Winglefield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,
The thrice Victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
Worthy S. Michael, and the Golden Fleece,
Great Marshall to our King Henry the sixt,
Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.
In order to make the reader acquainted with the origin of the English stage, such as Shakespeare found it when he became connected with it, it is necessary to mention that a miracle-play or mystery, (as it has been termed in modern times,) is the oldest form of dramatic composition in our language. The stories of productions of this kind were derived from the Sacred Writings, from the pseudo-evangelium, or from the lives and legends of saints and martyrs. Miracle-plays were common in London in the year 1170; and as early as 1119 the miracle-play of St. Katherine had been represented at Dunstable.

During about 300 years this species of theatrical entertainment seems to have flourished, often under the auspices of the clergy, who used it as the means of religious instruction; but prior to the reign of Henry VI, a new kind of drama had become popular, which by writers of the time was denominated a moral, or moral play, and more recently a morality. It acquired this name from the nature and purpose of the representation, which usually conveyed a lesson for the better conduct of human life, the characters employed not being scriptural, as in miracle-plays, but allegorical, or symbolical. Miracle-plays continued to be represented long after moral plays were introduced, but from a remote date abstract impersonations had by degrees, not now easily traced, found their way into miracle-plays: thus, perhaps, moral plays, consisting only of such characters, grew out of them.

A very remarkable and interesting miracle-play, not founded upon the Sacred Writings, but upon a popular legend, and all the characters of which, with one exception, purport to be real personages, has recently been discovered in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, in a manuscript certainly as old as the later part of the reign of Edward IV.

It was not until the reign of Elizabeth that miracle-plays were generally abandoned, but in some distant parts of the kingdom they were persevered with even till the time of James I. Miracle-plays, in fact, gradually gave way to moral plays, which presented more variety of situation and character; and moral plays in turn were superseded by a species of mixed drama, which was strictly neither moral play nor historical play, but a combination of both in the same representation.

Of this singular union of discordant materials, no person who has hitherto written upon the history of our dramatic poetry has taken due notice; but it is very necessary not to pass it over, inasmuch as it may be said to have led ultimately to the introduction of tragedy, comedy, and history, as we now understand the terms, upon the boards of our public theatres. No blame for the omission can fairly be imputed to our predecessors, because the earliest specimens of this sort of mixed drama which remain to us have been brought to light within a comparatively few years. The most important of these is the "Kynge Johan" of Bishop Bale. We are not able to settle with precision the date when it was originally written, but it was evidently performed, with additions and alterations, after Elizabeth came to the throne. The purpose of the author was to promote the Reformation, by applying to the circumstances of his own times the events of the reign of King John, when the kingdom was placed by the Pope under an interdict, and when, according to popular belief, the sovereign was poisoned by a draught administered to him by a monk. This drama resembles a moral play in the introduction of abstract impersonations, and an historical play in the adaptation of a portion of our national annals, with real characters, to the purposes of the stage. Though performed in the reign of Elizabeth, we may carry back the first composition and representation of "Kynge Johan" to the time of Edward VI.

The object of Bale's play was, as we have stated, to advance the Reformation under Edward VI; but in the reign of his successor a drama of a similar description, and of a directly opposite tendency, was written and acted. The anonymous author calls his drama "República," and he adds that it was "made in the year of our Lord 1553, and the first year of the most prosperous reign of our most gracious Sovereign, Queen Mary the First." He was supposed to speak the prologue himself, in the character of "a Poet:" and although every person he introduces is in fact called by some abstract name, he avowedly brings forward the Queen herself as "Nemesis, the Goddess of redress and correction," while her kingdom of England is intended by "Respublica," and its inhabitants represented by "People:." The Reformation in the Church is distinguished as "Oppression;" and Policy, Authority, and Honesty, are designated "Avarice," "Ino-

All this is distinctly stated by the author on his title-page, while he also employs the impersonations of Misericordia, Veritas, Justitia, and Fas, (agents not unfrequently resorted to in the older miracle-plays) as the friends of "Nemesis," the Queen, and as the supporters of the Roman Catholic religion in her dominions.

The production was evidently written by a man of education; but, although there are many attempts at humor, and some at variety, both in character and situation, the whole must have been a very wearisome performance, adapted to please the court by its general tendency, but little calculated to accomplish any other purpose entertained by the writer.

In the midst of the performance of dramatic productions of a religious or political character, each party supporting the views which most accorded with the author’s individual opinions, John Heywood, who was a zealous Roman Catholic, and one who subsequently suffered for his creed under Edward VI. and Elizabeth, discovered a new species of entertainment, of a highly humorous, and not altogether of an un instructive kind; which seems to have been very acceptable to the sovereign and nobility, and to have obtained for the author a distinguished character as a court dramatist, and ample rewards as an actor in his language. These were properly called “interludes,” being short comic pieces, represented ordinarily in the interval between the feast and the banquet; and we may easily believe that they had considerable influence in the settlement of the form which our stage- performances ultimately assumed. Heywood does not appear to have begun writing until 1550, but Romor, Gorboduc, had been composed on the throne. His “John Th and Sir John,” his “Four P’s,” his “Pardoner and Friar,” and pieces of that description, presented both matter of variety and novelty of construction, as well as considerable wit and drollery in the language. He was a very original writer, and certainly merits more admiration than any of his cotemporaries.

To the commencement of the reign of Elizabeth we may refer several theatrical productions which make approaches, more or less near, to comedy, tragedy, and history, and still retain many of the known features of moral plays. “Tom Tiler and his Wife” is a comedy in its incidents; but the allegorical personages, Desire, Destiny, Strife, and Peace, and his son’s voluntary quitting, the marriage of the principal character to the wife of a called species of stage-entertainment. “The conflict of Conscience,” on the other hand, is a tragedy on the fate of an historical personage; but Conscience, Hypocrisy, Avarice, Horror, &c., are called in aid of the purpose of the writer. “Appius and Virginia” is in most respects a history, founded upon facts; but Roman, Coriolanus, and the like, are unimportantly concerned in the representation. These, and other productions of the same class, which it is not necessary to particularize, show the gradual advances made towards a better, because a more natural, species of theatrical composition.

What is justly to be considered the oldest known comedy in our language is of a character not much posterior to the reign of Henry VIII., if, indeed, it were not composed while he was on the throne. It has the title of “Ralph Roister Doister,” and it was written by Nicholas Udall, who was master of Eton school in 1540, and who died in 1557. It is on every account a very remarkable performance; and as the scene is laid in London, it affords a curious picture of the manners and customs of its construction, even at that early date, may be gathered from the fact, that in the single copy which has descended to us it is divided into acts and scenes. The story is one of common, every-day life; and none of the characters are such as people had been accustomed to find in ordinary dramatic entertainments. The piece takes its name from its hero, a young town-gallant, who is mightily enamored of himself, and who is encouraged in the good opinion he entertains of his own person and accomplishments by Matthew Merrigreek, a poor relation, who attends him in the double capacity of companion and servant. Ralph Roister Doister is in love with a lady of property, called Custance, betrothed to Gawin Goodluck, a merchant, who is at sea when the comedy begins, but who returns before it concludes. The main incidents relate to the mode in which the hero, with the treacherous help of his associate, endeavors to gain the affections of Custance. He writes her a letter, which Merrygreek reads, and is so far from the occurrence of the punctuation, so that it entirely perverts the meaning of the writer: he visits her while she is surrounded by her female domestics, but he is unceremoniously rejected: he resolves to carry her by force of arms, and makes an assault upon her habitation; but with the assistance of her maids, armed with maps and brooms, she drives him from the attack. Then, her betrothed lover returns, who has been misinformed on the subject of her fidelity, but he is soon reconciled on an explanation of the facts; and Ralph Roister Doister, finding that he has no chance of success, and that he has only been cajoled and laughed at, makes up his mind to be merry at the wedding of Goodluck and Custance. Were the dialogue modernized, the comedy was not half performed, even in the common day, to the satisfaction of many of the usual attendants at our theatres.

The drama which we have been accustomed to regard as our oldest tragedy, and which probably has a just claim to the distinction, was acted on 18th January, 1562, and printed in 1565. It was originally by John Lyly, but was afterwards appropriated by Richard Grafton, in 1571 under the title of “Ferrex and Porrex,” and a third time in 1590 as “Gorboduc.” The first three acts were written by Thomas Norton, and the last two by Thomas Sackville, afterwards Earl of Dorset, and it was performed “by the gentlemen of the Inner Temple.” Although the form of the Greek drama is observed in “Gorboduc,” and each act concludes why has been misinformed on the subject of her fidelity, but he is soon reconciled on an explanation of the facts; and Ralph Roister Doister, finding that he has no chance of success, and that he has only been cajoled and laughed at, makes up his mind to be merry at the wedding of Goodluck and Custance. contain the names of various plays represented at court; and it is to be noted, that it was certainly the practice at a later date, and it was probably the practice at the time to which we are now advertsing, to select for performance before the Queen such pieces as were most in favor with public audiences: consequently the mention of a few of the titles of productions represented before Elizabeth at Greenwich, Whitehall, Richmond, or Naples, will show the character of the popular performances of the day. We derive the following names from Mr. P. Cunningham's "Extracts from the Revels' Accounts," printed for the Shakespeare Society:—
Lady Barbara.
Iphigenia.
Ajax and Ulysses.
Narcissus.
Paris and Vienna.
The Play of Fortune.
Alcestis.
The Four Sons of Japhias.
The Son of the Muses.
The History of the Collier.
The History of Error.

These are only a few out of many dramas, establishing the multiplicity of sources to which the poets of the time resorted.

Upon the manner in which the materials thus procured, and handled, we have several contemporaneous authorities. George Whetstone, (an author who has principally acquired celebrity by writing an earlier drama upon the incidents employed by Shakespeare in his "Measure for Measure") in the dedication of his "Promos and Cassandria," gives a compendious description of the nature of "pantomimes," and of "Miracle-plays," in 1572, "The Englishman," he remarks, "in this quality is most vain, indiscreet, and out of order. He first grounds his work on impossibilities; then, in three hours, runs he through the world, marries, gets children, makes children men, men to conquer kingdoms, murder monsters, and bringeth gods from heaven, and fetcheth devils from hell: and, that which is worst, their ground is not so unperfect as their working indiscreet; not weighing, so the people laugh, though they laugh them for their follies to scorn. Many times, to make mirth, they make a clown companion with a king: in their grave counsels they allow the advice of fools; yea, they use one order of speech for a holy and religious person: or, if anything of the be perceived, is an accurate account of the ordinary license taken in our dramatic drama, and of the reliance of poets, long before the time of Shakespeare, upon the imaginations of their auditors.

Sir Philip Sidney is believed to have written his "Apology of Poetry" in 1583, and we have already referred to it in connection with "Gorboduc." His observations, upon the general character of dramatic representations in his time, throw much light on the state of the stage a very few years before Shakespeare is supposed to have quitted Stratford-upon-Avon, and attached himself to a theatrical company. "Our tragedies and comedies," says Sidney, "are not without cause cried out against, observing neither rules of honesty civility, nor skilful performance. But if it be so in Gorboduc, how much more in all the rest, where you shall have Asia of the one side, and Afric of the other, and so many other under-kings, that the player, when he comes in, must ever begin with telling where he is, or else the tale will not be conceived. For you shall have three ladies walk to gather flowers, and then we must have the stage to be a garden: by and by we hear news of a shipwreck in the same place; then, we are to blame if we accept it not for a rock. Upon the back of that comes out a hideous monster with fire and smoke, and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cave: while, in the meantime, two armies fly in, represented with four swords and bucklers, and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field? Now, of time they are much more liberal; for ordinary it is that two young princes fall in love: after many traverses she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy; he is lost, growth a man, fallen in love, and is ready to get another child, and all this in two hours' space: which how absurd it is in sense, even sense may imagine, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justified."

Having thus briefly adverted to the nature and character of dramatic representations from the earliest times to the year 1583, and having established that our romantic drama was of ancient origin, it is necessary shortly to describe the circumstances under which plays were at different early periods performed.

There were no regular theatres, or buildings permanently constructed for the purposes of the drama, until after 1575. Miracle-plays were sometimes exhibited in churches and in the halls of corporations, but more frequently upon moveable stages, or scaffolds, erected in the open air. Moral plays were subsequently given in various other manner and at circumstances, excepting that a practice had grown up among the nobility and wealthier gentry, of having dramatic exhibitions at particular seasons in their own residences. These were sometimes performed by a company of actors retained in the family, and sometimes by itinerant players, who bethought to have "the body of the people, the crowd of the town, and a number of the ser-vant's of members of the aristocracy. In 1588, an act was passed allowing strolling actors to perform, if licensed by some baron or nobleman of higher degree, but subjecting all others to the penalties inflicted upon vagrants. Therefore, although many companies of players went round the country, and acted as the servants of some of the nobility, they had no legislative protection until 1572. It is a singular fact, that the earliest known company of players, travelling under the name and patronage of one of the nobility, was that of the Duke of Gloucester, afterward Richard III. Henry VII, had two distinct bodies of "actors of interludes"
in his pay, and perforce the profession of a playner became well understood and came to prevail. In the latter part of the reign of Henry VII, the players of the Duke of Norfolk and Buckingham, and of the Earls of Arundel, Oxford, and Northumberland, performed at court. About this period, and somewhat earlier, we also hear of companies attached to particular places; and in several records we read of the players of York, Coventry, Lavenham, Wycombe, Chester, Manningtree, Evesham, Mile-end, Kingston, &c.

In the reign of Henry VIII, and perhaps in that of his predecessor, the gentlemen and singing-boys of the Chapel Royal were employed to act plays and interludes before the court; and afterwards the children of the 'premister, St. Paul's, and Windsor, under their several masters, are not infrequently mentioned in the household books of the palace, and in the accounts of the department of the revels. In 1541 the king added a new company to the dramatic retinue of the court, besides the two companies which had been paid by his father, and the associations above mentioned. At this period dramatic entertainments, masques disguisings, and revels of every description, were carried to a and a costly excess. Henry VIII. raised the sum, until then paid for a play, from £6 13s. 4d. to £10.
William Cornyns, the master of the children of the chapel, on one occasion was paid no less a sum than £200, in the money of that time, by way of reward; and John Heywood, the author of interludes before mentioned, who was also a player upon the virginals, had a salary of £20 per annum, in adtion to his other emoluments. During seasons of favour a Lord of Misrule was regularly appointed to superintend the sports, and he also was separately and liberally remunerated. The example of the court was followed by the courtiers, and the companies of theatrical celebrities in the pay, or acting in various parts of the kingdom under the names of particular noblemen, became extremely numerous.
Religious houses gave them encouragement, and even assisted in the getting up and representation of the performances, especially shortly before the dissolution of the monasteries.
In 1543 was passed a statute, rendered necessary by the polemical character of some of the dramas publicly represented, although not many years before, the king had himself encouraged such performances at court, by being present at a play in which Luther and his wife were ridiculed. The act prohibits "bollicas, plays, rhymes, songs, and other funstances" of a religious or licentious character, but at the same time carefully provides, that the clauses shall not extend to "songs, plays, and interludes" which had for object "the rebuking and reproaching of vices, and the setting forth of virtue; so always the said songs, plays, or interludes meddle not with the interpretations of Scripture."
The permanent office of Master of the Revels, for the regulation of all dramatic performances, was created in 1546, and Sir Thomas Cawarden was appointed to it with an annual salary of £10. A person of the name of John Bernard was made Clerk of the Revels, with an allowance of 8d. per day and livery.
It is a remarkable point, established by Mr. Tyt-er, that Henry VIII. was not yet buried, and Bishop Gardiner and his parishioners were about to sing a dirge for his soul, when the actors of the Earl of Oxford posted bills for the performance of a play in Southwark. This was long before the construction of any regular theatre on the Banksie; but it shows at how early a date that part of the town was selected for such exhibitions.
Very soon after Edward VI. came to the throne, severe measures were taken to restrain not only dramatic performances, but the publication of drama. Playing and printing plays were first entirely suspended; then, the companies of noblemen were allowed to perform, but not without special authority; and, finally, the sign manual, or warrant of the Privy Council, was required to their licences. The objection stated was, that the plays had a political, not a polemical, purpose. One of the first acts of Mary's government, was to issue a proclamation to put a stop to the performance of interludes calculated to advance the principles of the Reformation; and we may be sure, that the play ordered at the coronation of the queen was of a contrary description. It appears on other authorities, that for two years there was an entire cessation of public dramatic performances;
but in this reign the representation of the old Roman Catholic miracle plays was partially and authoritatively revived.
It is not necessary to detail the proceedings in connection with theatrical representations at the opening of the reign of Elizabeth. At first plays were disconntenanced, but by degrees they were permitted; and the queen seems at all times to have derived much pleasure from the services of her own players, those of her nobility, and of the different companies of children belonging to Westminster, St. Paul's, Windsor, and the Chapel Royal.
In 1572 the act was passed (which was renewed with additional force in 1597) to restrain the num-er of itinerant performers. Two years afterward, the Earl of Leicester obtained from Elizabeth a patent under the great seal, to enable his players, James Burbage, John Perkin, John Lawn, William Heywood, and Robert Wilson to perform comedies, tragedies, interludes, and stage-plays," in any part of the kingdom, with the exception of the metropolis.
The Lord Mayor and Aldermen succeeded in excluding the players from the strict boundaries of the city, but they were not able to shut them out of the districts, and it is not to be forgotten that James Burbage and his associates were supported by court favor generally, and by the powerful patronage of the Earl of Leicester in particular. Accordingly, in the year after they had obtained their patent,
James Burbage and his fellows took a large house in the precinct of the dissolved monastery of the Therapeutick Hall, and occupied it as a theatre. This was accomplished in 1576, and it is the first time we hear of any building set apart for theatrical representations. Until then the various companies of actors had been obliged to content them-seves with churches, halls, with temporary erec-tions in the streets, or with lane yards, in which they raised a stage, the spectators standing below, or occupying the galleries; or in the gardens of the inns of the taverns, in which they were permitted about the same period two other edifices were built for the exhibition of plays in Shoreditch, one of which was called "The Curtain," and the other
"The Theatre." Both these are mentioned as in existence and operation in 1577. Thus we see that two buildings close to the walls of the city, and a third within a privileged district in the city, were expressly applied to the purpose of stage-plays, were in use almost immediately after the date of the Patent to the players of the Earl of Leicester.
It is extremely likely, though we have no distinct evidence of the fact, that one or more play-houses were opened about the same time in Southwark;
and we know that the Rose theatre was standing there not many years afterward. John Stockwood, a puritanical preacher, published a sermon in 1578,
in which he asserted that there were "eight ordinary places" in and near London for dramatic exhibitions, and that the united profits were not less than £2000 a year, equal to £12,000 of money now. Another divine, of the name of White, in a sermon equally polemical, in 1576, called the play-houses at that time erected, "sumptuous the-ers." No doubt, the puritanical zeal of these divines had been excited by the opening of the Blackfriars, the Curtain, and the Theatre, in 1576 and 1577, for the exclusive purpose of the drama; and the five additional places, where plays, according to the patent, were acted before 1578, were most likely a play-house at Newington-burns,
or inn-yards, converted occasionally into theatres.
We have thus brought our sketch of dramatic performances and performers down to about the same period, the year 1583. We propose to continue it to 1590, and to assume that as the period not, of course, when Shakespeare first joined a theatrical company, but when he began writing original pieces for the stage. This is in matter which is more distinctly considered in the biography of the poet; but it is necessary here to fix upon some date to which we are to extend our introductory account of the progress and condition of theatrical affairs. What we have still to offer will apply to the seven years from 1583 to 1590.

The accounts of the revels at court about this period afford us little information, and indeed for several years, when such entertainments were certainly required by the Queen, we are indeed without any details either of the pieces performed, or of the cost of preparation. We have such particulars for the years 1581, 1582, 1584, and 1587, but for the intermediate years we are without done. The accounts of 1581, 1582, and 1584, give us the following names of dramatic performances of various kinds exhibited before the Queen:

A comedy called Delight.
The Story of Pompey.
A Game of the Cards, comedy of Beauty and History of Felix and Philosophers.
Love and Fortune,
History of Telomoe.

This list of dramas (the accounts mention that others were acted without supplying their titles) establishes that moral plays had not yet been excluded. The "Game of the Cards" is expressed as "a moral play" or moral; in the account for 1582; and we may not unreasonably suppose that "Delight," and "Beauty and Housewifery," were of the same class. "The Story of Pompey," and "Ariodante and Genevora," were evidently performances founded upon ancient history, and such may have been the case with "The History of Telomoe," "Love and Fortune" has been called "the play of Fortune" in the account of 1573; and we may feel assured that "Ariodante and Genevora," was the story told by Ariosto, which also forms part of the plot of "Much Ado about Nothing." "The History of Form" was doubtless "The History of Error" of the account of 1577, the clerk having written the title by his ear; and we may reasonably suppose that "Felix and Felisemien," the tale of Felix and Felisemien, narrated in the "Diana" of Montemeyer. It is thus evident, that the Master of the Revels and the actors exerted themselves to furnish variety for the entertainment of the Queen and her nobility; but we still see no trace ("Gorboduc" excepted) of any play at court, the materials for which were obtained from the English Chronicles. It is very certain, however, that anterior to 1588 such pieces had been written, and acted before public audiences; but those who catered for the court in these matters might not consider it expedient to exhibit, in the presence of the Queen, any play which involved the actions or conduct of her person.

About this date the number of companies of actors performing publicly in and near London seems to have been very considerable. A person, who calls himself "a soldier," writing to Secretary Walsingham, in January, 1586, tells him, that "every day in the week the players' bills are set up in sundry places of the city," and after mentioning the actors of the Queen, the Earl of Leicester, the Earl of Oxford, and the Lord Admiral, he goes on to state that not fewer than two hundred persons, thus retained and employed, strutted in their silks about the streets. It may be doubted whether this statement is much exaggerated, recollecting the many noblemen who had players acting under their names at this date, and that each company consisted probably of eight or ten performers. On the same authority we learn that theatrical representations upon the Sabbath had been forbidden; but this restriction does not seem to have been imposed without a considerable struggle.

Before 1581 the Privy Council had issued an order upon the subject, but it was disregarded in some of the seaports of London; and it was not until after a fatal exhibition of bear-baiting at Paris Garden, upon Sunday, June 13, 1583, when many persons were killed and wounded by the falling of a scaffold, that the practice of playing, as well as bear-baiting, on the Sabbath was at all generally checked. In 1586, as far as we can judge from the information that has come down to our day, this order which had been issued in this respect was pretty strictly enforced. At this period, and afterwards, plays were not unfrequently played at court on Sunday, and the chief difficulty therefore seems to have been to induce the Privy Council to act with energy against similar performances in public theatres.

The annual ''Revels account'' of the Juvenile Revels merely lists the names of the plays which were produced in general terms, that between Christmas, 1586, and Shrovetide, 1587, "seven plays, besides feats of activity, and other shows by the children of Paul's, her Majesty's servants, and the gentlemen of Gray's Inn," were prepared and represented before the Queen at Greenwich. No names of plays are given, but it is clear that a tragedy, under the title of "The Misfortunes of Arthur," which purports to have been acted by some of the members of Gray's Inn before the Queen, on Feb. 28, 1587: this, in fact, must be the very production stated in the revels' accounts to have been got up and performed by these parties; and it requires notice, not merely for its own intrinsic excellence, but because, in point of date, it is the second play founded upon English history represented at court, as well as the second original theatrical production in blank-verse that has been preserved. The example, in this particular, had been set, as we have already shown, in "Gorboduc," fifteen years before; and it is probable, that in that interval not a few of the conditions of the plays exhibited at court were in blank-verse, but it had not yet been used on any of our public stages.

The main body of "The Misfortunes of Arthur," was the authorship of Thomas Hughes, a member of Gray's Inn; but some speeches and two choruses (which are in rhyme) were added by William Fulbecke and Francis Flower, while no less a man than Lord Bacon assisted Christopher Velverton and John Lancaster in the preparation of the dumm shows. Hughes evidently took "Gorboduc" as his model, both in subject and style, and, like Sackville and Norton, he adopted the form of the Greek and Roman drama, and adhered more strictly than his predecessors to the unities of time and place. The author possesses a very bold and firm touch, and his characters are strongly drawn, and the language they employ is consistent with their situations and habits; his blank-verse, both in force and variety, is superior to that of either Sackville or Norton.

It is very clear, that up to the year 1580, about which date Gesson published his "Plays confuted in Five Actions," dramatic performances in public stages of London were sometimes in prose, but more constantly in rhyme. In his "School of Abuse," 1579, Gesson speaks of "two prose books played at the Bell Savage"; but in his "Plays confuted" he tells us, that "poets send their verses to the stage upon such feet as continually are rolled up in rhyme." With one or two exceptions, all the plays publicly acted, of a date anterior to 1590, that have come down to us, are either in prose or in rhyme. The case seems to have been different, as already remarked, with some of the court-shows and private entertainments; but we are now advertizing to the pieces represented at such places as the theatre, the Curtain, Blackfriars, and in innyards adapted posteriorly to dramatic amusements, to which the public was indistinguishably admitted. The earliest work, in which the employment of blank verse for the purpose of the common stage is noticed, is an epistle by Thomas Nash introducing to the world his friend Robert Greene's "Menaphon," in 1587; there, in reference to "rain-glorious tragedians," he says, that they play "on the stage of arrogance," and that they "think to out-brave better pens with the swelling bombard of bragging blankverse." He afterwards talks of the "drumming decasyllabion" they employed, and ridicules them for "reposing eternity in the mouth of a player." This question is further illustrated by a production by Greene, published in the next year, "Perimedes, the Blacksmith," from which it is evident that Nash had an individual allusion in what he had said in 1587. Greene fixes on the author of the tragedy of "Tamburlaine," whom he accuses of "setting the end of scholarism in an English blank-verse," and who, it should seem, had somewhere accused Greene of not being able to write blank verse.

We learn from various authorities, that Christopher Marlowe was the author of "Tamburlaine the Great," a dramatic work of the highest celebrity and popularity, printed as early as 1590, and affording the first known instance of the use of blank verse in a public theatre: the title-page of the edition, 1596, states, that it had been "sundry times shown upon stage in the city of London." In the prologue the author claims to have introduced a new form of composition:

"From juggling veins of rhyming mother-wits, And such conceits as clownage keps in pay, We'll lead you to the stately tent of war," etc.

Accordingly, nearly the whole drama, consisting of a first and second part, is in blank verse. Hence we see the value of Dryden's loose assertion, that Shakespeare was the first who, without the gods of continual rhyming, invented that kind of writing which we call blank verse." The distinction belongs to Marlowe, the greatest of Shakespeare's predecessors, and a poet who, if he had lived, might, perhaps, have been a formidable rival of his genius. We have too much reverence for the exhaustless originality of the great dramatist, to think that he cannot afford this, or any other tribute to a poet, who, as far as the public stage is concerned, deserves to be regarded as the inventor of a new style of composition.

That the attempt was viewed with jealousy, there can be no doubt, after what we have quoted from Nash and Greene. It is most likely that Greene, who was other than Nash, had previously written various dramas in rhyme; and the bold experiment of Marlowe having been instantly successful, Greene was obliged to abandon his old course, and his extant plays are all in blank verse. Nash, who had attacked Marlowe in 1597, before 1593 (when Marlowe was killed in an affair arising out of an amorous intrigue) had joined him in the production of a blank verse tragedy on the story of Dido, which was printed in 1594.

It has been objected to "Tamburlaine," that it is written in a turgid and ambitious style, such indeed as Nash and Greene ridicule; but we are to recollect that Marlowe was at this time endeavoring to wean audiences from the "juggling veins of rhyming mother-wits," and that, in order to satisfy the ear for the loss of the jingle, he was obliged to give what Nash calls "the swelling bombard of bragging blank verse." This consideration will of itself account for breaches of a more correct taste to be found in this Tragedy. It becomes, besides what we have already quoted, Marlowe tells the audience to expect "high astounding terms," and he did not disappoint expectation. Perhaps the better to reconcile the ordinary frequenters of public theatres to the change, he inserted various scenes of low comedy, which the printer of the edition in 1597, the Mit fit to exclude, as "meaningless, and far unmeet for the matter." Marlowe likewise sprinkled couplets here and there, although it is to be remembered, that having accomplished his object of substituting blank verse by the first part of "Tamburlaine," he did not, even in the second part, think it necessary by any means so frequently to introduce occasional blank verse as in the first, of which there is ground for believing to be the first works of Shakespeare, couplets, and even stanzas, are more frequent than in any of the surviving productions of Marlowe. This circumstance is, perhaps, in part to be accounted for by the fact (as far as we may so call it) that our great poet retained in some of his performances portions of old rhyming dramas, which he altered and adapted to the stage; but in early plays, which are to be looked upon as entirely his own, Shakespeare appears to have deemed rhyme more necessary to satisfy the ear of his auditor than Marlowe held it when he wrote his "Tamburlaine the Great."

As the first employment of blank verse upon the public stage, the Marlowe is a matter of importance, in relation to the history of our more ancient drama, and to the subsequent adoption of that form of composition by Shakespeare, we ought not to dismiss it without affording a single specimen from "Tamburlaine the Great." The following is a portion of a speech by the hero to Zenocrate, when first he meets and saves to her:

"Disdain Zenocrate to live with me, Or you, my lord, to be my followers! Think not thou hast such a treasure more than thou? Not all the gold in Indus's wealthy arms Shall buy the meaneast soldier in my train, Zenocrate, lower than the love of men, Brighter than is the silver Rhodope, Fairer than whitest snow on Scythian hills, Thy person is more worth to Tamburlaine, Than the possession of the Persian crown, Which glorious stars have promised at my birth. A hundred Tartars shall attend on thee, Mounted on steeds swifter than Pegasus: Thy garnish shall be made of M'dian silk, Enrich'd with precious jewels of mine own, Much richer and valourous than Zenocrate's. With milk-white harts upon an ivory sled They shall be drawn amidst the stately plains, And scale the icy mountains' lofty tops. Which with thy beauty will be soon dissolv'd."
TO THE TIME OF

regarded; time, place, and action, are equally set at defiance, and the scene shifts at once to or from Persia, Scythia, Georgia, and Morocco, as best suited the purpose of the poet.

Marlowe was also, most likely, the author of a play in which the Priest of the Sun was prominent, as Greene mentions it with "Cambelaine" in 1588, but no such piece is now known: he, however, wrote "The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Doctor Faustus," "The Massacre at Paris," "The rich Jew of Malta," and an English historical play, called "The troublesome Reign and lamentable Death of Edward the Second," besides adding Nash in "Dido Queen of Carthage," as already mentioned. If they were not all of them a date anterior to any of Shakespeare's original works, they were written by a man who had set the example of the employment of blank-verse upon the public stage, and perhaps of the historical and romantic drama in all its leading features and characteristics. He "beares the Avow'd Name and Title of both these points: the veneration displays, though not perhaps in the same abundance, nearly all the excellences of Shakespeare; and in point of construction, as well as in interest, it bears a strong resemblance to the "Richard the Second" of the great dramatist. It is impossible to read the one without the remembrance of the other, and we cannot have any difficulty in ascribing "Edward the Second" to an anterior period.

The same remark as to date may be made upon the plays which came from the pen of Robert Greene, who died in September, 1592, when Shakespeare was rising into notice, and exciting the jealous envy and bitter hatred of the older and wiser writers of public stages. This jealousy broke out in the part of Greene in, if not before, 1592, (in which year his "Greatsworth of Wit," a posthumous work, was published by his contemporary, Henry Chettle,) when he complained that Shakespeare had "beautified himself" with the feathers of others: he alleged, as we apprehend, to the manner in which Shakespeare had availed himself of the two points of the "Contention between the Houses, York and Lancaster," in the authorship of which there is much reason to suppose Greene had been concerned. The "True Tragedy of Richard III." is a drama of about the same period, which has come down to us in a much more imperfect state, the original manuscript of which was probably lost. It was first printed in 1594, and Shakespeare, finding it in the possession of the company to which he was attached, probably had no scruple in constructing his "Richard the Third" of some of its rude materials. It seems not unlikely that Robert Greene, and perhaps some other popular dramatists of his day, had been engaged upon "The True Tragedy of Richard III." Another of the dramatists who is entitled to be considered a predecessor of Shakespeare was Thomas Lodge. Only one play in which he was unassisted has descended to us, and it bears the title of "The Wounds of Civil War, lively set forth in the True Tragedies of Marius and Scylla." It was not printed until 1594, but the author began to write as early as 1580, and it was very natural to consider his tragedy anterior to the original works of Shakespeare; it was probably written about 1587 or 1588, as a not very successful experiment in blank-verse, in imitation of that style which Marlowe had at once rendered popular.

The same remarks may be made when his pieces came from the pen of John Lyly is entitled to earlier notice than Greene, Lodge, or even Marlowe; and it is possible, as he was ten years older than Shakespeare, that he was a writer before any of them: it does not seem, however, that his dramas were intended for the public stage, but for court-shows or private entertainments. His "Alexander and Campaspe," the best of his productions, was represented at Court, and it was twice printed, in 1584, and again in 1591: it is, like most of this author's productions, in prose; but his "Woman in the Moon" (printed in 1597) is in blank-verse, and the "Maid's Metamorphosis," 1600, (if indeed it be by him,) is in rhyme. As none of these dramas, generally composed in a refined, affected, and artificial style, can be said to have had any material influence upon stage-entertainments before miscellaneous audiences in London, it is unnecessary for our present purpose to say more regarding them.

George Peele was about the same age as Lyly; but his theatrical productions (with the exception of "The Arrangement of Paris," printed in 1584, and written for a courtly play; and the "Arraignment of Henry VIII."") is nearly all of the incidents, having been intended for exhibition at the ordinary theatres. His "Edward the First" he calls a "famous chronicle," and most of the incidents are derived from history: it is, in fact, one of our earliest plays founded upon English annals. It was printed in 1593 and in 1599, but with so many imperfections, that it was impossible to have had any material influence upon the presentation of the state in which it came from the author's pen. The most remarkable feature belonging to it is the unworthy manner in which Peele sacrificed the character of the Queen to his desire to gratify the popular antipathy to the Spaniards: the opening of it is spirited, and affords evidence of the author's talent as a writer of blank-verse. "Battle of Alcazar" may also be termed an historical drama, in which he allowed himself the most extravagant license as to time, incidents, and characters. It perhaps preceded his "Edward the First" in point of date, (though not printed until 1594,) and the principal event it refers to occurred in 1578. "Sir Clymon and Clamydes" is merely a romance, the old form of a country play; and "It Was and Was Not," a spiritual drama, and a great improvement upon older pieces of the same description: Peele here confined himself strictly to the incidents in Holy Writ, and it certainly contains the best specimen of his blank-verse composition. His "Old Wives' Tale," in the shape in which it has reached us, we believe only dated 1596, and it and it would have received little notice but for some remote, and perhaps accidental, resemblance between its story and that of Milton's "Comus."

The "Jeronymo" of Thomas Kyd is to be looked upon as a species of transition play: the date of its composition, on the testimony of Ben Jonson, may be stated to be prior to 1588, just after Marlowe had produced his "Tamblurlaine," and when Kyd hesitated to follow his bold step to the full extent of his progress. "Jeronymo" is therefore partly in blank-verse, and partly in rhyme: the same observation will apply, though not in the same degree, to Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy:" it is in truth a second part of "Jeronymo," the story being continued from the play to the end, in 1595, and with considerable dexterity. The interest in the latter is great, and generally well sustained, and some of the characters are drawn with little art and force. The success of "Jeronymo," doubtless, induced Kyd to write the second part of it immediately; and we need not hesitate in concluding that "The Spanish Tragedy" had been acted before 1590.
Besides Marlowe, Greene, Lodge, Lyly, Peele, and Kyd, there were other dramatists, who may be looked upon as the immediate predecessors of Shakespeare, but few of whose printed works are of an earlier date, as regards composition, than some of those which came from the pen of our great poet. Among these, Thomas Nash was the most distinguished, whose contribution to "Dido," in conjunction with Marlowe, has been before noticed: the portions which came from the pen of Marlowe are, we think, easily to be distinguished from those written by Nash, whose genius does not seem to have been of an imaginative or dramatic, but of a satirical and objurgatory character. Henry Chettle, who was also senior to Shakespeare, has left behind him a tragedy called "Hofman," which was not printed until 1630; and he was engaged with Anthony Munday in producing "The Death of Robert Earl of Huntington," printed in 1601. From Henslowe's Diary we learn that both these pieces were written subsequent to the date when Shakespeare had acquired a high reputation. Munday had been a dramatist as early as 1584, when a rhyming translation by him, under the title of "The Two Italian Gentlemen," came from the press; and in the interval between that year and 1602, he wrote the whole or parts of various plays which have been lost. Robert Wilson ought not to be omitted: he seems to have been a prolific dramatist, but only one comedy by him has survived, under the title of "The Cobbler's Prophecy," and it was printed in 1594. He seems to have been a low comedian, and his "Cobbler's Prophecy" is a piece, the drollery of which must have depended in a great degree upon the performers.

With regard to mechanical facilities for the representation of plays before, and indeed long after, the time of Shakespeare, it may be sufficient to state, that our old public theatres were merely round wooden buildings, open to the sky in the audience part of the house, although the stage was covered by a hanging roof: the spectators stood on the ground in front or at the sides, or were accommodated in boxes round the inner circumference of the edifice, or in galleries at a greater elevation. Our ancient stage was unfurnished with moveable scenery; and tables, chairs, a few boards for a battlemented wall, or a rude structure for a tomb or an altar, seem to have been nearly all the properties it possessed. It was usually hung round with decayed tapestry; and as there was no other mode of conveying the necessary information, the author often provided that the player, on his entrance, should take occasion to mention the place of action. When the business of a piece required that the stage should represent two apartments, the effect was accomplished by a curtain, called a traverse, drawn across it; and a sort of balcony in the rear enabled the writer to represent his characters at a window, on the platform of a castle, or on an elevated terrace.

To this simplicity, and to these deficiencies, we doubtless owe some of the finest passages in our early plays; for it was part of the business of the dramatist to supply the want of such stored canvas by grandeur and luxuriance of description. The ear was thus made the substitute for the eye, and the poet's pen, aided by the auditor's imagination, more than supplied the place of the painter's brush. Moveable scenery was unknown in our public theatres until after the Restoration; and, as has been observed elsewhere, "the introduction of it gives the date to the commencement of the decline of our dramatic poetry."

How far propriety of costume was regarded, we have no sufficient means of deciding; but we apprehend that more attention was paid to it than has been generally supposed, or than was accomplished at a much later and more refined period. It is indubitable, that often in this department no outline was spared: the most costly dresses were purchased, that characters might be consistently habited; and, as a single proof, we may mention, that sometimes more than £20 were given for a cloak, an enormous piece, when it is recollected that money was then five or six times as valuable as at present.

We have thus briefly stated all that seems absolutely required to give the reader a correct notion of the state of the English drama and stage at the period when, according to the best judgment we can form from such evidence as remains to us, Shakespeare advanced to a forward place among the dramatists of the day. As long ago as 1679, Dryden gave currency to the notion, which we have shown to be mistaken, that Shakespeare "created first the stage," and he repeated it in 1692: it is not necessary to the just admiration of that noble dramatist, that we should do injustice to his predecessors or earlier contemporaries: on the contrary, his miraculous powers are best to be estimated by a comparison with his ablest rivals; and if he appear not the greatest when his works are placed beside those of Marlowe, Greene, Peele, or Lodge, however distinguished their rank as dramatists, and however deserved their popularity, we shall be content to think, that for more than two centuries the world has been under a delusion as to his claims. He rose to eminence and he maintained it, amid struggles for equality by men of high genius and varied talents; and with his example ever since before us, no poet of any country, has even approached his excellence. Shakespeare is greatest by a comparison with greatness, or he is nothing.
CHAPTER I.

No Shakespeare advanced or rewarded by Henry VII.—Antiquity of the Shakespeare family in Warwickshire, &c.—Earliest occurrence of the name of Stratford-upon-Avon. —The Trade of John Shakespeare—Richard Shakespeare of Snitterfield, probably father to John Shakespeare, and certainly tenant to Robert Arden, father of John Shakespeare's wife.—Marriage of John Shakespeare and Mary Arden, their circumstances—Purchase of two houses in Stratford by John Shakespeare.—His progress in the corporation.

It has been supposed that some of the paternal ancestors of William Shakespeare were advanced, and rewarded with lands and tenements in Warwickshire, for services rendered to Henry VII. The rolls of that reign have been recently most carefully searched, and the name of Shakespeare, according to any mode of spelling it, does not occur in them.

Many Shakespeares were resident in different parts of Warwickshire, as well as in some of the adjoining counties, at an early date. The register of the Guild of St. Anne of Knolle, or Knowle, beginning in 1407 and ending in 1533, when it was dissolved, contains various repetitions of the name, during the reigns of Henry VI., Edward IV., Richard III., Henry VII., and Henry VIII.; we there find a Thomas Shakespeare of Balsall, or Balsal, Thomas Chaspe and John Shakpeyre of Rowington, Richard Shakspere of Wolfretho, together with Joan, Jane, and William Shakespeare, of places not mentioned: an Isabella Shakespeare is also there stated to have been priora de Wrazalez in the 19th Henry VII. The Shakespeares of Wroxal, of Rowington, and of Balsal, are mentioned by Malone, as well as other persons of the same name at Claverdon and Hampton. He carries back his information regarding the Shakespeares of Warwick no higher than 1602; but a William Shakespeare was drowned in the Avon near Warwick in 1574, a John Shakespeare was resident on the "High Pavement" in 1578, and a Thomas Shakespeare in the same place in 1585.

The earliest date at which we hear of a Shakespeare in the borough of Stratford-on-Avon is 17th June, 1555, when Thomas Siche instituted a proceeding in the court of the bailiff, for the recovery of the sum of £8 from John Shakespeare, who has always been taken to be the father of our great dramatist. Thomas Siche was of Arlescote, or Arscote, in Worcestershire, and in the Latin record of the suit John Shakespeare is called "glover," in English. Taking it for granted, as we have every reason to do, that this John Shakespeare was the father of the poet, the document satisfied Malone that he was a Glover, and not a butcher, as Aubrey had affirmed, nor a dealer in wool, as Rowe had stated. We think that Malone was right, and the testimony is unquestionably more positive and authentic than the traditions to which we have referred.

It deserves remark, that although John Shakespeare is often subsequently mentioned in the records of the corporation of Stratford, no addition ever accompanies his name. We may presume that in 1556, he was established in his business, because on the 30th April of that year he was one of twelve jurors of a court-leet. His name in the list was at first struck through with a pen, but underneath it the word stet was written, probably by the town-clerk. Thus we find him in 1556 acting as a regular trading inhabitant of the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon.

Little doubt can be entertained that he came from Snitterfield, three miles from Stratford; and upon this point we have several new documents before us. It appears from them, that a person of the name of Richard Shakespeare (nowhere before mentioned) was resident at Snitterfield in 1550: he was tenant of a house and land belonging to Robert Arden (or Arden, as the name was anciently spelt, and as it stands in the papers in our hands) of Wilmecote, in the parish of Aston Cantlow. By a conveyance, dated 21st December, 1551, Henry VIII., we find that Robert Arden then became possessed of houses and land in Snitterfield, from Richard Rusby and his wife: from Robert Arden the property descended to his son, and it was part of this estate which was occupied by Richard Shakespeare in 1550. We have no distinct evidence upon the point; but if we suppose Richard Shakespeare of Snitterfield to have been the father of John Shakespeare of Stratford, who married Mary Arden, the youngest of seven daughters of Robert Arden, it will easily and naturally explain the manner in which John Shakespeare became introduced to the family of the Ardens, inasmuch as Richard Shakespeare, the father of John, and the grandfather of William Shakespeare, was one of the tenants of Robert Arden.

No registration of that marriage has been discovered, but we need not hesitate in deciding that the ceremony took place in 1557. Mary Arden and her sister Alicia were certainly unmarried, when they were appointed "executrices" under their father's will, dated 24th November, 1556, and the probability seems to be that they were on that account chosen for the office, in preference to their five married sisters. Joan, the first child of John Shakespeare and his wife Mary, was baptized in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon on the 15th September, 1558, so that we may fix their union towards the close of 1557, about a year after the death of Robert Arden.

What were the circumstances of John Shakespeare at the time of his marriage, we can only conjecture. It has been shown that two years before that event, a claim of £8 was made upon him in the borough court of Stratford, and we must conclude, either that the money was not due and the demand unjust, or that he was unable to pay the debt, and was therefore proceeded against. The issue of the suit is not known; but in the next year he seems to have been established in business as a grocer, for on the 31st of May, 1556, John Shakespeare was admitted a freeman of the glove, a branch of the craft carried on in that part of the kingdom, and, as already mentioned, he certainly served upon the jury of a court-leet in 1556. Therefore, we are, perhaps, justified in thinking that his affairs were sufficiently prosperous to warrant his union with the youngest of seven co-heiresses, who brought him some independent property.

His fortune will be inferred from the weekly allowance of £6 13s. 4d. in money, and a small estate in fee, in the parish of Aston Cantlow, called Asbyes, consisting of a messuage, fifty acres of arable land, six acres of meadow and pasture, and a right of common for all kinds of cattle. Malone knew nothing of Mary Arden's property in Snetterton, to which we have already referred, and, again sworn as a juror upon the court-leet, his fortune was equal to £110 13s. 4d., which seems to us rather an under calculation of its actual value. He also speculated, that at the time of their marriage, that wine, on the 24th October, 1556, John Shakespeare became the owner of the house in Greenhill-street, and the other in Henley-street, which were alienated to him by George Turner and Edward West, respectively; the house in Greenhill-street had a garden and croft attached to it, and the house in Henley-street only a garden; and for each he was to pay to the lord of the manor an annual rent of sixpence. In 1557 he was again sworn as a juror upon the court-leet, and in the spring of the following year he was amerced in the sum of fourpence for not keeping clean the gutter in front of his dwelling. It is a point of little importance, but it is highly probable that John Shakespeare was first admitted a member of the corporation of Stratford in 1557, when he was about one of the assessors of the town; and in September, 1558, he was appointed one of the four constables, his name following those of Humphrey Plymley, Roger Sadler, and John Taylor. He continued constable in 1559, his associates then being John Taylor, William Tyler, and William Smith, and he was besides one of four persons, called affecors, whose duty it was to impose fines upon their fellow-townsmen (such as he had himself paid in 1557) for offences against the byelaws of the borough.

Chapter II.

Death of John Shakespeare's eldest child, Joan.—Two John Shakespeares in Stratford.—Birth and death of John Shakespeare's second child, Margaret.—Birth of William Shakespeare; his birth-day, and the house in which he was born.—The plague in Stratford.—Contributions to the sick and poor by John Shakespeare and others.—John Shakespeare elected alderman, and subsequently bailiff.——Gilbert Shakespeare born.—Another daughter, baptized Joan, born.——Proofs that John Shakespeare could not write.

It was while John Shakespeare executed the duties of constable in 1558, that his eldest child, Joan, was born, having been baptized, as already stated, on the 15th September, of that year; she died in her second year, and as her burial does not appear in the register of Stratford, she was, perhaps, interred at Snetterfield, where Richard Shakespeare, probably the father of John Shakespeare, still resided. In respect to the registers of marriages, baptisms, and deaths, at Stratford, some confusion has been produced by the indisputable fact, that two persons of the name of John Shakespeare, who was also an officer of the other a shoemaker, were living in the town at the same time, and it is not always easy to distinguish between the entries which relate to the one, or to the other.

John Shakespeare was again chosen one of the four affecors of Stratford in 1561, and the Shakespeare Society is in possession of the original presentation made by these officers on the 4th May in that year, the name of the father of our great dramatist coming last, after those of Henry Blyddil, Lewis up William, and William Mynske. In September following the date of this report John Shakespeare was elected one of the chamberlains of the borough, a very responsible post, in which he remained.

His second child, Margaret, or Margareta (as the name stands in the register), was baptized on the 2nd December, 1563, while he continued chamberlain. She was buried on 30th April, 1563.

The greatest event, perhaps, in the literary history of the world occurred a year afterwards—William Shakespeare was born. The day of his birth cannot be fixed with absolute certainty, but he was baptized on the 26th April, 1564, and the memorandum in the register is precisely in the following form:

So that whoever kept the book (in all probability the clerk) either committed a common clerical error, or was no great proficient in the rules of grammar. It seems most likely that our great dramatist had been brought into the world only three days before he was baptized, as it was then the custom to carry infants very early to the font. A house is still pointed out by tradition, in Henley-street, as that in which William Shakespeare first saw the light. It is stated, however, that his father was the owner of two copy-hold dwellings in Henley-street and Greenhill-street, and we may, perhaps, conclude that the birth took place in the former. John and Mary Shakespeare having previously lost two girls, Joan and Margaret, William was at this time the only child of his parents. A malignant fever, denominated the plague, broke out at Stratford while William Shakespeare was in extreme infancy: he was not two months old when it made its appearance, having been brought from London, where, according to Stow, (Annales, p. 1119, edit. 1615,) it raged with great violence throughout the year 1563, and did not so far abate that term which could be kept, as usual at Westminster, until March 1564. It was most fatal at Stratford between June and December, 1564, and Malone calculated that it carried off in that interval more than a seventh part of the whole population, consisting of about 1,400 inhabitants. It does not appear that it reached any member of the immediate family of John Shakespeare, and it is not at all unlikely that he avoided its ravages by quitting Stratford for Snetterfield, where he owned some property in right of his wife, and where perhaps his father was still living as tenant to Alexander Webbe, who, in 1569, he obtained a lease for forty years from his relative, the widow Agnes Arden, of the message in which Richard Shakespeare resided.

In order to show that John Shakespeare was at this date in moderate, and probably comfortable, thought in affluent circumstances, Malone adduced a piece of evidence derived from the records of Stratford: it consists of the names of persons in the borough who, in this commemoration of the plague, contributed various sums to the relief of the poor. The donations varied between 7s. 4d. (given by only one individual of the name of Richard Symmes) and 6d.; and the sum against the name of John Shakespeare is 1s. It is to be recollected that at this date he was not an alderman; and of twenty-four persons enumerated, there is no name, while six gave less: the bailiff contributed 3s. 4d., and the head alderman 2s. 8d., while ten more put down either 2s. 6d. or 2s. each, and a person of the name of Botto 4s. These subscriptions were raised on the 30th of August, but on the 6th of September a further sum seems to have been required, and the bailiff and six aldermen gave 1s. each. The bailiff, the head alderman, and four others 6d. each: only one member of the corporation, Robert Bratt, contributed 4d. We are, we think, warranted in concluding, that in 1564 John Shakespeare was an industrious and thriving tradesman.

He continued steadily to advance in rank and influence in the corporation, and was elected one of the fourteen aldermen of Stratford on the 4th July, 1566; but he did not take the usual oaths until the 12th of September following. The bailiff of the year was Richard Hill, a woollen-draper; and the father of our presentee was the occupant of that situation rather more than three years afterwards, when his son William was about fourteen years of age. In the middle of July, John Shakespeare was bailiff of Stratford-upon-Avon from Michaelmas 1568, to Michaelmas of 1569, the autumn being the customary period of election. In the mean time his wife had brought him another son, who was christened Gilbert, on 13th October, 1566.

Joan seems to have been a favorite name with the Shakespeare family. Joan Shakespeare is mentioned in the records of the guild of Knovle, in the reign of Henry VIII.; and John and Mary Shakespeare christened their first child, which died an infant, Joan. A third daughter was born to them while John Shakespeare was bailiff, and her they also baptized Joan, on 15th April, 1569.

We have now traced John Shakespeare through various offices in the borough of Stratford, until he reached the highest distinction which it was in the power of his fellow-townsmen to bestowed: he was bailiff, and ex-officio a magistrate.

Two new documents have recently come to light which belong to this period, and which show, beyond all dispute, that although John Shakespeare was not rich, he was as a bailiff of Stratford, with his name in the commission of the peace, he was not able to write. Malone referred to the records of the borough to establish that in 1565, when John Wheler was called upon by nineteen aldermen and burgesses to undertake the duties of bailiff, John Shakespeare was among twelve other markmen, including George Whately, the then bailiff, and Roger Sadler, the "head alderman." There was, therefore, nothing remarkable in this inability to write; and if there were any doubt upon this point, (it being a little ambiguous whether the signature referred to the name of Thomas Dyuxum, or of John Shakespeare,) it can never be entertained hereafter, because the Shakespeare Society has been put in possession of two warrants, granted by John Shakespeare as bailiff of Stratford, the one dated the 3d, and the other the 9th December, 11. Elizabeth, for the capture of John Bail and Richard Waller, on account of debts severally due from them, to both of which his mark only is appended.

CHAPTER III.

The grant of arms to John Shakespeare considered.—Sir W. D. Sick's conduct.—Ingenious methods of impressing a man.—The death of John Wheler, Ann. Rich.—Richard Shakespeare born in 1574, and named, perhaps, after his grandfather.—John Shakespeare's purchases of two freethold houses in Stratford—Becomes in his pecuniary affairs, etc.—See of John Shakespeare's and his wife's share of property at Snitterfield, to Robert Wobbe.—Birth of Edmund Shakespeare in 1589.

Although John Shakespeare could not write his name, it has generally been stated, and believed, that while his mark filled the office of bailiff he obtained a grant of arms from Clarenceux Cooke, who was in office from 1566 to 1592. We have considerable doubt of this fact, partly arising out of the circumstance, that although Cooke's original book, in which he entered the arms he granted, has been preserved in the Heralds' College, yet we have not been able to procure it in nos. of any such concession to John Shakespeare. It is true that this book might not contain memoranda of all the arms Cooke had granted, but it is a circumstance deserving notice, that in this case such an entry is wanting. A confirmation of these arms was made in 1596, but we cannot help thinking, with Malone, that this instrument recorded in the personal possession of the owner, who had then actually purchased, or was on the eve of purchasing, New Place (or "the great house," as it was also called) in Stratford. The confirmation states, that the heralds had been "by credible report informed," that the parents and late antecessors of John Shakespeare were for their valiant and faithful services advanced and rewarded with the most prudent princes, Henry the Seventh; but, as has been before stated, on examining the rolls of that reign, we can discover no trace of advancement or reward to any person of the name of Shakespeare. It is true that the Ardens, or Arderns, were so "advanced and rewarded," and these, though not strictly the "parents," were certainly the "antecessors" of William Shakespeare. In 1599, an exemplification of arms was procured, and in this document it is asserted that the "great grandfather" of John Shakespeare had been "advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements" by Henry VII. Our poet's "great grandfather," by the mother's side, was so "advanced and rewarded," and we know that he did faithfully and approved service to the most prudent princes.

That William Shakespeare could not have procured a grant of arms for himself in 1596 is highly probable, from the fact that he was an actor, (a profession then much looked down upon) and not of a rank in life to entitle him to it: i.e., therefore, may have very fairly and properly put forward his father's name and claims as having been bailiff of Stratford, and a "justice of peace," and coupled that fact with the deserts and rewards of the Ardens under Henry VII., one of whom was his maternal "great grandfather," and all of whom, by reason of the marriage of his father with an Arden, were his "antecessors."
We are persuaded that when William Shakespeare applied to the office in 1596, Garter of that day, or his assistants, made a confusion between the "grandfather" and the "father" of John, the father of William Shakespeare. What is stated, both in the confirmation and exemplification, as to parentage and descent, is true as regards William Shakespeare, but erroneous as regards John Shakespeare.

It appears that Sir William Dethick, garter-king-at-arms in 1596 and 1599, was subsequently called to account for having granted coats to persons whose stations in society and circumstances did not give them no right to the distinction. The case of John Shakespeare was one of those complained of in this respect; and had Clarenceux Cooke really put his name in 1568-9 to any such patent as it was asserted, had been exhibited to Sir William Dethick, a copy of it, or some record of it, would probably have been sequently wanted in the office of arms in 1596; and the production of that alone, proving that he had merely acted on the precedent of Clarenceux Cooke, would, to a considerable extent at least, have justified Sir William Dethick. No copy, nor record, was however so produced, but merely a memorandum at the foot of the confirmation of 1596, that an original grant was desired, or otherwise, any memorandum may have been added when Sir William Dethick's conduct was called in question; and certain other statements are made at the bottom of the same document, which would be material to Garter's vindication, but which are not borne out by facts. One of these statements is, that John Shakespeare, in 1596, was warder or constable of Stratford, and was regarded him, but a truth probably as regarded his son.

It is really a matter of little moment whether John Shakespeare did or did not obtain a grant of arms while he was bailiff of Stratford; but we are strongly inclined to think that he did not, and that the assertion that he did, and that he was worth £500 in 1596, originated with Sir W. Dethick, when he subsequendy wanted to make out his own vindication from the charge of having concealed arms to various persons without due caution and inquiry.

In 1570, when William Shakespeare was in his seventh year, his father was in possession of a field called Ingon, or Inington, meadow, within two miles of Stratford, which he held under William Clopton. Whether or not a year later he parted it, because the instrument proving his tenancy is dated 11th June, 1581, and only states the fact, that on 11th December, 1570, it was in his occupation. The annual payment for it was £8, a considerable sum, certainly, for that time; but if there had been a "good dwelling-house and orchard" upon the field, as Malone conjectured, that circumstance would, in all probability, have been mentioned. We may presume that John Shakespeare employed it for agricultural purposes, but upon this point we are without information. That he lived in Stratford at the time we infer from the fact, that on the 28th September, 1571, a second daughter, named Anne, was baptized at the parish-church. He had thus four, and possibly five children, but of the girls, William, Gilbert, Joan, and Anne, but the last died at an early age, having been buried on 4th April, 1579. On the baptism of his daughter Anne, he was, for the first time, called "Magister Shakespeare" in the Latin entry in the Register, a distinction he seems to have acquired by having served the office of bailiff two years without. The same observation will apply to the registration of his fifth child, Richard, who was baptized on 11th March, 1573-4, as the son of "Mr. John Shakespeare." Richard Shakespeare may have been named after his grandfather of Stratfield, who perhaps was sponsor on the occasion.

The increase of John Shakespeare's family seems, for some time, to have been accompanied by an increase of his means, and in 1574 he gave Edmund and Emma Hall £240 for two freehold houses, with gardens and orchards, in Henley-street. It will not be forgotten that he was already owner of a tenure in the same street, which he had bought of Edward West, in 1556, before his marriage with Mary Arden. To one of the two last-purchased dwellings John Shakespeare is supposed to have removed his family; but, for ought we know, he had lived from the time of his marriage, and continued to live in 1574, in the house in Henley-street, which had been allotted to him eighteen years before. It does not appear that he had ever parted with West's house, so that in 1574 he was the owner of three houses in Henley-street.

It is, we apprehend, indisputable that soon after this date the tide of Shakespeare's affairs began to turn, and that he experienced disappointments which seriously affected his pecuniary circumstances. At a borough hall on the 29th January, 1578, it was ordered that every alderman in Stratford should pay 6s. 8d., and every burgess 3s. 4d. toward "the furniture of three pikemen, two billmen, and one archer." Now, although John Shakespeare was not only an alderman, but had been chosen "head alderman" in 1576, he was not included, as if he had been merely a burgess. In November, 1578, it was required that every alderman should "pay weekly to the relief of the poor 4d.," John Shakespeare and Robert Bratt were excepted. Several other facts tend strongly to the conclusion that in 1578 John Shakespeare was distressed for money: he owed a baker of the name of Roger Saddler £60, had Edmund Lambert, and a person of the name of Cornishe, had become security; Saddler died, and in his will, dated 14th November, 1578, he included the following among the debts due to him:— "Item of Edmund Lambert and Cornishe, for the debt of Mr. John Shakesper, £5."

And so severe the pressure of his liabilities about this date seems to have been, that in 1579 he agreed with his wife's interest in two tenements in Snitterfield to Robert Webbe for the small sum of £4.

It has been supposed that he might not at this time reside in Stratford-upon-Avon, and that for this reason, he only contributed 3s. 4d. for pikemen, &c., and nothing to the poor of the town, in 1578. This notion is refuted by the fact, that in the deed for the sale of his wife's property in Snitterfield to Webbe, in 1579, he is called "John Shakespere of Stratford-upon-Avon," and in the bond for the performance of covenants, "John Shakespere de Stratford-upon-Avon, in comitatu. Warwick." Another point requiring notice in connexion with these two newly-discovered facts is, that in both John Shakespere is termed "yeoman," and not "gentleman"; perhaps in 1579, although he continued to occupy a house in Stratford, he had relinquished his original trade, and having embarked in agricultural pursuits, to which he had not been educated, had been unsuccessful. This may appear not an unnatural mode of accounting for some of his difficulties. In the midst of them, in the spring of 1580, another son, named Edmund, was born, and christened at the parish church.
CHAPTER IV.

Education of William Shakespeare: probably at the free-school of Stratford.—At what time, and under what circumstances, he left school.—Possibly an assistant in the school, and afterwards in an attorney's office.—His handwriting.—His marriage with Anne Hathaway.—The preliminary bond given by Fulke Sandells and John Richardson.—Birth of Susanna, the first child of William Shakespeare and his wife Anne, in 1583.—Shakespeare's opinion on the marriage of persons of disproportionate age.—His domestic circumstances.

At the period of the sale of their Snitterfield property by his father and mother, William Shakespeare was in his sixteenth year, and was probably at school, but his parents had the opportunity of conveying to him the instruction which they deemed necessary. That his father and mother could give him no instruction is quite certain from the fact that neither of them could write; but this very deficiency might render them more desirous that their eldest son, at least, if not their children in general, should receive the best education circumstances would allow. The five grammar-school of Stratford afforded an opportunity of which, it is not unlikely, the parents of William Shakespeare availed themselves.

As we are ignorant of the time when he went to school, we are also in the dark as to the period when he left it. Rowe, indeed, has told us that the poverty of John Shakespeare, and the necessity of employing his sons shortly after reaching an early age, to withdraw him from the place of instruction. Such may have been the case; but, in considering the question, we must not leave out of view the fact, that the education of the son of a member of the corporation would cost nothing; so that, if the boy were removed from school at the period of his father's knowedgment, the expense of continuing his studies there could not have entered into the calculation: he must have been taken away, as Rowe states, in order to aid his father in the maintenance of his family.

Aubrey has asserted positively, in his MSS., in the Ashmolean Museum, that "in his younger years Shakespeare had been a schoolmaster in the country. The following characters are aware that the speculation has been hazarded, that being a young man of abilities, and rapid in the acquisition of knowledge, he had been employed by Jenkins (the master of the free grammar-school from 1577 to 1580, if not for a longer period) to aid him in the instruction of the junior boys."

It is not improbable that Shakespeare, in thinking that if he quit the school he would be out of employment, the expense of continuing his studies there could not have entered into the calculation: he must have been taken away, as Rowe states, in order to aid his father in the maintenance of his family.

We may presume that, if so employed, he was paid something for his services; for, if he were to earn nothing, his father could have had no other motive for taking him from school. That he wrote a good hand we are perfectly sure, not only from the extant specimens of his signature, but in "Hamlet," (act v. sc. 2) he throws upon such as affected to write illegibly:

"I once did hold it, as our statutes do,
A business to write fair."

 Excepting by mere tradition, we hear not a syllable regarding William Shakespeare from the time of his birth until he had considerably passed his eighteenth year, and then we suddenly come to one of the most important events of his life, established upon irrefragable testimony: we find that his marriage with Anne Hathaway, which could not have taken place before the 28th of November, 1582, because on that day two persons, named Fulke Sandells and John Richardson, entered into a preliminary bond, in the penalty of £40 to be forfeited to the bishop of the diocese of Worcester, if it were thereafter found that there existed any lawful impediment to the solemnization of marriage between William Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway, of Stratford. It is not known at what church the ceremony was performed, but certainly not at Stratford-upon-Avon, to which both the parties belonged, where the bondsmen resided, and where it might be expected that it would have been registered. The object of the bond was to confirm such a marriage, as from the bishop of Worcester as would authorize a clergymen to unite the bride and groom after only a single publication of the banns; and it is not to be concealed, or denied, that the whole proceeding seems to indicate haste and secrecy. However, it ought not to escape notice that the seal used when the bond was executed, although dam, has been identified with that of R. H., as if it had belonged to R. Hathaway, the father of the bride, and had been used on the occasion with his consent.

Considering all the circumstances, there might be good reasons why the father of Anne Hathaway should concur in the alliance, independently of any personal desire he entertained of a son-in-law. The first child of William and Anne Shakespeare was christened Susanna on 26th of May, 1583. Anne was between seven and eight years older than her young husband, and several passages in Shakespeare's plays have been pointed out by Malone, and repeated by other biographers, which seem to print directly at the evils resulting from unions in which the parties were "aged in respect of years." The most remarkable of these is certainly the well-known speech of the Duke to Viola, in "Twelfth-Night," (act ii. sc. 4) where he says,

"Let still the woman take
An elder than herself: so wins she to him;
So sways she in her husband's respect.
One love, one heart, between two souls united.
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unform,
More Jonging, wandering, sooner lost and worn,
Than women's are."

Whether these lines did or did not originate in the author's reflections upon his own marriage, they are so applicable to his own case, that it seems impossible he should have written them without recalling the circumstances attending his hasty union, and the disparity of years between himself and his wife. The balance of such imperfect information as remains to us, leads us to the opinion that Shakespear was not a very happy married man. The disparity in age between himself and his wife from the first was such, that she could not "sway level in her husband's heart;" and this difference, for a certain time at least, became more apparent as they advanced in years. To this may be added the fact (by whatever circumstances may have been occasionated which we shall consider presently) that Shakespeare quitted his home at Stratford a very few years after he had become a husband and a father, and that although he revisited his native town frequently, and ultimately settled there with his family, there is no proof that his wife ever returned with him to London, or that he ever dined with him during any of his lengthened sojourns in the meropolits; that she may have done so is very possible: and in 1609 he certainly paid a weekly poor-rate to an amount that may indicate that he occupied a house in Southwark capable of receiving his family, but we are here, as upon many other points, compelled to deplore the absence of distinct fact money, of view of the plentiful and ambiguous indications to be gleaned from Shakespeare's Sonnets, observing merely, that they contain little to show that he was of a domestic turn, or that he found any great enjoyment in the society of his wife. That such may have been the fact we do not pretend to deny, and we willingly believe them; but such favorable evidence upon the point has been lost: all we venture to advance on a question of so much difficulty and delicacy is, that what remains to us is not, as far as it goes, perfectly satisfactory.

CHAPTER V.

Shakespeare's twins, Hamnet and Judith, born in 1585.—
His departure from Stratford.—The question of deer-stalking by Sir Thomas Lucy considered.—Authorities for the story.—Balloed by Shakespeare against Sir Thomas Lucy.—Other inducements to Shakespeare to quit Stratford.—Companies of players encouraged by the Corporation.—Several of Shakespeare's fellow-actors from Stratford.—The Princely Pleasures of Kenilworth.

In the beginning of 1585 Shakespeare's wife produced him twins—a boy and a girl—and they were baptized at Stratford Church on the 2d of February, in that year, by the Christian names of Hamnet and Judith. Shakespeare's wife brought him no more children, although in 1585 she was only thirty years old.

That Shakespeare quitted his home and his fami-ily not long afterwards has not been disputed, but no ground for this step has ever been derived from domestic disagreements. It has been alleged that he was obliged to leave Stratford on account of a scrape in which he had involved himself by stealing, or assisting in stealing, deer from the grounds of Charlecot, the property of Sir Thomas Lucy, about five miles from the borough. As Rowe is the oldest authority in print for this story, we give it in his own words: "He had, by a misfortune common e enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company;
and among them some, that made a frequent practice of deer-stealing, engaged him more than once in robbing the park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecot, near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat too severely; and, in order to revenge that ill-use, he made a bull-dog upon him. And though this, probably the first essay of his poetry, be lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter, that it redicted the prosecution against him to that degree, that he was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire for some time, and shelter him self in London."

We have said that Rowe is the oldest printed source of this anecdote, his "Life of Shakespeare" has been published in 1709; but Malone produced a manuscript of uncertain date, anterior, however, to the publication of Rowe's "Life," which gives the incident some confirmation.

In reflecting upon the general probability or improbability of this important incident in Shakespeare's life, it is not to be forgotten, as Malone remarks, "the peremptory restraining, at the period when it was in place, to any means an uncommon offence;" that it is referred to by several authors, and punished by more than one statute. Neither was it considered to include any moral stain, but was often committed by young men, by way of frolic, for the purpose of furnishing a feast, and not with any view to sate or enliven. If Shakespeare ever run into such an induction, (and we own that we cannot entirely discredit the story) he did no more than many of his contemporaries; and one of the ablest, most learned, and bitterest enemies of theatrical performances, who wrote just before the close of the sixteenth century, expressly mentions deer-stealing as a venial crime of which unruly and misguided youth was in the habit of indulging, and he connected it very freely with carousing in taverns and robbing orchards.

It is very possible, therefore, that the main offence against Sir Thomas Lucy was, not stealing his deer, but writing the ballad, and sticking it on his gate;
and for this Shakespeare may have been so "severely prosecuted" by Sir Thomas Lucy, as to render it expedient for him to abandon Stratford "for suns-time."* Sir Thomas Lucy died in 1600, and the mention of deer-stealing, and of the "dozen white luces" by Slender, and of "the dozen white lowes" by Sir Hugh Evans, in the opening of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," seems too obvious to be mistaken, and leads us to the conviction that the comedy was written before the demise of Sir Thomas Lucy, whose indignation Shakespeare had incurred.

The question whether he did or did not quit Stratford for the metropolis on this account, is one of much importance in the poet's history, but it is one also upon which we shall, in all probability, never arrive at certainty. Our opinion is that the traditions related by Rowe, and mentioned in Fulman's and Oldys' MSS. (which do not seem to have originated in the same source) may be founded upon an actual occurrence; but, at the same time, it is very possible that that alone did not determine Shakespeare's line of conduct. His residence in Stratford may have been rendered inconvenient by the near neighborhood of such a hostile and powerful neighbor; and the ground of his departure has not have the quitted the town, had not other circumstances combined to produce such a decision.

* Oldys preserved a stanza of this satirical effusion, which he had received from a person of the name of Wilkes: it runs thus:

"A parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scare-crowe, at London an ass;
If lowes is Lucy, and volk an incalle it,
Then Lucy is lowe, whatever behalfe it.
He thinks himself great,
Yet an ass in his state.
We allow by his ears but with asses to mate.
If Lucy is lowe, as some volke miscall it,
Sir Thomas Lucy, whatever befall it, we hold it.
What is called a "complete copy of the verses," contained in
"Malone's Shakespeare, by Boswell," is evidently not genuine.
What those circumstances might be is our business now to inquire.

Audrey, who was a very curious and minute investigator, although undoubtedly too credulous, says nothing about deer-stalking, but he tells us that Shakespeare was "inclined naturally to poetry and acting," and to this inclination he attributes his journey to London at an early age. That this youthful propensity existed there can be no dispute, and it is easy to trace how it may have been promoted and strengthened. The corporation of Stratford seem to have given great encouragement to companies of players arriving there. We know from various authorities that when itinerant actors came to this considerable town, it was their custom to wait upon the mayor, bailiff, or other head of the corporation, in order to ask permission to perform, either in the town-hall, if that could be granted to them, or elsewhere. It so happens that the earliest record of the representation of any plays in Stratford-upon-Avon, is dated in the year when John Shakespeare was bailiff: the precise season is not ascertainable, but it was in 1569, when "the Queen's Players" (meaning probably, at this date, one company of her "Interlude Players," retained under that name by her father and grandfather) received 9s. out of the corporate funds, while the Earl of Worcester's servants in the same year obtained only 12d. Various companies are also known to have exhibited at Stratford, under the encouragement of the corporation, at intervals from 1573 to 1587.

It is to be remarked that several of the players, with whom Shakespeare was afterwards connected, appear to have come originally from Stratford or its neighborhood. It is very distinctly ascertained that James Burbage, the father of the celebrated Richard Burbage, (the representative of many of the heroes in the works of our great dramatist,) and one of the original builders of the Blackfriars theatre, migrated to London from that part of the kingdom, and the name of Thomas Greene, who was indisputably from Stratford, will be familiar to all who are acquainted with the detailed history of our stage at that period. Maury supposed that Shakespeare might have been introduced to Shakespeare to the theatre, and at an early date he was certainly a member of the company called the Lord Chamberlain's servants. If any introduction to the Lord Chamberlain's servants had been necessary for Shakespeare, he could easily have procured it from several other quarters.

The frequent performances of various associations of actors in Stratford and elsewhere, and the taste for theatres thereby produced, may have had the effect of drawing not a few young men in Warwickshire from their homes, to follow the attractive and profitable profession; and such may have been the case with Shakespeare, without supposing that domestic differences, arising out of disparity of age or any other cause, influenced his determination, or that he was driven away by the terrors of Sir Thomas Lucy.

It has been matter of speculation whether Shakespeare visited Kenilworth Castle, when Queen Elizabeth was entertained there by the Earl of Leicester in 1575, and whether the pomp and pageantry he then witnessed did not give a color to his mind, and a direction to his pursuits. Considering that he was then only in his eleventh year, we own, that we cannot believe he found his way into that gorgeous and august assembly. Kenilworth was fourteen miles distant: John Shakespeare, although he had been bailiff, and was still head-alderman of Stratford, was not a man of sufficient rank and importance to be there in any official capacity; and he probably had not means to equip himself and his son for such an exhibition. That Shakespeare heard of the existing preparations, and of the magnificent entertainment, there can be no doubt: it was an event calculated to create a strong sensation in the whole of that part of the country; and if the celebrated passage in "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" (act ii., scene 1), had any reference to it, it did not require that Shakespeare should have been present in order to have written it, especially when, if not then, he had Gassoebye's "Princeely Pleasures of Kenilworth," and Lanancham's "Letters," to assist his memory.

CHAPTER VI.

John Shakespeare removed from his situation as alderman of Stratford, and his possible connection with William Shakespeare's departure for London in the latter end of 1588.—William Shakespeare, a share in the Blackfriars Theatre in 1588.—Complaint against actors. Companies silenced.—Certificate of the sheriffs in the Blackfriars.—Shakespeare, in all probability, a good actor: our older dramatic actor.—Shakespeare's earliest compositions for the stage.—His "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece" probably written before he came to London.

In reference to the period when our great dramatist abandoned his native town for London, we think that sufficient attention has not been paid to an important incident in the life of his father. John Shakespeare was superseded as alderman of Stratford in the autumn of 1586. On the 6th September, 1586, the following memorandum was made in the register by the town clerk:

"At this hall William Smythe and Richard Courte are chosen to be aldermen, in the place of John Wheler, and John Shakespeare; for that Mr. Wheler doth desire to be put out of the company, and Mr. Shakespeare doth not come to the halls, when they be warned, nor hath not done of a long tyme."

According to this note, it was Wheler's wish to be removed from his situation of alderman, and had such also been the desire of John Shakespeare, we should, no doubt, have been told so: therefore, we must presume that he was not a consenting, or at all events not a willing, party to this proceeding; but an inspection of the ancient books of the borough proves that he had ceased to attend the halls, when they were "warned" or summoned, from the year 1579 downward. This date of 1579 is the more important, because it was the same year in which John Shakespeare was so distressed for money, that he disposed of his wife's small property in Snitterfield for £4.

We have thus additional reasons for thinking that the unprosperous state of John Shakespeare's pecuniary circumstances had induced him to abstain from attending the ordinary meetings of the corporation, and finally led to his removal from the office of alderman. What connection this last event may have had with William Shakespeare's determination to quit Stratford cannot be known, but in point of date the events seem to have been coincident.

Malone supposed that "our great play's right Stratford" about the year 1586 or 1587," but it seems more likely that the event happened in the former, than in the latter year. His twins, Hamnet and Judith, were baptized, as we have shown, early in February, 1585, and his father did not cease to be an alderman until about a year and seven months.
afterward. The fact, that his son had become a player, may have had something to do with the lower rank his brethren of the bench thought he ought to hold in the corporation; or the resolution of the son to abandon his home may have arisen out of the degradation of the father in his native town; but we cannot help thinking that the two circumstances were in some way connected, and that the period of the departure of William Shakespeare, to seek his fortune in a company of players in the metropolis, may be fixed in the latter end of 1586.

Nevertheless, we do not hear of him in London until three years afterward, when we find him a sharer in the Blackfriars theatre. It had been constructed upon part of the site of the Lord Admiral's, because it was beyond the jurisdiction of the lord mayor and corporation of London, who had always evinced decided hostility to dramatic representations. The undertaking seems to have been prosperous from the commencement; and in 1589 no fewer than sixteen performers were sharers in it, including besides Shakespeare and Burbage, Thomas Truxtun, John Fordyce, Thomas Toole, and Nicholas Toole, also a Warwickshire man: the association was probably thus numerous on account of the flourishing state of the concern, many being desirous to obtain an interest in its receipts. In 1589 some general complaints seem to have been made, that improper matters were introduced into plays; and two years afterward, the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange, had been summoned before the lord mayor, and ordered to desist from all performances. The silencing of other associations would probably have been beneficial to that exhibiting at Blackfriars, and if no proceeding of any kind had been instituted against James Burbage and his partners, we may presume that they would have continued to reap, as the Blackfriars were, if not in the full, yet in the augmented harvest. We are led to infer, however, that they also apprehended, and experienced, some measure of restraint, and feeling conscious that they had given no just ground of offence, they transmitted to the privy council a sort of certificate of their good conduct, asserting that they had never introduced into their representations of state and religion, and that no complaint of that kind had been preferred against them. This certificate passed into the hands of Lord Ellesmere, then attorney-general, and it has been preserved among his papers.

In this document we see the important fact, as regards the biography of Shakespeare, that in 1589 he was, not only an actor, but a sharer in the undertaking at Blackfriars; and whatever inference may be drawn from it, we find that his name, following eleven others, precedes those of Kempe, Johnson, Goodale, and Armin. The situation in the list which the name of Shakespeare occupies may seem to show that, even in 1589, he was a person of considerable importance in relation to the success of the stage and to the theatre. In November, 1589, he was in the middle of his twenty-sixth year, and in the full strength, if not in the highest maturity, of his mental and bodily powers.

We have no hesitation in believing that he originally came to London, in order to obtain his livelihood by the stage, and with no other view. Aubrey is of the opinion that he was "inclined naturally to poetry and acting" and the poverty of his father, and the difficulty of obtaining profitable employment in the country for the maintenance of his family, without other motives, may have induced him readily to give way to that inclination. Aubrey, who had probably taken due means to inform himself, adds, that "he did act exceedingly well;" and we are convinced that the opinion, founded chiefly upon a statement by Rowe, that Shakespeare was a very moderate performer, is erroneous. It seems likely that for two or three years he employed himself chiefly in the more active duties of the profession he had chosen; and Peioe, who was a very practised and popular playwright, considerably older than Shakespeare, was a member of the company, without saying anything of Wadeson, regarding whom we know nothing but that at a subsequent date he was one of Henslowe's dramatists; or of Armin, then only just coming forward as a comic performer. While Peele remained a member of the company of the Blackfriars, he did not take upon himself service as a dramatist; and, we may have been more frequently called upon to employ his pen, and then his value in that department becoming clearly understood, he was less frequently a performer.

One of the original shareholders of the company to which he belonged consisted in 1589, (besides the usual proportion of "hired men," who only took inferior characters) there would be more than a sufficient number for the representation of most plays, without the assistance of Shakespeare. He was, doubtless, soon basily and profitably engaged as a dramatist; and this remark on the rareness of his original service as a dramatist may materially have interfered with his exertions as an actor; but afterwards, when Peele, about 1590, had joined a rival establishment, he may have been more frequently called upon to produce his pen, and the time that he devoted to the stage will of course apply more strongly in his after-life, when he produced one or more dramas every year.

His instructions to the players in "Hamlet" have often been noticed, as establishing that he was admirably acquainted with the theory of the art, and if, as Rowe asserts, he only took the sort of the Ghost in this tragedy, we are to re-collect that even if he had considered himself competent to it, the study of such a character as Hamlet, (the longest on the stage as it is now acted, and still longer as it was originally written), must have consumed more time than he could well afford to bestow upon it, especially when we call to mind that there was a considerable number of actors of whom he had hitherto represented most of the heroes, and whose excellence was as undoubtedly, as his popularity was extraordinary. To Richard Burbage was therefore assigned the arduous character of the Prince, while the author took the brief, but important part of the Ghost, which required person, deportment, judgment, and voice, with a delivery distinct, solemn, and impressive. All the elements of a great actor were needed for the full performance of "the buried majesty of Denmark." It may be observed, in passing, that at the period of our drama, such as it existed in the hands of Shakespeare's immediate predecessors, authors were most commonly actors also. Such was the case with Greene, Marlowe, Lodge, Peele, and others: the same practice prevailed with some of their successors, Ben Jonson, Heywood, Webster, Field, &c.; but at a somewhat later date dramatists do not usually appear to have trodden the stage.

It is impossible to determine, almost impossible to guess, what Shakespeare had or had not written in 1589. That he had chiefly employed his pen in the revival, alteration, and improvement of existing dramas we are strongly disposed to believe, but that...

he had not ventured upon original composition it would be much too bold to assert. "The Comedy of Errors," and the three parts of "Henry VI." we take to be pieces, which, having been first written by an inferior dramatist, were heightened and amended by Shakespeare, perhaps about the date of which we are now speaking, and "Love's Labor's Lost," or "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," may have been original compositions brought upon the stage prior to 1590. We also consider it more than probable that "Titus Andronicus" belongs even to an earlier period; but we feel satisfied, that although Shakespeare had by this time given clear indications of powers superior to those of any of his rivals, he could not have written any of his greater works until some years afterwards. With regard to productions unconnected with the stage, there are several pieces among his scattered poems, and some of his sonnets, that indisputably belong to an earlier part of his life. A young man, so gifted, would not, and could not, wait until he was five or six and twenty before he made considerable and most successful attempts at poetic composition, much more may we safely assume that "Venus and Adonis," was in being anterior to Shakespeare's quitting Stratford. It bears all the marks of youthful vigor, of strong passion, of luxuriant imagination, together with a force and originality of expression which betoken the first efforts of a great mind, not always well regulated in its taste: it seems to have been written in the open air of a fine country like Warwickshire, with all the freshness of the recent impression of natural objects; and we will go so far as to say, that we do not think even Shakespeare himself could have produced it, in the form it bears, after he had reached the age of forty. It was quite new in its class, being founded upon no model either ancient or modern; nothing like it had been attempted before, and nothing comparable to it was produced afterwards. Thus in 1593 he might call it, in the dedication to Lord Southampton, "the first fruit of his invention," not merely because it was the first printed, but because it was the first written of his productions.

The information we now possess enables us at once to correct the idea that Malone elaborately argued, that Shakespeare's earliest employment at a theatre was holding the horses of noblemen and gentlemen who visited it, and that he had under him a number of lads who were known as "Shakespeare's boys." Shiel's, in his "Lives of the Poets," (published in 1753 in the name of Cibber,) was the first to give currency to this idle invention; it was repeated by Dr. Johnson, and has often been reiterated since; and we should hardly have thought it worth notice now, if it had not found a place in many modern accounts of our great dramatist. The company to which he attached himself had not frequently performed in Stratford, and at that date the Queen's Players and the Lord Chamberlain's servants seem sometimes to have been engaged in the provinces, although the difference was well understood in London; some of the chief members of it had come from his own part of the country, and even from the very town in which he was born; and he was not so low in station, nor so destitute of means and friends, as to have been reduced to such an extremity.

Besides having written "Venus and Adonis" before he came to London, Shakespeare may also have composed its counterpart, "Lucrece," which first appeared in print in 1594. It is in a different stanza, and in some respects in a different style; and after he joined the Blackfriars company, the author may possibly have added parts, (such, for instance, as the long and minute description of the siege of Troy in the tapestry) which indicate a closer acquaintance with the modes and habits of society; but even here no knowledge is displayed that might not have been acquired in Warwickshire. As he had exhibited the wantonness of lawless passion in "Venus and Adonis," he followed it by the exaltation of matron-like chastity in "Lucrece!" and there is, we think, nothing in the latter poem which a young man of one or two and twenty, so endowed, might not have written. Neither is it at all impossible that he had done something in connexion with the theatre while he was a resident in his native town, and before he had made up his mind to quit it. If his "inclination for poetry and acting," to repeat Aubrey's words, were so strong, it may have led him to have both written and acted. He may have contributed temporary prologues or epilogues, and without supposing him yet to have possessed any extraordinary art as a dramatist—only to be acquainted with certain speeches and occasional passages in older plays: he may even have assisted some of the companies in getting up, and performing the dramas they represented in or near Stratford. We own that this conjecture appears to us at least plausible; and the Lord Chamberlain's servants may have experienced his utility in both departments, and may have held out strong inducements to so promising a novice to continue his assistance by accompanying them to London.

What we have here said seems a natural and easy way of accounting for Shakespeare's station as a sharer at the Blackfriars theatre in 1592, about three years before we suppose him to have finally adopted the profession of an actor, and to have come to London for the purpose of pursuing it.

CHAPTER VII.

The earliest allusion to Shakespeare in Spenser's "Teares of the Muses," 1591. — Proofs of its applicability. — What Shakespeare had probably by this date written.—Edmund Spenser of King's Norton, Worcestershire.—No other doubt of the time the meritied the character given by Spenser.—Crowne, Kyd, Ledge, Peele, Marlowe, and Lyly, and their several claims: that of Lyly supported by Malone.—Temporary cessation of dramatic performances in London. — Probability or improbability that Shakespeare went to Italy.

We come now to the earliest known allusion to Shakespeare as a dramatist; and although his surname is not given, we apprehend that there can be no hesitation in applying what is said to him: it is contained in Spenser's "Teares of the Muses," a poem printed in 1591. The application of the passage to Shakespeare has been much contested, but the difficulty in our mind is, how the lines are to be explained by reference to any other dramatist of the time, even supposing, as we have supposed and believe, that our great poet was at this period only rising into notice as a writer for the stage. We will first quote the lines in their literal sense, and then in the edition of 1591, and afterwards say something of the claims of others to the distinction they confer.

"And he the man, whom Nature solle had made
To mock her soile, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counte under Minilck shade.
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late;
With whom we were so joyfully concordant.
Is also dead, and in dolor devout."
later in life he may have become acquainted with Shakespeare. An Edmund Spenser unquestionably dvict at Kingsbury, in Warwickshire, in 1569, which was the year when the author of "The Faerie Queene" went to Cambridge, and was admitted a sizer at Pembroke college. This Edmund Spenser may possibly have been the father of the poet (whose Christian name is no where recorded) and if it were the one or the other, it seems to afford a link of connection, however slight, between Spenser and Shakespeare, of which we have had no previous knowledge. Spenser was at least eleven years older than Shakespeare, but their early residence in the same part of the kingdom may have given rise to an interest in each other. Perhaps we are disposed to lay too much stress upon a mere coincidence of names; but we may be forgiven for clinging to the conjecture that the greatest romantic poet of this country was upon terms of friendship and cordiality with the greatest dramatist of the world.

If the evidence upon this point were even more scanty, we should be convinced that by "our pleasant Willy," Spenser meant William Shakespeare, by the fact that such a character as he gives could belong to no other dramatist of the time. Greene can have no pretensions to it, nor Lodge, nor Kyd, nor Peele; Marlowe had never touched comedy; but if these have no title to the praise that they had mocked tragedy, and if the claim for high merit, the claim for Lyly is little short of absurd. Lyly was, beyond dispute, the most artificial and affected writer of his day: his dramas have nothing like nature or truth in them; and if it could be established that Spenser and Lyly were on the most intimate footing, even the exaggerated admiration of the fondest friendship could hardly have carried Spenser to the extreme to which we have admitted in his "Tears and Laughters." It is not necessary to enter farther into this part of the question, because, we think, it is now established that Spenser's lines might apply to Shakespeare as regards the date of their publication, and indisputably applied with most felicitous exactness to the works he has left behind him.

With regard to the lines which state, that Willy

"Both rather choose to sit in idle Cell, Than so himselfe to mockeries to sell;"

we have already shown that in 1589 there must have been some compulsory cessation of theatrical performances, which affected not only offending but unoffending companies; hence the certificate, or more properly remonstrance, of the sixteen sharers in the Blackfriars. And although the public companies (after the completion of some inquiries by commissioner specially appointed) were allowed again to follow their vocation, there can be no doubt that there was a temporary suspension of all theatrical exhibitions in London. This suspension commenced a short time afterwards, when he wrote his "Tears and Laughters," in which he notices the silence of Shakespeare; and probably continued until after the plague broke out in London, in 1592.

It was at this juncture, probably, if indeed he ever were in that country, that Shakespeare visited Italy. Mr. C. Armitage Brown, in his very clever, and in many respects original work, "Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems," has maintained the affirmative with great confidence, and has brought into one view all the internal evidence afforded by the productions of our great dramatist. External evidence there is none, since not even a tradition of such a journey has descended to us. We own that the internal evidence, in our estimation, is by no means as strong as it appeared to Mr. Brown, who has evinced great ingenuity and ability in the conduct of his case, and has made as much as possible of his proofs. He dwells, among other things, upon the fact, that there were no contemporaneous translations of the tales on which 'The Merchant of Venice' is founded, but that Shakespeare was capable of translating Italian sufficiently for his own purposes, we are morally certain; and we think that if he had travelled to Venice, Verona, or Florence, we should have had more distinct and positive testimony of the fact in his works than can be adduced from them.

Other authors of the time have left such evidence behind them as cannot be denied. In other words, we are so distinctly in more than one of his pieces, and Rich informs us that he became acquainted with the novels he translated on the other side of the Alps. Although we do not believe that Shakespeare ever was in Italy, we admit that we are without evidence to prove a negative; and he may have gone there without having left behind him any distinct record of the fact. At the date to which we are now advertsing he might certainly have had a convenient opportunity for doing so, in consequence of the temporary prohibition of dramatic performances in London.

CHAPTER VIII.

Death of Robert Greene in 1592, and publication of his "Greatworth of Wit," by H. Chettle. Greene's address to Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele, and his ominous mention of Shakespeare—Shakespeare's absence at Chettle, and the sparsity of the latter in his "Kinds-and-Hearts of Women."—The character of Shakespeare there given. — Second alliance by Spenser to Shakespeare in "Cin Clout's come hownow."—The "counters of universal"—Change in the character of his compositions between 1591 and 1594: his "Richard II." and "Richard III."

During the prevalence of the infectious malady of 1592, although not in consequence of it, died one of the most notorious and distinguished of the literary men of the time,—Robert Greene. He expired on the 2d September, 1592, and left behind him a work, "The theater of the Great Wits" (1592).—The only Shake-scene in a country. Of that I might entertain your rare wits to be employed in more profitable courses, and let these apes imitate your past excellence, andnever more acquaint them with your admired inventions.

The clear and obvious purpose of this address is to induce Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele, to cease to write for the stage; and, in the course of his exhortation, Greene bitterly inveighs against an "upstart crow," who had availed himself of the dramatic labors of others, who imagined himself able to write as good blank-verse as any of his contemporaries, who was a "Johannes Fac-totum," and who, in his own opinion, was the equal of any man in the country. All this is clearly levelled at Shakespeare, under the purposely-converted name of Shakes-see, and the words, "Tiger's heart wapp'd in a player's hide," are a parody upon a line in an historical play, (most likely by Greene) "O, tiger's heart wapp'd in a woman's hide," from which Shakespeare had taken his "Henry VI.," part iii.

Hence it is evident that Shakespeare, near the end of 1592, had established such a reputation, and was so important a rival of the dramatists, who, until he came forward, had kept undisputed possession of the stage, as to excite the envy and cunning of Greene, even during his last and fatal illness. It also, we think, establishes another point not hitherto adverted to, viz., that great powers were possessed as a variety of talent, that, for the purposes of the company of which he was a member, he could do anything that he might be called upon to perform: he was the "Johannes Fac-totum" of the association: he was an actor, and he was a writer of original plays, an adapter and improver of those already in existence, (such as Greene, Lodge, Chettle, Clout, or Peele,) and no doubt he contributed prologues or epilogues, and inserted scenes, speeches, or passages, on any temporary emergency. Having his ready assistance, the Lord Chamberlain's servants required few other contributions from rival dramatists: Shakespeare was the "Johannes Fac-totum," who, in all probability, had thrown men like Greene, Lodge, and Peele, and even Marlowe himself, into the shade.

It was natural and proper that Shakespeare should take offence at this gross and public attack: and that he did, we are told by Chettle himself, the avowed editor of the "Greatworth of Wit": he does not indeed mention Shakespeare, but he designates him so intelligibly that there is no room for dispute. Marlowe, also, and not without reason, complained of the manner in which Greene had spoken of him in the same work, but to him Chettle made no apology, while to Shakespeare he offered all the amends in his power.

His apology to Shakespeare is contained in a tract called "The Kind-heart's Dream," which came out prior to the death of Greene, and was called relating to Marlowe and Shakespeare is highly interesting, and we therefore extract it entire:—

"About three months since died M. Robert Greene, leaving many papers in sundry booksellers' hands: among others his 'Greatworth of Wit,' in which a letter, written to divers playwrights, offensively by one of two of them taken: and because on the death they cannot be avenged, they wildly forge in their conceits a living author, and after toasting it to and fro, no remedy but it must light on me. How I have, all the time of my concerning in printing, hindered the bitter inveighing against scholars, it hath been very well known; and how in that I dealt, I can sufficiently prove. With neither of them, that take offence, was I acquainted; and with one of them [Marlowe] I core best if I neither knew nor cared. (Shakespeare's) time I did not so much care, as since I wish I had, for that as I have moderated the heat of living writers, and might have us of my own discretion (especially in such a case, the author being dead) that I did not so as sorry if the original fault had been my fault; because myself have seen his demeanor no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes; besides, divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art. For the first, [Marlowe's] whose learning I reverence, and at the personal of Greene's book struck out what then in conscience thought I had in some disrepository writ, or had it been true, yet to publish it was intolerable, him I would wish to use no worse than I deserve.

The accusation of Greene against Marlowe had reference, to the freedom of his opinions, of which it is not necessary here to say more: the attack upon Shakespeare we have already inserted and observed upon. In Chettle's apology to the latter, one of the most noticeable points is the tribute he pays to our great dramatist's abilities as an actor, "his demeanor no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes." The word "quality" was applied, at that date, to the same facetious and tecnically to acting, and the "quality" Shakespeare "professed" was that of an actor. "His facetious grace in writing" is separately adverted to, and admitted; while "his uprightness of dealing" is attested, not only by Chettle's own experience, but by the evidence of "divers of worship." Thus the amendment of Greene's book for his previous assumptions of Shakespeare, shows most decisively the high opinion entertained of him, towards the close of 1592, as an actor, an author, and a man.

We have already inserted Spenser's warm, but not less judicious and well-merited, eulogium of Shakespeare in 1591, when in his "Tears of the Muses" he addresses him as Wily, and designates him

"that same gentle spirit, from whose pen
Large streams of homoe and sweet nectar flow."

If we were to trust printed dates, it would seem that in the same year the author of "The Faerie Queene" gave another proof of his admiration of our great dramatist; we allude to a passage in "The Conclave" London, 1589, which was published with a dedication dated 27th December, 1591; but Malone proved, beyond all cavil, that for 1591 we ought to read 1594, the printer having made an extraordinary blunder. In that poem (after the author has spoken of many living and dead poets, some by their names, as Alhambra and Daniel, and others by fictitious and fanciful appellation), lines 1070:

"And there, though last not least, is Eden;
A gentle shepherd may so where he found,
Whose Muse, full of high thought's invention,
Doh, like himself, heroically sound."

Malone takes unnecessary pains to prove that this passage applies to Shakespeare, although he pertinaciously denied that "our pleasant Wily" of
"The Tears of the Muses" was intended for him.
We have no doubt on either point; the same epitet is given in both cases to the person addressed, and original date.

More than ten years afterwards, Chettle paid another tribute to Shakespeare, under the name of Melicert, in his
"England's Mourning Garment;" the author is reproaching the living with the dead, and longed to write in honor of Queen Elizabeth, who was just dead: he thus addresses Shakespeare:

"Nor doth the silver-tongued Melicert
Drop from his bounteous Muse one sad tear,
To mourn her death that grace descented;
And to his lays open'd her royal ear.
Sheep's wool, remember, cover our Elizabeth,
And sing her Rape, done by that Tarquin death."

This passage is important, with reference to the Royal encouragement given to Shakespeare, in consequence of the appointment of his plays at Court.

that epithet one which, at a subsequent date, almost constantly accompanied the name of Shakespeare. In "The Tears of the Muses" he is called a "gentle spirit," and in "Colin Clout's come home again" we are told that,

"A gentler shepherd may no where be found."

In the same feeling Ben Jonson calls him "my gentle Shakespeare," in the noble copy of verses prefixed to the folio of 1623, so that ere long the term became peculiarly applied to our great and unrivalled dramatist. This coincidence of expression is another circumstance to establish that Spenser certainly had Shakespeare in his mind when he wrote his "Tears of the Muses" in 1591, and his "Colin Clout's come home again" in 1594. In the latter instance the whole description is nearly as appropriate as in the earlier, with the addition of a line, which has a clear and obvious reference to the patronymic of our poet: his Muse, says Spenser,

"Doh, like himself, heroically sound."

These words alone may be taken to show, that between 1591 and 1594 Shakespeare had somewhat changed the character of his compositions: Spenser having applauded him, in his "Tears of the Muses," for unrivalled talents in comedy, (a department of the drama to which Shakespeare had, perhaps, at that date especially, though not exclusively, devoted himself) in his "Colin Clout" spoke of the "high thought's invention," which then filled Shakespeare's muse, and made her sound as "heroically" as his name. Of his genius, in a loftier strain of poetry than belonged to comedy, our great dramatist, by the year 1594, must have given some remarkable and undeniable proofs. In 1591 he had perhaps written his "Love's Labor's Lost" and "Two Gentlemen of Verona;" but in 1594 he had, no doubt, produced one or more of his great historical plays, his "Richard II." and "Richard III.," both of which, together with "Romeo and Juliet," came from the press in 1597, though the last in a very mangled, and imperfect, and unauthentic state. One circumstance may be mentioned, as leading to the belief that "Richard III.," was brought out in 1594, viz., that in that year an impression of "The True Tragedy of Richard the Third," (an older play than that of Shakespeare) was published, that it might be bought under the notion that it was the new drama by the most popular poet of the day, then in a course of representation. It is very probable that "Richard II."
had been composed before "Richard III.," and to either or both of them the lines,

"Whose Muse, full of high thought's invention,
Doh, like himself, heroically sound,"

will abundantly apply. The difference in the character of Spenser's tributes to Shakespeare in 1591 and 1594 was occasioned by the difference in the character of his productions.

CHAPTER IX.

The dramas written by Shakespeare up to 1594.—Publication of "Venus and Adonis" during the plague in 1593.—Dedication of it, and of "Loves Labour's Lost," 1594, to the Earl of Southampton.—Bounty of the Earl to Shakespeare, and coincidence between the date of the gift and the building of the Globe theatre on the Bankside.—Probability of the story that Lord Southampton presented Shakespeare with £1000.

Having arrived at the year 1594, we may take this opportunity of stating which of Shakespeare's extant works, in our opinion, had by that date been produced. We have already mentioned the three parts of "Henry VI," "Titus Andronicus," "The Comedy of Errors," "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," and "Love's Labor's Lost," as in being in 1591; and in the interval between 1591 and 1594, we apprehend, he had added to them "Richard II" and "Richard III." Of these, the last four were entirely the work of our great dramatist: in the others he more or less availed himself of previous dramas, or possibly, of the assistance of contemporaries.

We have already stated our distinct and deliberate opinion that "Venus and Adonis" was written by Shakespeare, after its author left his home in Westmoreland; and that he kept it in manuscript, and early in 1593 seems to have put it into the hands of a printer, named Richard Field, who, it has been said, was of Stratford. It is to be recollected that at the time "Venus and Adonis" was sent to the press, while it was printing, and when it was published, the plague prevailed in London to such an extent, that it was deemed expedient by the privy council to put a stop to all theatrical performances. Shakespeare seems to have availed himself of this interval, in order to bring before the world a production of a different character to those which had been ordinarily seen from his pen. Until "Venus and Adonis" came out, the public at large could only have known him by the dramas he had written, or by those which appeared among the popular and destroyed literature of the time. We may conclude that this admirable and unequalled production first introduced its author to the notice of Lord Southampton; and it is evident, from the opening of the dedication, that Shakespeare had not taken the precaution of ascertaining, in the first instance, the wishes of the young noblemen on the subject of "Venus and Adonis." He was only nine years younger than Shakespeare, having been born on 6th October, 1573.

We may be sure that the dedication of "Venus and Adonis," was, on every account, acceptable, and Shakespeare followed it up by inscribing to the same peer, but in a much more assured and confident strain, his "Lucrece," after the succeeding year. He then "dedicated his love" to his juvenile patron, having "a warrant of his honorable disposition" towards his "pamphet" and himself. "Lucrece" was not calculated, from its subject and the treatment of it, to be so popular as "Venus and Adonis," and the first edition having appeared from Field's press in 1594, a reprint of it does not seem to have been made until after four years, or about 1598; and the third edition bears the date of 1600.

It must have been about this period that the Earl of Southampton bestowed a most extraordinary proof of his high-minded munificence upon the author of "Venus and Adonis," and "Lucrece." It was not unusual, at that time and afterwards, for noblemen, and others to whom works were dedicated, to make presents of money to the writers of them; but there is certainly no instance upon record of such generous bounty, on an occasion of the kind, as that of which we are now to speak: nevertheless, we have every reliance upon the authenticity of the anecdote, taking into account the unexampled merit of the poet, the known liberality of the nobleman, and the evidence upon which the story has been handed down. Rowe was the original narrator of it in print, and he doubtless had it, with other information, from Betterton, who probably received it directly from Sir William Davenant, and communicated it to Rowe. If it cannot be asserted that Davenant was strictly contemporary with Shakespeare, he was contemporary with Shakespeare's contemporaries, and from them he must have obtained the original information. Rowe gives the statement in these words:—

"There is one instance so singular in the munificence of this patron of Shakespeare's, that, if it had not been ascertained that the story was handed down by Sir William Davenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his [Shakespeare's] affairs, and, if I can judge from the circumstances that my Lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to."

No biographer of Shakespeare seems to have adverted to the period when it was likely that the gift was made, in combination with the nature of the purchase Lord Southampton had heard our great dramatist wished to complete, or, it seems to us, they would not have thought the tradition by any means so improbable as some have held it.

The disposition to make a worthy return for the dedications of "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece" would of course be produced in the mind of Lord Southampton by the knowledge of the value of such works, and we are to recollect that it was precisely at the same date that the Lord Chamberlain's servants entered upon the project of building the Globe Theatre on the Bankside, not very far to the west of the Southwark foot of London Bridge. "Venus and Adonis" was published in 1593; and it was on the 24th December in that year that Richard Burbage, the great actor, and the leader of the company to which Shakespeare was attached, signed a bond to a carpenter of the name of Peter Street for the construction of the Globe. It is not too much to allow at least a year for its completion; and it was during 1594, while the work on the Bankside was in progress, that "Lucrece" came from the press. Thus we see that the building of the Globe, at the cost of the sharers in the Blackfriars theatre, was coincident in point of time with the appearance of the two poems dedicated to the Earl of Southampton. Is it, then, too much to believe that the young and bountiful nobleman, having heard of this enterprise from the peculiar interest: "is known to have taken in all matters relating to the stage, and having been invited by warm admiration of "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," in the fore-front of which he rejoiced to see his own name, presented Shakespeare with £1000, to enable him to make good the money he was to produce, as his proportion, for the completion of the Globe?"

We do not mean to say that our great dramatist stood in need of the money, or that he could not have deposited it as well as the other had in the Blackfriars; but Lord Southampton may not have thought it necessary to inquire, whether he did or did not want it, nor to consider precisely what it had been customary to give ordinary versifiers, who sought the pay and patronage of the nobility. Although Shakespeare had not yet reached the climax of his excellence, Lord Southampton knew him to be the greatest diviner of the age, who had yet produced; he knew him also to be the writer of two poems, dedicated to himself, with which nothing else of the kind could bear comparison; and in the exercise of his bounty he measured the poet by his deserts, and "used him after his own honor and dignity," by bestowing upon him a sum worthy of his title and character, and which his wealth probably enabled him without difficulty to afford. We do not believe that there has been any exaggeration in the amount, (although that is more possible, than that the whole statement should have been a fiction,) and Lord Southampton may have intended also to indicate his hearty good will to the new undertaking of the company, and his determination to support it.

CHAPTER X.

The opening of the Globe theatre, on the Bankside, in 1599.— Union of Shakespeare's associates with the Lord Admiral's players.—The theatre at Newington Butts.—Projected repair and enlargement of the Blackfriars theatre: opposition by the inhabitants of the precinct.—Shakespeare's rank in the company in 1599.—Petition from him and seven others to the Privy Council, and its results.—Repair of the Blackfriars theatre.—Shakespeare a resident in Southwark in 1596: proof that he was so from the papers at Dulwich College.

We have concluded, as we think that we may do very fairly, that the construction of the new theatre on the Bankside, subsequently known as the Globe, having been commenced soon after the signature of the bond of Burbage to Street, on 22d Dec., 1593, was continued through the year 1594: we apprehend the building may have finished intended only for the reception of audiences early in the spring of 1595. It was a round wooden building, open to the sky, while the stage was protected from the weather by an overhanging roof of thatch. The number of persons it would contain we have no means of ascertaining, but it was certainly of larger dimensions than the Rose, the Hope or the Swan, three other edifices of the same kind, and used for the same purpose, in the immediate vicinity. The Blackfriars was a private theatre, as it was called, entirely covered in, and of smaller size; and from thence the company, after the Globe had been completed, was in the habit of removing in the spring, perhaps as soon as there was any indication of the setting in of fine cheerful weather.

Before the building of the Globe, for the exclusive use of the theatrical servants of the Lord Chamberlain, there can be little doubt that they did not act all the year round at the Blackfriars: they appear to have performed sometimes at the Curtain in Shore-ditch, and Richard Burbage, at the time of his death, still had shares in that playhouse. Whether they occupied it in common with any other association is not so clear; but we learn from Henslowe's Diary, that in 1594, and perhaps at an earlier date, the company of which Shakespeare was a member had played at a theatre in Newington Butts, where the Lord Admiral's servants also exhibited. At this period of our stage-history the performances usually began at three o'clock in the afternoon; for the citizens were busied in business and in the early morning many of them afterwards walked out into the fields for recreation, often visiting such theatres as were open purposely for their reception. Henslowe's Diary shows that the Lord Chamberlain's and the Lord Admiral's servants had joint possession of the Newington theatre from 31st June, 1594, to the 15th November, 1596; and during that period various pieces were performed, which in their titles resemble plays which unquestionably came from Shakespeare's pen. That none of these were productions by our great dramatist, it is, of course, impossible to affirm; but the strong probability seems to be, that they were older dramas, of which he subsequently, more or less, availed himself. We have no reason to think that Shakespeare did not aid in these representations, although he was perhaps, too much engaged with the duties of authorship, at this date, to take a very busy or prominent part as an actor.

It is probable that, even after the Globe was finished, the Lord Chamberlain's servants now and then performed at Newington in the summer, because audiences, having been accustomed to expect them there, assembled for the purpose, and the players did not think it prudent to relinquish the emolument thus to be obtained. The performances at Newington, we presume, did not however interfere with the representations at the Globe.

We may feel assured that the important incident of the opening of a new theatre on the Bankside, larger than any that then stood in that or in other parts of the town, was celebrated by the production of a new play. Considering his station and duties in the company, and his popularity as a dramatist, we may be confident also that the new play was written by Shakespeare. In the imperfect state of our information, it would be vain to speculate which of his dramas was brought out on the occasion. We frankly own, therefore, that we are not in a condition to offer an opinion upon the question, and we are disposed, where we can, to refrain even from conjecture, when we have no ground on which to rest our opinion.

Allowing about fifteen months for the erection and completion of the Globe, we may believe that it was in full operation in the spring, summer, and autumn of 1595. On the approach of cold weather, the company would of course return to their winter quarters in the Blackfriars, which was enclosed, lighted from within, and comparatively warm. This theatre was a temporary building long in constant use for twenty years, and early in 1596 the sharers directed their attention to the extensive repair, enlargement, and, possibly, entire re-construction of the building.

The truth, no doubt, was, that in consequence of their increased popularity, owing, we may readily imagine, in a great degree to the plays which had produced, the company which had occupied the Blackfriars theatre found that their house was too small for their audiences, and wished to enlarge it. Two documents in the State Paper Office, and a third preserved at Dulwich College, enable us to state distinctly what was the object of the actors at the Blackfriars in the period 1590-1596. The first of these is a report of the estimate of the building, which certain inhabitants of the precinct in which the playhouse was situated, not only against the completion of the work of repair and enlargement, but against any further performances in the theatre.

Of this paper it is not necessary for our purpose to say more; but the answer to it, on the part of the association of actors, is a very valuable relic, as much as it gives the names of eight players who were the proprietors of the theatre or its appurtenances, that of Shakespeare being fifth in the list. It will not have been forgotten, that in 1589 no fewer than sixteen actors were enumerated, and that then Shakespeare's name was the twelfth; but it did not by any means follow, that because there were sixteen sharers in the receipts, they were also proprietors of the building, properties, or wardrobe: in 1596 it is stated that Thomas Pope, Richard Burbage, John Hemings, (properly spelt Heninges,) Augustine Philips, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, (who withdrew from the company in 1601,) William Slye, and Nicholas Tooley, were

"owners" of the theatre as well as sharers in the profits arising out of the performances. The fact, however, seems to be as follows: owners of the edifice in which plays were represented, the proprietor of the freehold, was Richard Burbage, who inherited it from his father, and transmitted it to his sons; but as a body, the parties addressing the privy council (for the "petition" appears to have been sent thither) might in a certain sense call themselves owners of, as well as sharers in the Blackfriars theatre. We insert the document in a note, observing merely, that, like many others of a similar kind, it is without signatures.

The date of the year when this petition of the actors was presented to the privy council is ascertained from that of the remonstrance of the inhabitants which had rendered it necessary, viz., 1596; but by another paper, among the theatrical relics of Alleyn and Henslowe at Dulwich College, we are enabled to show that both the remonstrance and the petition were anterior to May in that year. Henslowe (stepfather to Alleyn's wife, and Alleyn's partner) seems always, very prudently, to have kept up a good understanding with the officers of the department of the revels; and on 3d May, 1596, a paper spoken to by Mr. Veale, sheriff of London, to Mr. Tynney, master of the revels, wrote to Henslowe, informing him (as of course he must take an interest in the result) that it had been decided by the privy council, that the Lord Chamberlain's servants should be allowed to complete their repairs, but not to enlarge their house in the Blackfriars; the note of Veale to Henslowe is on a small slip of paper, very clearly written; and as it is short, we here insert it:"—

"Mr. Henslowe. This is to enjoin you that my Mr., the Master of the revels, hath read the 6th of the council order that the L. Chamberlaien's servants shall not be disturbed at the Blackfryars, according with their petition in their whole, and they shall be given unto them to make good the decay of the said House, but not to make the same longer then in former tyme hath beene. From the Bohifce of the Revelles, this 3 of May, 1596. "—RICH VEALE."

Thus the whole transaction is made clear: the company, soon after the opening of the Globe, contemplated the repair and enlargement of the Blackfriars theatre: the inhabitants of the precincts objected not only to the repair and enlargement, but to any dramatic representations in that part of the town: the petitioners were to be allowed to carry out their design, as regarded the restoration of the edifice, and the increase of its size; but the privy council consented only that the building should be repaired. We are to conclude, therefore, that after the repairs were finished, the theatre would hold no more spectators than formerly; but that the dilapidations of time were substantially remedied; and from then the house continued long afterwards to be employed for the purpose for which it had been originally constructed.

Where Shakespeare had resided from the time when he first came to London, until the period of which we are now speaking, we have no information; but in July, 1596, he was living in Southwark, perhaps to improve the scene of action, and more effectually to superintend the performances at the Globe, which were continued through at least seven months of the year. We know not whether he removed there shortly before the opening of the Globe, or whether from the first it had been his usual place of abode; but Malone tells us, "From a paper now before me, which formerly belonged to Edward Alleyn, the player, our company appears to have lived in Southwark, near the Bear-garden, in 1596." He gives us no farther insight into the contents of the paper; but he probably referred to a small slip, borrowed, with other relics of a like kind, from Dulwich College, many of which were returned after his death. We subjoin it exactly as it stands in the original: the handwriting is ignorant, the spelling peculiar, and it was evidently merely a hasty and imperfect memorandum:

"Inhabitants of Southwark as have complained, this of July, 1596.
Mr. Markis
Mr. Tuppin
Mr. Langorth
Wiltorne the pyper
Mr. Barret
Mr. Shakespeare
Mr. Philips
Mr. Thomas
Mr. Golden the baude
Nages
Filippott and no more, and soe well ended."

This is the whole of the fragment, for such it appears to be, and without further explanation, which we have not been able to find in any other document, in the depository where the above is preserved or elsewhere, it is impossible to understand more than that Shakespeare and other inhabitants of Southwark had made some complaint in July, 1596, which we may guess, was hostile to the wishes of the writer, who congratulated himself that the matter was so well at an end. Some of the parties named, including our great dramatist, continued resident in Southwark long afterwards, as we shall have occasion in its proper place to show. The writer seems to have been desirous of speaking de-rogatorily of all the persons he enumerates, but he designates some as "Mr. Markis, Mr. Tuppin, Mr. Langorth, Mr. Barett, and Mr. Shaksper; but
"H. Phillips, Benjamin Nugges, and Mr. Spoff(?)," he only mentions by their surnames, while he adds the words "the pypper" and "the baude" after "Wilsone" and "Mother Golden," probably to indicate that any complaint from them ought to have but little weight.

CHAPTER XI

William Shakespeare's annual visit to Stratford.—Death of his son Hamnet in 1596.—General scarcity in England.
The quantity of corn in the hands of William Shakespeare and his neighbors in February, 1598.—Ben Jonson's
"Every Man in His Humor," and probable instrumentality of Shakespeare in the original production of it on the stage.—Henslowe's letter respecting the death of Gabriel Spencer.

AUBREY informs us, (and there is not only no reason for disbelieving his statement, but every ground for believing it,) that William Shakespeare was,
"wont to go to his native country once a year."
Without seeking for any evidence upon the question, nothing is more natural or probable; and when, therefore, he had acquired sufficient property, he might be anxious to settle his family comfortably and independently in Stratford. We must suppose that his father and mother were mainly dependent upon him; and he may have employed his brother Gilbert, who was two years and a half younger than himself, and perhaps accustomed to agricultural pursuits, to look after his farming concerns in the country, while he himself was absent superintending his highly profitable theatrical undertakings in London. In 1595, 1596, and 1597, our poet must have been in the receipt of a considerable and an increasing income; he was part propritor of the Blackfriars and the Globe theatres, both excellent speculations; he was an actor, doutless earning a good salary, independently of the proceeds of his shares; and he was the most popular and applauded dramatic poet of the day. In the summer he might find, or make, leisure to visit his native town, and we may be tolerably sure that he was there in August, 1596, when he had the misfortune to lose his only son Hamnet, one of the twins born early in the spring of 1583: the boy completed his eleventh year in February, 1596, so that his death in August following must have been a very severe trial to his parents.

Now informs us, that in 1596 the price of provisions in England was so high, that the bushel of wheat was sold for six, seven, and eight shillings:
the dearth continued and increased through 1597, and in August of that year the price of the bushel of wheat had risen to thirteen shillings, fell to ten shillings, and rose again, in the words of the old faithful chronicler, to "the late greatest price."
Connected with this dearness, the Shakespeare Society has been put in possession of a document of much value as regards the biography of our poet:
although, at first sight, it may not appear to deserve notice, it is sure in the end to attract. It is thus headed:—

"The note of corne and malte, taken the 4th of February, 1597. In the 40th yeare of the raigne of our most gracious Souveraigne Ladie, Queene Elizabeth," i.e. and in the margin opposite the title are the words
"Stratford's Burrough, Warwick." It was evidently prepared in order to ascertain how much corn and malt there really was in the town; and it is divided into two columns, one showing the "Townesmen's corn," and the other the "Strangers' malt," and references by this document, among other things, to prove in what part of Stratford the family of our great poet then dwelt: it was in Chapel-street Ward, and it appears that at the date of the account William Shakespeare had ten quarters of corn in his possession. As some may be curious to see who were his immediate neighbors, and in what order the names are given, we copy the account, as far as it relates to Chapelstreet Ward, exactly as it stands:—

CHAPPLE STREET WARD.

3 Francis Smythe, Jonet, 3 quarters.
5 John Cox, 5 quarters.
174 Mr. Thomas Dyxon, 173 quarters.
3 Mr. Thomas Barber, 3 quarters.
5 Mycheall Hare, 5 quarters.
5 Mr. Riffold, 6 quarters.
6 Hugh Aymer, 6 quarters.
6 Thomas Badsey, 6 quarters—balekey 1 quarter.
1, 2 Mr. John Rogers, 10 strikes.
8 Mr. John Aymer, 8 quarters.
11 Mr. Aspinall, about 11 quarters.
10 Wm. Shakespeare, 10 quarters.
7 Jol. Shawe, 7 quarters.

We shall have occasion hereafter again to refer to this document upon another point, but in the metime we may remark that none of the names of Shakespeare is not found in any part of it. This fact gives additional probability to the belief that the two old people, possibly with some of their children, were living in the house of their son William, for such may be the reason why we do not find John Shakespeare mentioned in the account as the owner of any corn. It may likewise in part explain how it happened that William Shakespeare was in possession of so large a quantity: in proportion to the number of his family, in time of scarcity, he would be naturally desirous to be well provided with the main article of subsistence; or it is very possible that, as a grower of grain, he might keep some in store for sale to those who were in want of it. It is impossible to give any proof of his means and substance at this date, that only two persons in Chapelstreet Ward had a larger quantity in their hands.
We are led to infer from this circumstance that our great dramatist may have been a cultivator of land, and it is not unlikely that the wheat in his granary had been grown on his mother's estate of Asbyes, at Wilmecote, of which we know that no fewer than fifty, out of about sixty, acres were arable.

We must now return to London and to theatrical affairs there, and in the first place advert to a passage in Rowe's Life of Shakespeare, relating to the real or supposed commencement of the connexion between our great dramatist and Ben Jonson. Rowe tells us that "Shakespeare's acquaintance with Ben Jonson was a remarkable instance of humanity and good nature. Mr. Jonson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turned it carelessly and superciliously over, were just upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakespeare, luckily, cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the public." This anecdote is entirely disbelieved by Mr. Gifford, and he rests its incredibility upon the supposition, that Ben Jonson's earliest known production, "Every Man in his Humor," was originally acted in 1597 at a different theatre, and he produces as evidence Henslowe's Diary, which, he states, proves that the comedy came out at the Rose.

The truth, however, is, that the play supposed, on the authority of Henslowe, to be Ben Jonson's comedy, is only called by Henslowe "Humors," or "Humories," as he ignorantly spells it. It is a mere speculation that this was Ben Jonson's play, for it may have been any other performance, by any other poet, in the title of which the word "Humors" occurred; and we have the indisputable and unequivocal testimony of Ben Jonson himself, in his own authorized edition of his works in 1616, that "Every Man in His Humor" was not acted until 1598: he was not satisfied with stating on the title-page, that it was "acted in the year 1598 by the then Lord Chamberlain's servants," which might have been considered sufficient; but in this instance (as in all others in the same volume) he informs us at the end that 1598 was the year in which it was first acted:

"This comedy was first acted in the year 1598, and we are now to disbelieve Ben Jonson's positive assertion (a man of the highest and purest notions, as regarded truth and integrity) for the sake of a theory founded upon the bare assumption, that Henslowe by "Umber's" not only meant Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humor," but could mean nothing else.

Mr. Gifford, passing over without notice Jonson's positive statement, proceeds to argue that Ben Jonson could stand in need of no such assistance, as Shakespeare is said to have afforded him, because he was "as well known, and perhaps better," than Shakespeare himself. Surely, with all deference for Mr. Gifford's undisputed acuteness and general accuracy, we may doubt how Ben Jonson could be better, or even as well known as Shakespeare, when the latter had been for twelve years connected with the stage as author and actor, and had written, at the lowest calculation, twelve dramas, while the former was only twenty-four years old, and had produced no known play but "Every Man in his Humor."

Add to this, that nothing could be more consistent with the amiable and generous character of Shakespeare than that he should thus have interested himself in favor of a writer who was ten years his junior, and who gave such undoubted proofs of genius as are displayed in "Every Man in His Humor." Our great dramatist, established in public favor by such comedies as "The Merchant of Venice" and "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," by such a tragedy as "Romeo and Juliet," and by such historians as "King John," "Richard II.," and "Richard III.," must have felt himself above all rivalry, and could well afford this act of "humanity and good nature," as Rowe terms it, on behalf of a young, needy, and meritorious author.

Another circumstance may be noticed as an incidental confirmation of Rowe's statement, with which Mr. Gifford cannot be disputed, because the fact has only been recently discovered. In 1598 Ben Jonson, being then only twenty-four years old, had a quarrel with Gabriel Spencer, one of Henslowe's principal actors, in consequence of which they met, fought, and Spencer was killed. Henslowe, writing to Alleyn, the leading member of his company, on the subject, on the 26th September, uses these words: "Since you were with me, I have lost one of my company, which hurteth me greatly; that is Gabriel, for he is slain in Hoxton Fields by the hands of Benjamin Jonson, bricklayer."

Now, had Ben Jonson been at that date the author of the comedy call "Umber's," and had it been his "Every Man in his Humor," which was acted by the Lord Admiral's players eleven times, it is not very likely that Henslowe would have been ignorant who Ben Jonson was, and have spoken of him, not as one of the dramatists in his pay, and the author of a very successful comedy, but merely as "bricklayer."
of Dogs," which was certainly not calculated to lesson the objections entertained by any persons in authority against the Court.

The Blackfriars, not being, according to the terms of the order of the privy council, "a common playhouse," but what was called a private theatre, does not seem to have been included in the general ban; but as we know that similar directions had been conveyed to the magistrates of the county of Surrey, it seems probable that the privy council, in their mania to have produced no effect upon the performances at the Globe or the Rose upon the Bankside. We must attribute this circumstance, perhaps, to the exercise of private influence; and it is quite certain that the necessity of keeping some companies in practice, in order that they might be prepared to exhibit, when required, before the Queen, was made the first pretext for granting exclusive "licenses" to the actors of the Lord Chamberlain, and of the Lord Admiral. We know that the Earl of Southampton and Rutland, about this date and shortly afterwards, were in the frequent habit of visiting the theatres: the Earl of Nottingham also seems to have taken an unusual interest on various occasions in favor of the companies noticed in the present work; and to the statements of these noblemen we are, perhaps, to attribute the exemption of the Globe and the Rose from the operation of the order "to deface" all buildings adapted to dramatic representations in Middlesex and Surrey, in a manner that would render them unfit for any such purpose in future. We have the authority of the privy council, under date of 19th February, 1597-8, for stating that the companies of the Lord Chamberlain and of the Lord Admiral obtained renewal permission "to use and practise stage-plays," in order that they might be duly qualified, if called upon to perform before the Queen.

This privilege, as regards the players of the Lord Admiral, seems the more extraordinary, because that was the very company which only in the August preceding had given such offence by the representation of Nash's "Isle of Dogs." It is very likely that Nash was the scape-goat on the occasion, and that the chief blame was thrown upon him, although, in his tract, before mentioned, he maintains that he was not the least of the great party of all those who were concerned in the transaction.

As far as we can judge, there was good reason for showing favor to the association with which Shake- speare was connected, because nothing has reached us to lead to the belief that the Lord Chamberlain's servants had incurred any displeasure. Accordingly, we hear of no interruption, at this date, of the performances at either of the theatres in the receipts of which Shakespeare participated.

To the year 1598 inclusive, only five of his plays had been printed, although he had then been connected with the stage for about twelve years, viz.: "Romeo and Juliet," "Richard II." and "Richard III." in 1597, and "Love's Labour's Lost" and "Henry IV." part I. in 1598. As we learn from indisputable contemporaneous authority, he had written seven others, besides what he had done in the way of alterations, addition, and adaptation. The earliest enumeration of Shakespeare's dramas made its appearance in 1598, in a work by Francis Meres, entitled "Palladis Tamia, Wits Treasury." In a division of this small but thick volume (consisting of 666 8vo. pages, besides "The Table,") headed "A comparative discourse of our English Poets, with the Greeke, Latine, and Italian Poets," the author inserts the following paragraph, which we extract precisely as it stands in the original, because it has no where, that we recollect, been quoted quite correctly elsewhere.

"As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latins: so Shakespeare among English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for Comedy, witness his "Comedy of Errors," his "Menestheus' lost," his "Love labor's wonne," his "Midsummer night's dream," & his "Merchant of Venice;" for Tragedy his "Richard II.," "Richard III.," "Titus Andronicus," and his "Romeo and Juliet.""

Thus we see that twelve comedies, histories, and tragedies (for we have specimens in each department) were known as Shakespeare's in the Autumn of 1598, when the work of Meres came from the press. It is a remarkable circumstance, evincing strikingly the number in which these companies of actors of that period were able to keep popular pieces from the press, that until Shakespeare had been a writer for the Lord Chamberlain's servants ten or eleven years not a single play by him was published; and then four of his first printed plays were without his name, as if the bookseller had been ignorant of the fact, or as if he considered that no one would attempt to attribute to them. As one of them, "Romeo and Juliet," was never printed in any early quarto as the work of Shakespeare, as will be seen from our exact reprint of the title-pages of the editions of 1598, 1599, and 1609, (see Introduct.) The reprints of "Richard II." and "Richard III." in 1598, as before observed, have Shakespeare's name inserted, and they were issued, as we have seen, again, after Meres had distinctly assigned those "histories" to him.

It is our conviction, after the most minute and patient examination of, we believe, every old impression, that Shakespeare in no instance authorized the publication of his plays: we do not consider even "Hamlet" an exception, although the reissue of 1604 was probably intended, by some parties connected with the theatre, to supersede the garbled and fraudulent edition of 1603: Shakespeare, in our opinion, had nothing to do with the one or with the other. He allowed most mangled and deformed copies of several of his greatest works to be circulated for many years, and did not think it worth his while to defend them from fraud, which he could correct in several cases, undetected, as far as the great body of the public was concerned, until the appearance of the folio of 1623. Our great dramatist's indifference upon this point seems to have been shared by many, if not by most, of his contemporaries; and if the quarto impression of any one of his plays be more accurate in typography than another, we feel satisfied that it areas out of the better state of the manuscript, or the greater pains and fidelity of the printer.

Returning to the important list of twelve plays furnished by Meres, we may add, that although he does not mention them, there can be no doubt that the three parts of "Henry VI." had been repeatedly acted before 1598: we may possibly infer, that they were awarded them, because they were then well known not to be the sole work of Shakespeare. By "Henry IV." it is most probable that Meres intended both parts of that "history." "Love's Labor's Won" has been supposed, since the time of Dr. Farmer, to be "All's Well that Ends Well," under a different title; our notion is that the original name given to the play was "Love's Labor's Won;" and that, when it was revised with additions and alterations, in 1605 or 1606, it received also a new appellation.

Yet it is singular, if we rely upon several coeval authorities, how little our great dramatist was about this period known and admired for his plays. Richard Burbage published his ' Recreation of Lady Per cuina,' in 1598, (the year in which the list of twelve of Shakespeare's plays was printed by Meres,) and from a copy of verses entitled "Remembrance of some English Poets," we quote the following notice of Shakespeare:—
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. xxxiii

"And Shakespeare thou, whose honey-flowing vein, Pleasing the world, thy praises doth contain.
Whose verses, and not few, abounded chaste,
Thy name in Fame's immortal book hath placed;-
Live ever, at least in fame live ever:
Well may the body die, but die never!"

Here Shakespeare's popularity, as "pleasing the world," is noticed; but the proofs of it are not de rived from the stage, where his dramas were in daily performance before crowded audiences, but from the success of his "Venus and Adonis" and " Lucrece," which had gone through various editions. Precisely to the same effect, but a still stronger instance, we may refer to a play in which Burbage and Kempe are introduced as characters, the one of whom had obtained such celebrity in the tragic, and the other in the comic parts in Shakespeare's dramas: we allude to "The Return from Parnassus," which was indisputably acted be fore the death of Queen Elizabeth. In a scene where two young students are discussing the merits of particular poets, one of them speaks thus of Shakespeare:—

"Who loves Adonis love or Lucrece rape,
His sweeter verse contains heart-robbing life;
Costume and the stage, the mimic world;
Without love's foolish, lazy languishment."

But the most distant allusion is made to any of his dramatic productions, although the poet criticised by the young students immediately before Shakespeare was Ben Jonson, who was declared to be "the wittiest fellow, of a bricklayer, in Englund," but "a slow inventor." Hence we might be led to imagine that, even down to as late a period as the commencement of the seventeenth century, the reputation of Shakespeare depended rather upon his poems than upon his plays; almost, as if productions for the stage were not looked upon, at that date, as part of the recognised literature of the country.

CHAPTER XIII.

New Place, or, "the great house," in Stratford, bought by Shakespeare in 1597.—Removal of the Lord Admiral's players from the Bankside to the Fortune theatre in Cripplegate.—Rivalry of the Lord Chamberlain's and Lord Admiral's company.—Order in 1600 confining the acting of plays to the Globe and Fortune: the influence of the two associations occupying those theatres.—Disobedience to the order of 1600.—Plays by Shakespeare published in 1600.—The "First Part of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle," printed in 1600, falsely imputed to Shakespeare, and cancelling of the title-page.

It will have been observed, that, in the document
we have produced, relating to the quantity of corn and malt in Stratford, it is stated that William Shakespeare's residence was in that division of the borough called Chapel-street ward. This is an important circumstance, because we think it may be said to settle decisively the disputed question, whether our great dramatist purchased what was known as "the great house," or "New Place," before, in, or after 1597. It was situated in Chapelstreet ward, close to the chapel of the Holy Trinity.
We are now certain that he had a house in the ward in February, 1597—98, and that he had ten quarters of corn there; and we can not doubt that it was the dwelling which had been built by Sir Hugh Clpton in the reign of Henry VII.: the Clptons subsequently sold it to a person of the name of Botte, and he to Hercules Underhill, who disposed of it to Shakespeare. We therefore find him, in the beginning of 1598, occupying one of the best houses, in one of the best parts of Stratford. He who had quitted his native town about two years before, poor and comparatively friendless, was able,
by the profits of his own exertions, and the exercise of his own talents, to return to it, and to establish his family in more comfort and opulence than, as far as is known, they had ever before enjoyed. We consider the point that Shakespeare had become owner of New Place in or before 1597 as completely made out, as, at such a distance of time, and with such imperfect information upon nearly all matters connected with his history, could be at all expected.

We apprehend likewise, as we have already remarked, that the confirmation of arms in 1596, obtained as we believe by William Shakespeare, had reference to the permanent and substantial settlement of his name, which he had already acquired in the purchase of a residence there consistent with the altered and improved circumstances of that family.

The removal of the Lord Admiral's players, under Henslowe and Alleyn, from the Rose theatre on the Bankside, to the new house called the Fortune, in Golding-lane, Cripplegate, soon after the date to which we are now referring, may lead to the opinion that that company did not find itself secure against the rivalry with the Lord Chamberlain's servants, under Shakespeare and Burbage, at the Globe.
That theatre was opened, as we have adduced reasons to believe, in the spring of 1595: the Rose was a considerably older building, and the necessity for repairing it might enter into the calculation, when Henslowe and Alleyn thought of trying the experiment in a different part of the town, and on the Middlesex side of the water. Theatres being at this date merely wooden structures, and much frequented, they would soon fall into decay, especially in a marshy situation like that of the Bank-side: so damp was the soil in the neighborhood, that the Globe was surrounded by a moat to keep it dry; and it is most likely that the Rose was similarly drained when it was transferred there. The Rose was in the first instance, and as far back as the reign of Edward VI., a house of entertainment with that sign, and it was converted into a theatre by Henslowe and a grocer of the name

"In the garden of this house it is believed that Shakespeare planted a mulberry tree, about the year 1599; such 4 is the tradition, and we are disposed to think that it is founded in truth. In 1609, King James was anxious to introduce the mulberry (which had been imported about half a century earlier), and, after careful cultivation, it was planted in November, 1609, 4023 were paid out of the public purse for the planting of mulberry trees "near the palace of Westminster." The plantations, it is said, were intended for Sir John Clpton, who married as his second wife "the daughter to Sir Hugh Clpton to a clergyman of the name of Gastrell, who, on to an offence taken at the authorities of the borough of Stratford, on the subject of the two houses, pulled it down, and cut down the mulberry tree. According to a letter in the Annual Register of 1700, the wood was bought by a driver, who "made many odd things of it for the neighbors." It is said to have been seen as many as ten mulberry trees in this one mulberry tree, as could hardly have been furished by all the mulberry trees in the county of Warwick.
of Chobham about the year 1584; but it seems to have early required considerable reparations, and they might be again necessary prior to 1599, when Henslowe and Alleyn resolved to abandon South- wark. However, it may be doubted whether they would not have continued where they were, recog- nizing the convenient proximity of Paris Garden, (where bears, bulls, &c., were baited, and in which they were also jointly interested) but for the success of the Lord Chamberlain's plays at the Globe, which had been in use four or five years. Hens- lowe and Alleyn seem to have found, that neither their plays nor their players could stand the competi- tion of their rivals, and they accordingly removed to a vicinity where no play-house had previously existed.

The Fortune theatre was commenced in Golding Lane, Cripplegate, in the year 1599, and finished in 1600, and thither without delay Henslowe and Alleyn transported their whole dramatic establishment, strengthened in the spring of 1602 by the ad- dition of that great and popular comic performer, William Kempe. The association at the Globe was the more in almost undisputed possession of the Bankside. There were, indeed, occasional, and perhaps not unfrequent, performances at the Rose, as well as at the Hope and the Swan, but not by the regular associations which had previously occupied them; and after the Fortune was opened, the spec- tation there was so profitable, that the Lord Ad- minal’s players had no motive for returning to their old quarters.

The members of the two companies belonging to the Lord Chamberlain and to the Lord Admiral appear to have possessed so much influence in the summer of 1600, that (backed perhaps by the puri- tanical zeal of those who were unfriendly to all the- atrical performances) they obtained an order from the privy council, dated 22d June, that no other public play-houses should be permitted but the Globe in Surrey, and the Fortune in Middlesex. Nevertheless, the privy council registers, where this order is inserted, also contain distinct evidence that it was not obeyed, even in May, 1601; for on the 10th of that month the Lords wrote to certain magistrates of Middlesex requiring them to put a stop to the performance of a play at the Curtain, in which were introduced “some gentlemen of good desert and quality, that are yet alive,” but saying nothing about the closing of the house, although it was open in defiance of the imperative command of the preceding year. It seems exactly as if re- strictive measures had been adopted in order to satisfy the importance of particular individuals, but that there was no disposition on the part of persons in authority to carry them into execution.

Besides the second edition of “Romeo and Juliet” in 1599, (which was most likely printed from a play- house manuscript, being very different from the mutilated and manufactured copy of 1597,) five plays by our great dramatist found their way to the press in 1600, viz.: “Titus Andronicus,” (which had probably been originally published in 1594,) “The Merchant of Venice,” “A Midsummer Night’s Dream,” “Henry IV.” part ii., and “Much Ado about Nothing.” The last only was not mentioned by Meres in 1598; and as to the periods when we may suppose the others to have been written, we must refer the reader to our Several Introductions, where we have given the existing information upon the subject. “The Chronicle History of Henry V.” also came out in the same year, but without the name of Shakespeare upon the title-page, and it is, if possible, a more imperfect and garbled representa- tion of the play, as it proceeded from the author’s pen, than the “Romeo and Juliet” of 1597. Wheth- er any of the managers of theatres at this date might sometimes be concerned in selling impressions of dramas, we have no sufficient means of deciding; but we do not believe it, and we are satisfied that dramatic authors in general were content with dis- pelling of their plays to the several companies, and looked for no encomium to be derived from publica- tion. We are not without something like proof that actors now and then sold their parts in plays to book-sellers, and thus, by the combination of them and other assistance, editions of popular plays were unreprintedly printed.

We ought not to pass over without notice a cir- cumstance which happened in 1600, and is con- nected with the question of the authorized or unau- thorized publication of Shakespeare’s plays. In that year a quarto impression of a play, called “The First part of the true and honorable History of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle, the good Lord Cobham,” came out, on the title-page of which the name of William Shakespeare appeared at length. This drama was in fact the authorship of four poets, An- thony Munday, Michael Drayton, Robert Wilson and Richard Hathway; and to attribute it to Shakespeare was evidently a mere trick by the bookseller, T[homas] H[unter], in the hope that it would be brought as his work. Malone remarked upon this fraud, but he failed to remark, when he wrote, that it had been detected and corrected at the time, for since his day more than one copy of the “First Part, &c. of Sir John Oldcastle” has come to light, upon the title- page of which no name is to be found, the book- seller apparently having been compelled to cancel the leaf containing it. From the indifference Shakes- peare seems uniformly to have displayed on matters of the kind, we may, possibly, conclude that the cancel was made at the instance of one of the four poets who were the real authors of the play; or, the step may have been in some way connected with the objection taken by living members of the Old- castle family to the name, which had been assigned by Shakespeare in the first instance to Falstaff.

CHAPTER XIV.

Death of John Shakespeare in 1601.—Performance of “Twelfth Night” in February, 1602.—Anecdote of Shake- speare and Burbage: Manningham’s Diary in the British Museum the authority for it.—“Othello,” acted by Bur- bague and others at the Lord Keeper’s in August, 1602. —Death of Elizabeth, and Arrival of James I. at Theo- bead—English actors in Scotland in 1589, and again in 1600 and 1601; large rewards to them—The freedom of Aberdeen conferred in 1601 upon Laurence Fletcher, the leader of the English company in Scotland.—Probability that Shakespeare never was in Scotland.

The father of our great poet died in the autumn of 1601, and he was buried at Stratford-upon-Avon. He seems to have left no will, and if he possessed any property, in land or houses, not made over to his family, we know not how it was divided. Of the eight children which his wife, Mary Arden, had brought him, the five following were then alive, and might be present at the funeral:—William, Gilbert, Joan, Richard, and Edmund. The latter years of John Shakespeare (who, if born in 1530 as Malone supposed, was in his seventy-first year) were doubt- less easy and comfortable, and the prosperity of his eldest son must have placed him beyond the reach of pecuniary difficulties.
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Early in the spring of 1602, we meet with one of those rare facts which distinctly show how uncertain all conjecture must be respecting the date when Shakespeare's dramas were originally written and produced. Malone and Tyrwhitt, in 1790, conjectured that "Twelfth Night" had been written in 1614; in his second edition Malone altered it to 1607, and Chalmers, weighing the evidence in favor of one date and of the other, thought neither correct, and fixed upon 1613, an opinion in which Dr. Drake fully concurred. The truth is, that we have irrefragable evidence, from an eye-witness, of its existence on 2d February, 1602, when it was played at the Globe to James I. in the Middle Temple. This eye-witness was a barrister of the name of Manningham, who left a Diary behind him, which has been preserved in the British Museum; but as we have inserted his account of the plot in our introduction to the comedy, no more is required here, than a mere mention of the circumstance. However, in another part of the same manuscript, he gives an anecdote of Shakespeare and Burbage, which we quote, without farther remark than that it has been supposed to depend upon the authority of Nicholas Tooley, but on looking at the original record again, we doubt whether it came from any such source. It was, very possibly, a mere invention of the "roguish players," originating, as was often the case, in some old story in the records of games and amusements, because their Christian names happened to be William and Richard.*

Elizabeth, from the commencement of her reign, seems to have extended her personal patronage, as well as her public countenance, to the drama; and scarcely a Christmas or a Shrovetide can be pointed out during the forty-five years in which we have any evidence of dramatic entertainments, either at Whitehall, Greenwich, Nonesuch, Richmond, or Windsor. The latest visit she paid to any of her nobility in the country was to the Lord Keeper, Sir Thomas Egerton, at Harefield, only nine or ten months before her death, and it was upon this occasion, in the very beginning of August, 1602, that "Othello" (on which the Earl of Oxford and the Lord Chamberlain's players brought down to the Lord Keeper's seat in Hertfordshire for the purpose) was represented before her. In this case, as in the preceding one respecting "Twelfth Night," all that we positively learn is that such a drama was performed, and we are left to infer that it was a new play from other circumstances, as well as from the fact that it was customary on such festivities to exhibit some drama that, as a novelty, was then attracting public attention. Hence we are led to believe, that "Twelfth Night" (not printed until it formed part of the folio of 1623) was written at the end of 1600, or in the beginning of 1601; and that "Othello" (first published in 4to, 1622) came from the same pen, as far as we can conjecture.

In the memorandum ascertaining the performance of "Othello" at Harefield, the company by which it was represented is called "Burbages Players," that designation arising out of the fact, that he was looked upon as the leader of the association: he was certainly its most celebrated actor, and we find from other sources that he was the representative of "the Moor of Venice." Whether Shakespeare had any and what part in the tragedy, either then or upon other occasions, is not known; but there can be little doubt that as an actor, and moreover as one "excellent in his quality," he must have been often seen and applauded by Elizabeth. Chettle informs us after her death, that she had "opened her royal ear to his lays!" but this was obviously in his capacity of dramatist and we have no direct evidence to establish that Shakespeare had ever performed at Court.

James I. reached Theobalds, in his journey from Edinburgh to London, on the 7th May, 1603. Before he quitted his own capital he had had various opportunities of witnessing the performances of English actors; and it is an interesting, but at the same time a difficult question, whether Shakespeare had ever appeared before him, or, in other words, whether our great dramatist had ever visited Scotland? We have certainly no affirmative testimony upon the point, beyond what may be derived from some passages in "Macbeth," descriptive of particular localities: there is, however, ample room for conjecture; and although, on the whole, we are inclined to think that Shakespeare visited the Tweed, it is indisputable that the company to which he belonged, or a part of it, had performed in Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and doubtless in some intermediate places. We will briefly state the existing proofs of this fact.

In 1589, Ashby, the ambassador extraordinary from England to James VI. of Scotland, thus wrote to Lord Burghley, under date of the 22d October:

"My Lord Bowes[ill] begins to show himself willing and ready to do her Majesty any service, and desires hereafter to be thought of as he shall deserve; he showeth great kindness to our nation, using her Majesties Players and Comedians with all courtesy."

In 1589, the date of Ashby's dispatch, Shakespeare had quitid Stratford about three years, and the question is, what company was intended to be designated as "her Majesty's players." It is an admitted fact, that in 1583 Queen Elizabeth selected twelve leading performers from the theatrical servants of some of her nobility, and they were afterwards called "her Majesty's players;" and we also now know, that in 1599 the Queen had two companies acting under her name; in the autumn of the preceding year, it is likely that one of these associations had been sent to the Scottish capital for the amusement of the young king, and the company formed in 1583 may have been divided into two bodies for this express purpose. We have no means of ascertaining the names of any of the players, or indeed their acting the parts of Richard III., Dutton, can we state who were the members of the Queen's two companies in 1590. Shakespeare might be one of them; but if he were, he might not belong to that division of the company which was dispatched to Scotland.

It is not at all improbable that English actors, having found their way north of the Tweed in 1589, would speedily repeat their visit; but the next we hear of them is, not until after a long interval, in the autumn of 1599. The public records of Scotland show that in October, 1599, £43, 6s. 8d. were delivered to "his Highness' self," to be given to "the English comedians:" in the next month they were paid £41, 12s. at various times. In December they received no less than £393, 6s. 8d.; in April, 1600, £10; and in December, 1601, the royal bounty amounted to £400.

Thus we see that English players were in Scotland from October, 1599, to December, 1601, a period of more than two years; but still we are without a particle of proof that Shakespeare was one of the association. We cannot, however, entertain a doubt that Laurence Fletcher (whose name, we shall see presently, stands first in the patent granted by King James on his arrival in London) was the leader of the association which performed in Edinburgh and elsewhere, because it appears from the registers of the town council of Aberdeen, that on the 9th October, 1601, the English players received 32 marks as a gratuity, and that on the 22d October the freedom of the city was conferred upon Laurence Fletcher, who is especially styled "John Fletcher and others.

Our chief reason for thinking it unlikely that Shakespeare would have accompanied his fellows to Scotland, at all events between October, 1599, and December, 1601, is that, as the principal writer for the company to which he was attached, he could not well have been spared, and because we have good ground for believing that about that period he must have been unusually busy in the composition of plays. No fewer than five dramas seem, as far as evidence, positive or conjectural, can be obtained, to belong to the interval between 1598 and 1602; and the proof appears to us tolerably conclusive, that "Henry V.," "Twelfth-Night," and "Hamlet," were written respectively in 1599, 1600, and 1601.

Besides, as far as we are able to decide such a point, the company to which our great dramatist belonged continued to perform in London; for although a detachment under Laurence Fletcher may have been sent to Scotland, the main body of the association called the Lord Chamberlain's players exhibited at court at the usual seasons in 1599, 1600, and 1601. Therefore, if Shakespeare visited Scotland at all, we think it must have been at an earlier period, and there was undoubtedly ample time between the years 1598 and 1599 for him to have done so. Nevertheless, we have no tidings that any English actors were in any part of Scotland during these ten years.

CHAPTER XV.

Proclamation by James I. against plays on Sunday.—Renewal of theatrical performances in London.—Pardon of May 17th, 1603, to Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, and others.—Royal patronage of three companies of actors.—Shakespeare's additional purchases in Stratford-upon-Avon.—Shakespeare in London in the autumn of 1601; and a candidate for the office of Master of the Queen's Revels.—Characters Shakespeare is known to have performed.—His retirement from the stage, as an actor, after April 9th, 1604.

Before he even act foot in London, James I. thought it necessary to put a stop to dramatic performances on Sunday. There had been, a long pending struggle between the Puritans and the players upon this point, and each party seemed by turns to gain the victory; for various orders were, from time to time, issued from authority, forbidding exhibitions of the kind on the Sabbath, and those orders had been uniformly more or less contravened. We may suppose, that strong remonstrances having been made to the King by some of those who attended him from Scotland, a clause with this special object was appended to a proclamation directed against monopolies and legal extortions. The King, having issued this command, arrived at the Chantry-house on the same day, and all the theatrical companies, which had temporarily suspended their performances, began to act again on the 9th May. Permission to this effect was given by James I. and communicated through the ordinary channel to the players, who soon found reason to rejoice in the new session of the new sovereign. Fourteen days after he reached London he took the Lord Chamberlain's players into his pay and patronage, calling them "the King's, servants," a title they always afterwards enjoyed. For this purpose he issued a warrant, under the privy seal, for making out a patent under the great seal, authorizing the nine following actors, and others, to perform in his connection not only at the Globe on the Bankside, but in any part of the kingdom; viz, Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, Richard Burbage, Augustine Phillippes, John Heninge, Henry Condell, William Sly, Robert Army, and Richard Cowley.

We miss from this list the names of Thomas Pope, William Kempe, and Nicholas Tooley, who had been in the company in 1596; and instead of them we have Laurence Fletcher, Henry Condell, and Robert Army, with the addition of Richard Cowley. Kempe and Tooley, however, subsequently rejoined the association with which they had been so long connected.

We may assume, perhaps, in the absence of any direct evidence, that what Laurence Fletcher did not acquire his prominence in the company by any remarkable excellence as an actor, but rather by the favor of the King, or perhaps from the fact that he was a considerable sharer in the association. The name of Shakespeare comes next, and as author, actor, and sharer, we cannot be surprised at the situation he occupies. His progress upward, in connection with the profession, had been gradual and uniform: in 1589 he was twelfth in a company of sixteen members; in 1596 he was fifth in a company of eight members; and in 1603 he was second in a company of nine members.

The degree of encouragement and favor extended to actors by James I. in the very commencement of his reign is remarkable. Not only were the Lord Chamberlain's players into his own service, but the Queen adopted the company which had acted under the name of the Earl of Worcester, and the Prince of Wales that of the Lord Admiral, at the head of which was Edward Alleyn, the founder of Dulwich College. These three royal associations, as they may be termed, were independent of others under the patronage of individual noblemen.

The policy of this course at such a time is evident, and James I. seems to have been impressed with the truth of the passage in "Hamlet," (brought out, as we apprehend, very shortly before he came to the throne) where it is said of these "abstracts and brief chronicles of the time," that it is "better to have them than their ill opinion of us live." James made himself sure of their good report; and an epigram, attributed to Shakespeare, has descended to us, which doubtless was intended in some sort as a grateful return for the royal countenance bestowed upon the stage, and upon those who were connected with it. The lines are entitled,

"Crowns have their compass, length of days their date, Triumphs their tomb, felicity her site: Of snares and snares earth can make us partaker, But knowledge makes a king most like his Maker."
Having established his family in the "great house" called "New Place" in his native town in 1597, by the purchase of it from Hercules Underhill, Shakespeare seems to have contemplated considerable additions to his property there. In May, 1602, he laid out £320 upon 107 acres of land, which he bought of William and John Combe, and attached it to his dwelling. In the autumn of the same year he became the owner of a copyhold tenement (called a cotagium in the instrument) in Walker's Street, alias dead Lane, Stratford, surrendered to him by Walter Gjetley. In November of the next year he gave £60 for a messuage, barn, granary, garden, and orchard, close to or in Stratford; but in the original fine, preserved in the Chapter House, Westminster, the precise situation is not mentioned. In 1603, therefore, Shakespeare's property, in or near Stratford-upon-Avon, besides what he might have bought of, or inherited from, his father, consisted of New Place, with 107 acres of land attached to it, a tenement in Walker's Street, and the additional messuage, which he had recently purchased from Underhill.

Whether our great dramatist was in London at the period when the king ascended the throne, we have no means of knowing, but that he was so in the following autumn we have positive proof; for in a letter written by Mrs. Alleyn (the wife of Edward Alleyn, the actor) to her husband, then in the country, dated 26th October, 1603, she tells him that she had seen "Mr. Shakespeare of the Globe" in Southwark. At this date, according to the same authority, most of the companies of players who had left London for the provinces, on account of the prevalence of the plague, and the consequent cessation of dramatic performances, had returned to the metropolis.

Under Elizabeth, the Children of the Chapel (originally the choir-boys of the royal establishment) had become an acknowledged company of players, and these, besides their association of adult performers, Queen Anne took under her immediate patronage, with the style of the Children of her Majesty. wanting that to which he proposed to represent should first be submitted to, and have the approval of, the celebrated poet Samuel Daniel. The instrument of their appointment bears date 30th January, 1603-4; and from a letter from Daniel to his patron, Sir Thomas Egerton, preserved among his papers, we may perhaps conclude that Shakespeare, as well as Michael Drayton, had been candidates for the post of master of the Queen's revels: he says in it, "I cannot but know, that I am less desirous than some that availed other of the nobility unto her Majesty for this room;" and, after introducing the name of "his good friend," Drayton, he adds the following, which, we apprehend, refers with sufficient distinctness to Shakespeare: "It seemed to my humble judgement that you who is the proper, next day duly presented on the public stages of London, and the possessor of no small gains, and moreover himself an actor in the King's company of comedians, could not with reason pretend to be a Master of the Queen's Majesties Revels, for as much as he wold sometimes be asked to approve and allow of his own writings." This objection would have applied with equal force to Drayton, and we need not believe that before this date he had ceased to be a dramatic author.

It is highly probable that Shakespeare was a servant or for this office, in contemplation of a speedy retirement as an actor. We have already spoken of the presumed excellence of his personations on the stage, and to the tradition that he was the original player of the part of the Ghost in "Hamlet." Another character he is said to have sustained is Adam, in "As you like it," and his brother Gilbert, (who in 1602 had received, on behalf of William Shakespeare, the 107 acres of land purchased from William and John Combe) who probably survived the Restoration, is supposed to have been the author of this tradition. He had acted also in Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humor," in 1598, after (as we believe) introducing it to the company, and he is supposed to have written part of, as well as known to have performed in, the same author's "Scianus," in 1603. This is the last we hear of him upon the stage, but that he continued a member of the company until April 9, 1604, we have the evidence of a document preserved at Dulwich College, where the names of the King's players are enumerated in the following order: William Shakespeare, Fletcher, Phillips, Condell, Hensinge, Armys, Silly, Cowley, Ostler, and Day. If Shakespeare had not then actually ceased to perform, we need not hesitate in deciding that the profession very shortly afterwards.

CHAPTER XVI.

No wonder had our great dramatist ceased to take part in the public performances of the King's players, than the company appears to have thrown off the restraint by which it had been usually controlled ever since its formation, and to have produced plays which were objectionable to the court, as well as offensive to private persons. Shakespeare, from his abilities, station, and experience, must have possessed great influence with the body at large, and due deference, we may say, he had, was shown to his knowledge and judgment in the selection and acceptance of plays sent in for approbation by authors of the time.

The contrast between the conduct of the association immediately before, and immediately after his retirement, would lead us to conclude, not only that he was a man of prudence and discretion, but that the exercise of these qualities had in many instances kept his fellows from incurring the displeasure of persons in power, and from exciting the animosity of particular individuals. We suppose Shakespeare to have ceased to act in the summer of 1604, and in the winter of that very year we find the King's players giving offence to "some great counsellors" by performing a play upon the subject.
of Gowry's conspiracy. This fact we have upon the evidence of one of Sir R. Winwood's corre-spendents, John Chambréllain, who, in a letter dated 18th December, 1604, uses these expressions: "The tragedy of Gowry, with all action and actors, hath been twice represented by the King's players, with exceeding concourse of all sorts of people, but whether the matter or manner be not well judged, or that it be thought unfit that princely should be played on the stage in their lifetime, I hear that some great counsellors are much displeased with it, and so, it is thought, shall be forbidden." WHETHER IT was so forbidden we do not hear upon the same or any other authority, but no such drama has come down to us.
In the next year Sir Leonard Halden, then Lord
Mayor of London, backed no doubt by his brethren of the corporation, made a complaint against the same company, "that Kempe, (who at this date had rejoined the association) Army, and others, players at the Blackfriars, have again not forborne to bring upon their stage one or more of the worsipful aldermen of the city of London, to their great shame, without the least appraisement of his birth, and the interposition of the privy council to prevent the abuse was therefore solicited. What was done in consequence does not appear in any extant document.
In the spring of the next year a still graver charge was brought against the body of actors of whom Shakespeare was one and who had been enough and it originated in no less a person than the French ambassador. George Chapman had written two plays upon the history and execution of the Duke of Biron, containing, in the shape in which they were originally produced on the stage, such matter that M. Beaumont, the representative of the King of France in London, thought it necessary to remonstrate against the repetition, and the performance of it was prohibited: as soon, however, as the court had quitted London, the King's players permitted in acting it; in consequence of which three of the players were arrested, (their names are not given) but the author made his escape. These two dramas were printed in 1608, and again in 1605;
and, if I am not mistaken, their being able to cover anything, beyond the historical incidents, which could have given offence; but the truth certainly is, that all the objectionable portions were omitted in the press: there can be no doubt, on the authority of the despatch from the French ambassador to his court, that one of the dramas originally contained a scene in which the Queen of France and Mademoiselle Veneau were introduced, the former, after having abused her, giving the latter a box on the ear.
This information was conveyed to Paris under the date of the 5th April, 1606; and the French ambassador, apparently in order to make his court acquainted with the lawless character of dramatic performance here, and add more weight to his very singular paragraph, proving that the King's players, only a few days before they had brought the Queen of France upon the stage, had not hesitated to intrude upon the same boards their own reigning sovereign, "and all his favorites, in a very strange fashion: they made him curse and swear because he had been robbed of a bird, and beat a gentleman, because he had called off the bounds from the scnt.
They represent him as drunk at least once a day," &c. This course indicates a most extraordinary degree of boldness on the part of the players; but, nevertheless, they were not prohibited from acting, until
M. Beaumont had directed the attention of the public authorities to the insult offered to the Queen of France: then, an order was issued putting a stop to the acting of all plays in London; but, according to the same authority, the companies had clapped their money, and, attacking James I. on his weak side, had offered the large sum of 100,000 livres to pro-continue their performances. The French ambas-dor himself apprehended that the appeal to the King's peculiar wants would be effectual, and that permission, under certain restrictions, would not long be withheld.
Whatever emoluments Shakespeare had derived from the Blackfriars or the Globe theatre, as an actor or as a dramatist, he seems to have, for, in 1605, he was nevertheless, they were not prohibited from acting, until pliment paid to him in “Macbeth”; the Duke of Buckingham is said to have had Davenant’s evidence for this anecdote, which was first told in print in the advertisement to Linton’s edition of Shakespeare’s Poems in 1710. Rowe says nothing of it in his “Life” and it seems very improbable that James Linton could have possibly concocted, and very probable that the writer of Linton’s advertisement should not have been very scrupulous. We may conjecture, that a privy seal under the sign manual, granting to the King’s players some extraordinary reward on the occasion, has been misrepresented as a private letter from the King to the dramatist.

The eldest daughter of Mary and Anne Shakespeare, Susanna, has been born in May, 1583, was rather more than twenty-four years old when she was married, on 5th June, 1607, to Mr. John Hall, of Stratford, who is styled “gentleman” in the register, but he was a professor of medicine, and subsequently practised as a physician. There appears to have been no reason on any side for opposing the marriage, for we may conjecture that the ceremony was performed in the presence of our great dramatist, during one of his summer excursions to his native town. About six months afterwards he lost his brother Edmund, and his mother in the autumn of the succeeding year.

There is no doubt that Edmund Shakespeare, who was born on the 9th Sept. 1582, and had died at the time of his death, had embraced the profession of an actor, for in the register of his death at St. Saviour’s, Southwark, he is specified, rather unusually, as “a player.” We, however, never meet with his name in any list of the associations of the time, nor is he mentioned as an actor among the characters of any old play with which we are acquainted; and therefore, that he attained no eminence; perhaps his principal employment might be under his brother in the management of his theatrical concerns, while he only took inferior parts when the assistance of a larger number of performers than usual was necessary.

Mary Shakespeare survived her son Edmund about eight months, and was buried at Stratford on the 9th Sept. 1608. There are few points of his life which can be stated with more confidence than that our great dramatist attended the funeral of his mother: filial piety and duty would of course impel him to visit Stratford on the occasion, and in proof that he did so, we may mention that on the 16th of the next month he sold his godfather there to a boy of the name of William Walker. Shakespeare’s mother had probably resided at New Place, the house of her son; from whence, we may presume also, the body of her husband had been carried to the grave seven years before. If she were of full age when she was married to John Shakespeare in 1557, she was about 72 years old at the time of her decease.

The reputation of our poet as a dramatist seems at this period to have been at its height. His “King Lear” was printed three times for the same bookseller in 1603; and in order perhaps to increase its sale, (as well as to secure the purchaser against the old “King Lear,” a play upon the same story, being given to him instead,) the name of “Mr. William Shakespeare” was placed very condescendingly, and most unusually, at the top of the title-page. The same observation will in part apply to “Pericles,” which came out in 1609, with the name of the author greatly displayed, although in the ordinary place. “Troilus and Cressida,” which was published in the same year, also has the name of the author very nearly legible, but in a somewhat smaller type. In both the latter cases, it would likewise seem, that there were plays by older or rival dramatists upon the same incidents. The most noticeable proof of the advantage which a bookseller conceived he should derive from the announcement that the work he published was written by Shakespeare, is found on the title-page of the collection of his dispersed sonnets, which was ushered into the world as “Shakespeare’s Sonnets,” in very large capitals, as if that mere fact would be held a sufficient recommendation.

In a former part of our memoir we have alluded to the circumstance, that in 1602 Shakespeare was rated to the value of Liberty of the Clink in a sum which might possibly indicate that he was the occupant of a commodious dwelling-house in Southwark. The fact that our great dramatist paid sixpence a week to the poor there, (as high a sum as anybody in that immediate vicinity was assessed at,) is stated in the account of the Life of Edward Alleyn, preserved by the existing evidence better, and there it is too hastily inferred that he was rated at this sum upon a dwelling-house occupied by himself. This is very possibly the fact; but, on the other hand, the truth may be, that he paid the rate not for any habitation, good or bad, large or small, but in respect of his theatrical property in the Globe, which was situated at the same time in the register of St. Saviour’s establishes, that in 1601 the churchwardens had been instructed by the vestry “to talk with the players” respecting the payment of tithes and contributions to the maintenance of the poor; and it is not very unlikely that some arrangement was made under which the sharers in the Globe, and Shakespeare as one of them, would be assessed. It is not unlikely that he was the occupier of a substantial dwelling-house in the immediate neighborhood of the Globe, where his presence and assistance would often be required; and the amount of his income at this period would warrant such an expenditure, although we have no reason for thinking that such a house would be needed for his wife and family, because the existing evidence is opposed to the notion that they ever resided with him in London.

CHAPTER XVII.

Attempt of the Lord Mayor and aldermen in 1608 to expel the King’s players from the Blackfriars, and its failure.

-Negotiation by the corporation to purchase the theatre and its appurtenances; interest not property of Shakespeare and other sharers.—The income of Richard Burbage at his death.—Duty of the Rev. A. Ward, Vicar of Stratford, and his statement regarding Shakespeare’s expenditure.—Copy of a letter from Lord Southampton on behalf of the Blackfriars.—Probable decision of Lord Chancellor Ellesmere in favor of the company at the Blackfriars theatre.

We have referred to the probable amount of the income of our great dramatist in 1609, and a document has been lately discovered, which enables us to form some judgment of the sum he annually derived from the private theatre in the Blackfriars. From the date published by our bkaking, the Lord Mayor and aldermen of London had been hostile to the establishment of players within this precinct, and, as we have already shown, they had made several fruitless efforts to dislodge them. The attempt was renewed in 1608, when Sir Henry Montagu, the Attorney General of the day, gave an opinion in favor of the claim of the citizens to exercise their municipal powers within the precinct of the late dissolved monsterty of the Blackfriars. The question seems in some shape to have been brought before Baron Ellesmere, then Lord Chancellor of England, who required from the Lord Mayor and his brethren proofs that they had exercised any authority in the disputed liberty. As far as we can judge, no such proofs, applicable to any recent period, were forthcoming. Lord Ellesmere, therefore, we may conclude, was opposed to the claim of the city.

Failing in this endeavor to expel the King's players by force of law, the corporation appears to have taken a milder course, and proceeded with the purchase of the Blackfriars theatre, with all its properties and appurtenances. To this negotiation we are probably indebted for a paper, which shows with great exactness and particularity the amount of interest then claimed by each sharer, those sharers being Richard Burbage, Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, John Hamilton, Henry Condell, Joseph Taylor, and John Lowin, with four other persons not named, each the owner of half a share.

From this document we learn that Richard Burbage was the owner of the freehold or fee, (which he no doubt inherited from his father,) as well as the owner of four shares, the value of all which, together, is estimated not less than £1,200. Lawrence Fletcher (if it be he, for the Christian name is written "Laz.") was proprietor of three shares, for which he claimed £700. Shakespeare was proprietary of the wardrobe and properties of the theatre, estimated at £500, as well as four shares, valued, like those of Burbage and Fletcher, at £250, 6s. 8d.
each, or £250, 6s. 8d., at seven years' purchase:
his entire purchase was £1,450, 6s. 8d., or £1,300, less than that of Burbage, inasmuch as the fee was considered worth £1,000, while Shakespeare's wardrobe and properties were valued at £500.

Heminge and Condell each required £466, 13a. 4d.
for their two shares, and Taylor £500 for his share and a half, while the four unnamed half-sharers put in their claim for £250, 6s. 8d., at seven years' compensation at the same rate, inasmuch as their share of the Blackfriars theatre made up the value of £6,166, 13a. 4d., and to this sum was to be added remuneration to the hired men of the company, who were not sharers, all as well to the widows and orphans of deceased actors: the purchase-money of the whole property was thus raised to at least £700.

Each share, out of the twenty into which the re-cipts of the theatre were divided, yielded, as was alleged, an annual profit of £33, 6s. 8d.; and Shakespeare owning four of these shares, his annual income, from them only, was £133, 6s. 8d. : he was besides proprietor of the wardrobe and properties, stated to be worth £500: these, we may conclude,
he leased to the company for a certain period, and, reckoning wear and tear at ten per cent, which seems a very low rate of payment, would add £50 a year to the £133, 6s. 8d. already mentioned, making together £183, 6s. 8d., besides what our great dramatist must have gained by the profits of his pen, upon which we have no data for forming an estimate.
With or without anything on this account, and supposing only that the Globe was a percentage of a summer theatre as the Blackfriars was for a winter theatre, it is evident that Shakespeare's income could hardly have been less than £366, 13a. 4d.
Taking every known source of emolument into view, we consider £400 a year the very lowest amount at which his income can be reckoned in
depository of his papers, and not merely a transcript of it; but a copy of it may have been furnished to the Lord Chancellor, in order to give him some information respecting the characters of the parties upon whose cause he was called upon to decide. It would have stood through the existence of his sovereign: he had many important public duties to discharge besides those belonging to his great office; and notwithstanding he had shown himself at all times a liberal patron of letters, and had made many works of value dedicated to him, we may really imagine, that although he must have heard of Shakespeare and Burbage, he was not specially dependent on them as to the history of individual deserts, which this communication was intended to remove.

We have introduced an exact copy of the document in a note, and it will be observed that it is without date; but the subject of it shows beyond dispute that it belongs to this period. There can be no doubt that the object the players had in view was attained, because we know that the King's servants continued to occupy the theatre long after the death of Shakespeare.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Warrant to Daborne, Shakespeare, Field, and Kirkham, for the Children of the Queen's Revels, in January, 1610.

Proving whereby they admitted some companies of actors—Copy of Daborne's warrant, and the reasons for it.—Shakespeare's draws between 1609 and 1612—His retirement to Stratford, and disposal of his property in the Blackfriars and Globe theatres.—Shakespeare's purchase of a house in Blackfriars from Henry Walker in 1613, and the possible cause of it. Mentioned—Shakespeare described as of Stratford-upon-Avon.

It is a fact, of which it may be said we have conclusive proof, that almost from the first, if not from the first, the Blackfriars theatre had been in the joint possession of the Lord Chamberlain's servants and of a juvenile company called the Children of the Chapel: they were also known as "her Majestv's Children," and "the Children of the Blackfriars;" and it is not to be supposed that they employed to pay for these shares of property with the older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars.

The success of the juvenile companies in the commencement of the reign of James I, and even at the latter end of that of Elizabeth, was great; and we find Shakespeare alluding to it in very pointed terms in a well-known passage in "Hamlet," which we suppose to have been written in the winter of 1601, or in the spring of 1602. They seem to have gone on increasing in popularity, and very soon after James I ascended the throne, Queen Anne took a company, called "the Children of the Queen's Revels," under her honourable patronage. There is no reason to doubt that they continued to perform at Blackfriars, and in the very commencement of the year 1610 we find that Shakespeare either was, or intended to be, connected with them. At this period he probably contemplated an early retirement from the metropolis, and might wish to avail himself, for a short period, of this new opportunity of private employment.

Robert Daborne, the author of two dramas that have been printed, and of several others that have been lost, seems to have been a man of good family, and of some interest at court; and in January 1609-10, he was able to procure a royal grant, authorizing him and others to provide and offer a number of young actors, called "the Children of the Queen's Revels." Daborne was placed at the head of this association; and not, perhaps, having sufficient means or funds of his own, he had, as was not unusual, partners in the undertaking: those partners were William Shakespeare, Nathaniel Field, (the celebrated actor, and very clever author,) and Edward Kirkham, who had previously enjoyed a privilege of the same kind. In the "Entry Book of Patents and Warrants for Patents" we find a draft of the warrant under which Daborne and his partners, therein named, viz: Shakespeare, Field, and Kirkham, were to proceed; and it is a circumstance deserving notice, that "the Children of the Queen's Revels" were thereby licenced not only to act "tragedies, comedies," &c. in the Blackfriars theatre, but to "enjoy all the freedom of the realm of England," so that even places where the city authorities had indisputably a right to exercise jurisdiction were not excepted.

We may be satisfied, however, that the warrant of 1609-10 to Daborne and his partners was not carried into effect: although it may have been decided at this date that the lord mayor and aldermen had no power forcibly to exclude the actors from the Blackfriars, it may have been held inexpedient to go the length of authorizing a young company to act within the very boundaries of the city. So far the corporation may have prevailed, and this may be the cause why we never hear of any steps having been taken under the warrant of 1609-10. The word
"stayed" is added at the conclusion of the draft, as if some good ground had been discovered for delaying, if not for entirely withholding it. Certain it is, that the new scheme seems to have been entirely abandoned; and whatever Shakespeare may have intended when he became connected with it, he continued, as long as he remained in London, and as far as any evidence enables us to judge, to write only for the company of the King's players, who persevered in their performances at the Blackfriars in the winter, and at the Globe in the summer.

"Troilus and Cressida" and "Pericles" were printed in 1609, and to our mind there seems but little doubt that they had been written and prepared for the stage only after it appeared they came from the press. With the single exception of "Cymbeline," which came out in 4to in 1622, no other new drama by Shakespeare appeared in a printed form between 1609 and the date of the publication of the folio in 1623. We need not here discuss what plays, first found in that volume, were penned by our great dramatist after 1609, because we have separately assigned them the place of each in our preliminary Introductions. "Timon of Athens," "Coriolanus," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Cymbeline," "The Winter's Tale," and "The Tempest," seem to belong to a late period of our poet's theatrical career, and some of them were doubtless written between 1609 and the period, whatever that period may be, when he entirely relinquished dramatic composition.

Between January 1609-10, when Shakespeare was one of the parties to whom the warrant for the Children of the Queen's Revels was conceded, and the year 1612, when it has been reasonably supposed that he quitied London to take up his permanent residence at Stratford, we are in possession of no materials connected with his personal history. It would seem both natural and prudent that, before he withdrew from the metropolis, he should dispose of his theatrical property, which must necessarily be of fluctuating and uncertain value, depending much upon the presence and activity of the owner for its profitable management. In his will he says nothing of any such property, and we are left to infer that he disposed of it before he finally retired to Stratford.

It is to be recollected also that the species of interest he had in the Blackfriars theatre, independently of his shares in the receipts, was peculiarly perishable: it consisted of the wardrobe and properties, which in 1609, were valued at £500: and we may feel assured that he would sell them to the company which had had the constant use of them, and doubtless had paid an annual consideration to the owner.

Whatever, in fact, became of Shakespeare's interest in the Blackfriars theatre, both as a sharer and as the owner of the wardrobe and properties, we are not in a position to say. In concluding that, in the then prosperous state of theatrical affairs in the metropolis, he was easily able to procure a purchaser,

He must also have had a considerable stake in the Globe, but whether he was also the owner of the same species of property there, as at the Blackfriars, we can only speculate. There is no hint in any existing document what became of our great dramatist's interest in the Globe; but here again we need not doubt, from the profit that had always attended the undertaking, that he could have had no difficulty in finding parties to take it off his hands. Burbage we know was rich, for he died in 1619 worth £300 a year in hand, besides his personal property, and he and others would have been glad to add to their capital, so advantageously employed, by purchasing Shakespeare's interest. The circumstance of the nature of our great dramatist's property in the two theatres seems to authorize the conclusion, that he sold it before he retired to the place of his birth. It is supposed that many of the plays of his last years were written from his days with his family, in the tranquil enjoyment of the independence he had secured by the exertions of five and twenty years.

It is possible, as we have said, that Shakespeare continued to employ his pen for the stage after his retirement to Stratford, and the buyers of his shares might even make it a condition that he should do so for a time; but we much doubt whether, with his long experience of the necessity of personal superintendence, he would have continued a shareholder in any concern of the kind over which he had no control. During the whole of his life in connection with the stage, even after he quit it as an actor, he seems to have been obliged to reside in London, apart from his family, for the purpose of watching over his interest in the two theatres to which he belonged: had he been merely an author, after he ceased to be an actor, he might have composed his dramas as well at Stratford as in London, visiting the metropolis only while a new play was in rehearsal and preparation; but such was clearly not the case, and we may be confident that when he retired to a place so distant from the scene of his triumphs, he did not allow his mind to be encumbered by the continuance of professional anxieties.

It may seem difficult to reconcile with this consideration the undoubted fact, that in the spring of 1613 Shakespeare purchased a house, and a small piece of ground attached to it, not far from the Blackfriars theatre, in which we believe him to have disposed of his concern in the preceding year. The documents relating to this transaction have come down to us, and the indenture assigning the property from Henry Walker, "citizen of London and minstrel of London," to William Shakespeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman," bears date 10th March, 1612-'13: the consideration was £140; the house was situated "within the precinct, circuit, and command of the late Blackfriars," and we are further informed that it stood "right against his Majesty's Wardrobe." It appears to have been merely a dwelling-house with a small yard, and not in any way connected with the theatre, which was at some distance from the royal wardrobe, although John Heminge, the actor, was, with Shakespeare, a party to the deed, as well as William Johnson, vintner, and John Jackson, gentleman.

Shakespeare may have made this purchase as an accommodation in some way to his "friend and fellow." Heminge, and the two other persons named; and it is to be remarked that, on the day after the date of the conveyance, Shakespeare mortgaged the house to Henry Walker, the vendor, for £60, having paid down only £80, on the 10th March. It is very possible that our poet advanced the £80 to Heminge, Johnson, and Jackson, expecting that they would repay him, and furnish the remaining £80 before the 29th September, 1613, the time stipulated in the mortgage deed; but as they did not do so, but left it to him, the house of course continued the property of Shakespeare, and after his death, in accordance with the provisions of his will, it became the possession of his daughter Susanna.

Shakespeare must have been in London when he put his signature to the conveyance; but we are to recollect, that the circumstance of his being described in it as "of Stratford-upon-Avon" is by no means decisive of the fact, that his usual place of abode in the spring of 1610 was his native town: he had a similar description in the deeds by which he purchased 107 acres of land from John and William Combe in 1602, and a lease of a moiety of the tithes from Ralph Huband in 1605, although it is indubitable that at those periods he was generally resident in London. We are thoroughly convinced, however, that, anterior to March, 1613, Shakespeare had taken up his permanent residence with his family at Stratford.

Members of the Shakespeare family at Stratford in 1612.—Joan Shakespeare and William Hart: their marriage and family.—William Shakespeare's chancy suit respecting the tithes of Stratford, and the income he derived from the lease.—The Globe burnt in 1613: its reconstruction.—Destructive fire at Stratford in 1614.—Shakespeare's visit to London afterwards.—Proposed inclosure of Welcomes.—The Shakespeare Society.—The Shakespearian poems of "The Ghost of Richard the Third," published in 1614.

The immediate members of the Shakespeare family resident at this date (1612) in Stratford were comparatively few. Richard Shakespeare had died at the age of forty, only about a month before William Shakespeare signed the deed for the purchase of the house in Blackfriars. Since the death of Edmund, Richard had been our poet's youngest brother, but regarding his way of life at Stratford we have no information. Gilbert Shakespeare, born two years and a half after William, was also probably at this time an inhabitant of the borough, or its immediate neighborhood, and perhaps married, for in the register, under date of 3d February, 1611-12, we read an account of the burial of "Gilbertus Shakspere, adolescens," who might be his son. Joan Shakespeare, who was five years younger than her brother William, had been married at about the age of twenty to William Hart, a Stratford weaver, and farmer. Their first child, William, was baptized on the 28th August, 1600, and they had afterwards children of the names of Mary, Thomas, and Michael, born respectively in 1603, 1605, and 1608. Our poet's eldest daughter, Susanna, who, as we have elsewhere stated, was married to Mr. John, afterwards Dr. Hall, in June, 1607, gave birth to a daughter who was baptized Elizabeth on the 21st February, 1607-8; so that Shakespeare was a grandfather before he had reached his forty-fifth year; but Mrs. Hall had no further increase of family.

By whom New Place, otherwise called "the great house," was inhabited at this period, we can only conjecture. That Shakespeare's wife and his youngest daughter Judith (who completed her twenty-eighth year in February, 1612) resided in it, we cannot doubt; but as it would be much more than they would require, even after they were permanently joined by our great dramatist on his retirement from London, we may perhaps conclude that Mr. and Mrs. Hall were joint occupiers of it, and aided in keeping up the vivacity of the family circle. Shakespeare himself only completed his forty-eighth year in April, 1613, and every tradition and circumstance of his life tends to establish not only the gentleness and kindness, but the habitual cheerfulness of his disposition.

Nevertheless, although we suppose him to have separated himself from the labors and anxieties attendant upon his theatrical concerns, he was not without his annoyances, though of a different kind. We refer here to a suit in which he seems to have been involved by the purchase, in 1605, of the remaining term of a lease of part of the tithes of Stratford. It appears that a rent of £27, 13s. 6d. was reserved, which was to be paid by certain losses under peril of forfeiture, but that some of the parties, disregarding the consequences, had refused to contribute their proportion; and Richard Lane, of Avston, Esquire, Thomas Greene, of Stratford-upon-Avon, Esquire, and William Shakespeare, "of Stratford-upon-Avon, gentleman," were under the necessity of filing a bill before Lord Ellesmere, to compel all the persons deriving estates under the dissolved college of Stratford to pay their shares. What was the issue of the suit is not anywhere stated; and the only important point in the draft of the statement of the case is that the Shakespeare Society, is, that our great dramatist therein stated the value of his "moiety" of the tithes to be £60 per annum.

In the summer of 1613 a calamity happened which we do not believe affected our author's immediate interests, on account of the strong probability that he had taken care to dispose of all his theatrical property before he finally took up his residence in his birth-place. The Globe, which had been in use for about eighteen years, was burned down on the 29th June, 1613, in consequence of the thatch, with which it was partially covered, catching fire from the discharge of some theatrical artillery. It is doubtful what play was then in a course of representation; Sir Henry Wotton gives it the title of "All is True," and calls it "a new play;" while Hovey, in his continuation of Stowe's Annals, distinctly states that it was "Henry the Eighth." The Globe was rebuilt in the next year, as we are told on what may be considered good authority, at the cost of King James and of many noblemen and gentlemen, who seem to have contributed sums of money for the purpose. Although Shakespeare might not be in any way considerably affected by the event, we may be sure that he would not be backward in using his influence, and perhaps in rendering assistance by a gift of money, for the reconstruction of a playhouse in which he had often acted, from which he had derived so much profit, and in the continuance of the performances at which so many of his friends and fellows were deeply interested.

He must himself have had an escape from a similar disaster at Stratford in the very next year. Fires had broken out in the borough in 1594 and 1595, which had destroyed many of the houses; but that which occurred on the 9th July, 1614, seems to have done damage to those beyond proportion. At the instance of various gentlemen in the neighborhood, including Sir Fulke Greville, Sir Richard Verney, and Sir Thomas Lucy, King James issued a proclamation, or brief, dated 11th May, 1615, in favor of the inhabitants of Stratford, authorizing the collection of donations in the different churches of the kingdom for the restoration of the town; and

* It has been generally stated that Charles Hart, the celebrated actor after the restoration, was the grandson of Shakespeare, son to the eldest son of Shakespeare's sister Joan, but we are without positive evidence upon the point. In 1612 a person of the name of Hart kept a house of entertainment close to the Fortune theatre, and he may have been the son of Shakespeare's sister Joan, and the father of Charles Hart the actor, who died about 1679.

alleging that within two hours the fire had consumed "fifty-four dwelling-houses, many of them being very fine houses, besides barns, stables, and other houses of office, together also with great store of corn, hay, straw, wood, and timber." The amount of loss is stated, on the same authority, to be "eight thousand pounds and upwards." What was the issue of this charitable appeal to the whole kingdom, we know not.

It is very certain that the dwelling of our great dramatist, called New Place, escaped the conflagration, and his property, as far as we can judge, to have been preserved in a part of the

The name of Shakespeare is not found among those of the inhabitants whose certificate was stated to be the immediate ground for issuing the royal brief, but it is not at all unlikely that he was instrumental in obtaining it. We are sure that he was in London, and in November following the fire, and possibly was taking some steps in favor of his fellow-townsmen. However, his principal business seems to have related to the projected inclosure of certain common lands in the neighborhood of Stratford in which he had an interest. Some inquiries as to the rights of various parties were instituted in September, 1614, as we gather from a document yet preserved, and which is now before us. The individuals whose claims are set out are, "Mr. Shakespeare," Thomas Parker, Mr. Lane, Sir Francis Smith, Mace, Arthur Cawdrey, and "Mr. Wright, vicar of Bishopton." All that it is necessary to quote is the following, which refers to Shakespeare, and which, like the rest, is placed under the head of "Ancient Freethinkers in the fields of Old Stratford and Welcome."

"Mr. Shakespeare, 4 yard land; noe common, nor ground beyond Gospel Hill; noe ground in Sandiford, nor none in Slow Hill field beyond Bishopton, nor none in the enclosures beyond Bishopton."

The date of this paper is 5th September, 1614, and as we have said, we may presume that it was chiefly upon this business that Shakespeare came to London on the 16th November. It should appear that Thomas Greene, of Stratford, was officially opposing the inclosure on the part of the corporation; and it is probable that Shakespeare's wishes were accordant with those of the majority of the inhabitants: however this might be, (and it is liable to dispute, as the majority of the members of the municipal body of the borough were nearly unanimous, and, as far as we can learn from the imperfect particulars remaining upon this subject, they wished our poet to use his influence to resist the project, which seems to have been supported by Mr. Arthur Mainwaring, then resident in the family of Lord Ellesmere as auditor of his domestic expenditures.

It is very likely that Shakespeare saw Mainwaring; and, as it was only five or six years since his name had been especially brought under the notice of the Lord Chancellor, in relation to the claim of the city authorities to jurisdiction in the Blackfriars, it is not impossible that Shakespeare may have had an interview with Lord Ellesmere, who seemed to have been of a very accessible and kindly disposition. A petition was also prepared and presented to the privy council, and we may gather that the opposition was effectual, because nothing was done in the business: the common fields of Welcombe, which it had been intended to inclose, remained open for pasture as before.

How soon after the matter relating to the inclosure had been settled Shakespeare returned to Stratford,—how long he remained there, or whether he ever came to London again,—we are without information. He was probably in the metropolis at the time when a new play, "Richard III.," was published, and which until now has escaped observation, although it contains the clearest allusion, not indeed by name, to our author and to his tragedy. It is called "The Ghost of Richard the Third," and it bears date in 1614; but the writer, C. B., only gives his initials, and we know not to what period of time it can properly be referred, or to whom they would apply, excepting Charles Best, who has several pieces in Davison's "Poetical Rhapsody," 1602, but he has left nothing behind him to indicate that he would be capable of a work of such power and variety. It is divided into three portions, the "Chanson," the "Legend," and the "Tragedy" of Richard III.; and the second part opens with the following stanzas, which show the high estimate the writer had formed of the genius of Shakespeare: they are extremely interesting as a contemporaneous tribute.

Richard, narrating his own history, thus speaks:

"To him that kept my fame with Clio's quill, Whose magic raised me from oblivion's den, That in my pamphlet their praises sent, And with my actions dignified my pen; He that from Helicon sends many a rill, Whose nectar'd veins are drunk by thirstie men; Crown'd be his stile with fame, his head with bays, And none detract, but gratefully his praise."
country, or occasionally visiting him from the metropolis. "The latter part of his life," says Rowe, "was spent, as all men of good sense will wish theirs may be, in ease, retirement, and the society of his friends, and he added that natural powers of conversation could not fail to render his society most agreeable and desirable. We can readily believe that whenever any of his old associates of the stage, whether authors or actors, came to Stratford, they found a hearty welcome and free entertainment at his house; and that he would be the last man, in his prosperity, to treat with slight or indifference those with whom, in the earlier part of his career, he had been on terms of familiar intercourse.

One of the very latest acts of his life was bestowing the hand of his daughter Judith upon Thomas Quiney, a vintner and wine-merchant of Stratford, the son of Richard Quiney, who died May 31st, 1692, while he was bailiff of Stratford. She must have been four years older than the husband, having, as already stated, been born on 2d February, 1585, while he was not born until 26th February, 1589: he was consequently twenty-seven years old, and she thirty-one, at the time of their marriage in February, 1616. As there was a difference of four years in the ages of Judith Shakespeare and her husband, we ought perhaps to receive that fact as some testimony, that our great dramatist did not suffer sufficient evil in such disproportion to induce him to oppose the union.

His will had been prepared as long before its actual date as 25th January, 1615–16, and this fact is apparent on the face of it: it originally began "Vicesimo quinto die Januarii," (not February, as Malone erroneously read it,) but the word Januarii, was subsequently struck through with a pen, and Martij substituted by interpolation. Possibly it was not thought necessary to alter vicesimo quinto, or the 25th March might be the very day the will was executed: if it were, the signatures of the testator, upon each of the three sheets of paper of which the will consists, bear evidence (from the want of firmness in the writing) that he was at that time suffering under sickness. It opens, it is true, by stating that he was "in perfect health and memory," and such was doubtless the case when the instrument was prepared in January, but the execution of it might be deferred until he was attacked by serious indisposition, and then the date of the month only might be altered, leaving the assertion as to health and memory, as it had originally stood. What was the nature of Shakespeare's fatal illness, we have no satisfactory means of knowing; but it was probably not of long duration; and if when he subscribed his will he had really been in health, we are persuaded that at the age of only fifty-two he would have signed his name with greater readiness and distinctness. All three signatures are more or less informal and illegible, especially the first two, but he seems to have made an effort to write his best when he affixed both his names at length at the end. "By me William Shakespeare."

We hardly need entertain a doubt that he was attended by his physician by his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, who had then been married to Susanna Shakespeare more than eight years: we have expressed our opinion that Dr. and Mrs. Hall lived in the same house with our poet, and it is to be recollected that in his will he leaves New Place to his daughter Susanna. Hall must have been a man of considerable science for the time at which he practised, and he has left behind him proofs of his knowledge and skill in a number of cases which had come under his own eye, and which he described in Latin: these were afterwards translated from his manuscript, and published in 1657 by Jonas Cooke, with the title of "Select Observations on English Bodies," but the case of Dr. Hall's father-in-law is not found there, because, unfortunately, the "observations" only begin with the 23d year of the calendar, when it is supposed that an epidemic, called the "new fever," then prevailed in Stratford and "invaded many." Possibly Shakespeare was one of these; though, had such been the fact, it is not unlikely that, when speaking of "the Lady Beaumont," who suffered under it on July 1st, 1617, Dr. Hall would have referred back to the earlier instance of his father-in-law.

We are left, therefore, in utter uncertainty as to the immediate cause of the death of Shakespeare at an age when he would be in full possession of his faculties, and when in the ordinary course of nature he might have lived many years in the enjoyment of the society of his family and friends, in that grateful and easy retirement, which had been earned by his genius and industry, and to obtain which had apparently been the main object of many years of toil, anxiety, and deprivation.

Whatever doubt may prevail as to the day of the birth of Shakespeare, none can well exist as to the day of his death. The inscription on his monument in Stratford church tells us, "Obiit Anno Domini 1616. Eiusaetis 53. die 23 Apr." And it is remarkable that he was born and died on the same day of the same month, supposing him, as

That Shakespeare was of sober, though of companionable habits, we are perfectly convinced; he could have written seven and thirty plays (not reckoning alterations and additions now lost) in five and twenty years and he had been five or six years at Stratford when Ben Jonson visited him at Stratford, he would give them a true and hearty welcome. We have no reason to think that Drayton was at all given to intemperance, although it is certain that Ben Jonson was a boisterous liver.

He several times speaks of sicknesses in his own family, and of the manner in which he had removed them. "Mrs. Jonson, of Stratford, very lately deceased; she was in the course of the volume, and in the course of the same, she was buried with her daughter, Elizabeth Hall, her daughter by Dr. Hall, baptized on the 21st February, 1607–8 and granddaughter to our poet, was married on the 23d April, 1638, to Mr. John Bernard, of Abington, who died unmarried on 30th June, 1649, to Mr. John Bernard, of Abington, who was knighted after the Restoration. Lady Bernard died childless in 1579, and was buried, not at Stratford, with her family, but at Abington, with that of her second husband. She was the last of the lineal descendants of William Shakespeare."
we have every reason to believe, to have first seen the light on the 23d April, 1664. It was most usual that period to mention the day of death in inscriptions upon tomb-stones, tablets, and monuments; and such was the case with other members of the Shakespeare family. We are thus informed that his wife, Anne Shakespeare, "departed this life the 6th day of Aug. 1623." Dr. Hall "deceased Nove. 25. A. 1633." Thomas Nash, who married Hall's daughter, "died 1647." Great-Susanna Hall "deceased the 11th of July, A. 1649." Therefore, although the Latin inscription on the monument of our great dramatist may, from its form and punctuation, appear not so decisive as those we have quoted in English, there is in fact no ground for disputing that he died on 23d April, 1616. It is quite certain from the register at Stratford that he was interred on the 25th April, and the record of that event is placed among the burials in the following manner:

"1616, April 25, Will' Shakespeare, Gent."

Whether from the frequent prevalence of infectious disorders, or from any other cause, the custom of keeping the bodies of relatives unburied, for a week or more after death, has been comparatively of modern origin; and we may illustrate this point also by reference to facts regarding some of the members of the Shakespeare family. Anne Shakespeare was buried two days after she died, viz., on the 8th August, 1623: Dr. Hall and Thomas Nash were buried on the day after they died; and although it is true that there was an interval of five days between the death and burial of Mrs. Hall, in 1649, it is very possible that her corpse was conveyed from some distance, to be interred among her relations at Stratford. In the case of our poet, concluding that he expired on the 23d April, there was, as in the instance of his wife, an interval of two days before his interment.

Into the particular provisions of his will we need not enter at all at large, because we have printed it at the end of the present memoir from the original, as it was filed in the Prerogative Court, probate having been granted on the 22d June following the date of it. His daughter Judith is there only called by her Christian name, although she had been married to Thomas Quiney considerably more than a month anterior to the actual date of the will, and although his eldest daughter Susanna is mentioned by his husband's patronymic. It seems evident, from the tenor of the whole instrument, that when it was prepared Judith was not married, although her speedy union with Thomas Quiney was contemplated: the attorney or scrivener, who drew it, had first written "son and daughter," (meaning Judith and her intended husband) but erased the words "son and" afterwards, as the parties were not yet married, and were not "son and daughter" to the testator. It is true that Thomas Quiney would not have been Shakespeare's son, only his son-in-law; but the degrees of consanguinity were not at that time strictly marked and attended to, and in the same way Elizabeth Hall is called the testator's "niece."

The bequest which has attracted most attention is an interlineation in the following words, "I'm I gave unto my wief my second best bed with the furniture." Upon this passage has been founded, by Malone and others, a charge against Shakespeare, that he only remembered his wife as an afterthought, and then merely gave her "an old bed." As to the last part of the accusation, it may be answered, that the "second best bed" was probably in which the husband and wife had slept, when he was in Stratford earlier in life, and every night since his retirement from the metropolis; the best bed was doubtless reserved for visitors: if, therefore, he were to leave his wife any express legacy of the kind, it was most natural and consistent that he should give her that piece of furniture, which for many years they had jointly occupied. With regard to the second part of the charge, our great dramatist has of late years been relieved from the stigma, thus attempted to be thrown upon him, by the mere remark of Mr. Knight, in his "Pictorial Shakespeare," that Shakespeare's property being principally freehold, the widow, by the ordinary operation of the law of England, would be entitled to, what is legally known by the term, dower. It is extraordinary that this explanation should never have occurred to Malone, who was educated to the legal profession; but that many others should have followed him in his unjust imputation is not remarkable, recollecting how prone most of Shakespeare's biographers have been to repeat errors, rather than take the trouble to inquire for themselves, to sift out truth, and to balance probabilities.

CHAPTER XXI.

Monument to Shakespeare at Stratford-upon-Avon erected before 1623: there exist drawings of the supposed monument of Dr. Hall, and Shakespeare's daughter Susanna. —Difference between the bust on the monument and the portrait on the title-page of the folio of 1623: —In Johnson's testimony in favor of the likeness of the latter. —Shakespeare's personal appearance. —His social and convivial qualities. —"What is this Man?" Expounded by Fuller in his "Worthies." —Epitaph upon Sir Thomas Stanley. —Conclusion. —Hall's character of Shakespeare.

A Monument to Shakespeare was erected anterior to the publication of the folio edition of his "Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies" in 1623, because it is thus distinctly mentioned by Leonard Digges, in the earliest copy of commendatory verses prefixed to that volume, which he states shall outlive the poet's tomb:

"The best stone is rent, And time dissolves thy Stratford Monument, Here we alive shall view thee still."

This is the most ancient notice of it; but how long before 1623 it had been placed in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon, we have no menus of deciding. It represents the poet sitting under an arch, with a cushion before him, a pen in his right hand, and his left resting upon a sheet of paper: it has been the opinion of the best judges that it was cut by an English sculptor, (perhaps Thomas Ston- tan) and we may conclude, without much hesitation, that the artist was employed by Dr. Hall and his wife, and that the resemblance was as faithful as a bust, not modelled from the life, but probably, under living instructions, from some picture or cast, could be expected to be. Shakespeare is there considerably fuller in the face, than in the engraving on the title-page of the folio of 1623, which must have been made from a different original. It seems not unlikely that after he separated himself from the business and anxiety of a professional life, and withdrew to the permanent inhaling of his native air, he became more robust, and the half-length upon his monument conveys the notion of a cheerful, good-tempered, and somewhat jovial man. The expression, we apprehend, is less intellectual than it must have been in reality, and the forehead, though lofty and expansive, is not strongly marked with thought; on the whole, it has rather a look of gravity and good humor than of thought and reflection, and the lips are full, and apparently in the act of giving utterance to some amiable pleasantry. The bust was originally, like many other monuments of the time, colored after the life, and so it continued until Malone, forgetting the practice of the period at which the work was produced, had it painted one uniform stone-color. It was afterwards found impossible to restore the original colors.

On a tablet below the bust are placed the following inscriptions, which we give literally:—

"Illuc Philippus, genio Pecuniae, arti Morum, Nec Prudentiae, nec Virtutis merita.
Stay, Passenger, why goest thou so fast?
Read, if thou canst, whom envious Death hath past Within this monument: Shakespeare; with whose Quick nostril side: whose name doth deck y' Tombe
For more than cost; sigh all ye that writ
Leaves living art bot pote to serve his wit"—

Quoted in Ms. 1616.

On a flat grave-stone in front of the monument, and not far from the wall against which it is fixed, we read these lines; and Southwell's correspondent (whose letter was printed in 1838, from the original manuscript dated 1693) informs us, speaking of course from tradition, that they were written by Shakespeare himself:—

"Good friend, for less sake forbear
To dig the dust encosered here:
Best be ye men yt sarges the stones,
And cravt be he yt moves my bones!"—

The half-length on the title-page of the folio of 1623, engraved by Martin Droeshout, has certainly an expression of greater gravity than the bust on Shakespeare's monument; and, making some allowances, we can conceive the original of that resemblance more capable of producing the mighty works Shakespeare has left behind him, than the original of the bust: the one may be said to represent Shakespeare during his later years at Stratford, happy in the intercourse of his family and friends, and the cheerful companion of his neighbors and townsfolk; and the other, which marks the eventful period of his life in London, revolting the great works he had written or projected, and with his mind somewhat burdened by the cares of his professional life.

There is one point in which both the engraving and the bust in a degree concur,—we mean in the length of the upper lip, although the peculiarity seems exaggerated in the bust. Opposite the engraving are the following lines, subscribed with the initials of Ben Johnson, and doublets from his pen. We give them exactly as they stand in the folio of 1623:—

"To the Reader.

This FIGURE, that thou here seest put.
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life;
O, could he but have drawn him with As well as brush, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was ever writ in Brass.
But, since he cannot, Reader, look
Not on his Picture, but his Book."

B. J.

If only half the pictures said, within the last century, to represent Shakespeare, were in fact from the life, the poet must have possessed a vast stock of patience, if not a larger share of vanity, when he devoted so much time to sitting to the artists of the day.

Aubrey is the only authority, beyond the inferences that may be drawn from the portraits, for the personal appearance of Shakespeare; and he sums up our great poet's physical and moral endowments in two lines:—

"He was a handsome well-shaped man, very good company, and of a very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit." We have every reason to suppose that this is a correct description of his personal appearance, but we are unable to add to it from any other source, unless indeed we were to rely upon a few equivocal passages in the "Somets." Upon this authority it has been supposed by some that he was lame, and certainly the 37th and 89th Somets, without allowing for a figurative mode of expression, might be taken to import so much. If we were to consider the words literally, we should imagine that some accident had befallen him, which rendered it impossible that he should continue on the stage, and hence we could easily account for his early retirement from it. We know that such was the case with one of his most famous predecessors, Christopher Marlowe, but we have no sufficient reason for thinking it was the fact as regards Shakespeare: he is evidently speaking metaphorically in both places, where "lame" and "laziness" occur.

His personal qualities, his good temper, hilarity, vivacity, and what Aubrey calls his "very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit." (in our author's own words, "piscis without securit, et non odiosa") cannot be doubted, since, besides what may be gathered from his works, we have it from various quarters; and although nothing very good of this kind may have descended to us, we have sufficient to show that he must have been a most welcome visitor in all companies. The epithet "gentle" has been frequently applied to him, twice by Ben Jonson, (in his lines before the engraving, and in his laudatory verses prefixed to the plays in the folio of 1623,) and if it be not to be understood precisely in its modern acceptation, we may be sure that one distinguishing feature in his character was general kindness: he may have been "sharp and sententious," but never needlessly bitter or ill-natured: his wit had no malice for an ingredient.

Fuller speaks of the "wit-combat" between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson at the convivial meetings at the Mermaid club, established by Sir Walter Raleigh; and he adds, "which two I behold like a Spanish great galleon and an English man-of-war: Master Jonson, like the former, was built far higher in learning; solid, but slow in his performances: Shakespeare, with the English man-of-war, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds by the quickness of his wit and invention." Fuller has another simile, on the same page, respecting Shakespeare and his acquirements, which is worth quoting. "He was an eminent instance of the truth of that rule, Poeta non sit sed visceralis; one is not made, but born a poet. Indeed his learning was very little, so that as Cornish diamonds are not polished by any lapislazuli, but are pointed and smooth even as they are taken out of the earth, so nature itself was all the art which was used upon him." Of course Fuller is here only referring to Shakespeare's classical acquirements: his "learning" of a different kind, perhaps, exceeded that of all the ancients put together.

Connected with Ben Jonson's solidity and slowness is the following Witticism between him and Shakespeare, said to have passed at a tavern.

"Mr. Ben Jonson and Mr. Wm. Shakespeare being merry at a tavern, Mr. Jonson begins this for his epitaph,

Here lies Ben Jonson
Who was once one:
he gives it to Mr. Shakespeare to make up, who presently writt

That, while he liv'd was a slow thing,
And now, being dead, is nothing."

It is certainly not of much value, but there is a great difference between the estimate of an extempore joke at the moment of delivery, and the opinion we may form of it long afterwards, when it has been put upon paper, and transmitted to posterity under such names as those of Shakespeare and Jonson. The same excuse may be made for two other pieces of unpretending pleasantry between the same parties, which have been handed down to us upon something like authority. "Shakespeare was godfather to one of Ben Jonson's children, and after the christening, being in a deep study, Jonson came to cheere him up, and askt him why he was so melancholy?—'No, faith, Ben, (says he) not I; but I have been considering a great while what should be the fittest gift for me to bestow upon my god-child, and I have resolvd at last.'—'I pr'ythee what?' says he, 'I' faith, Ben, I'll e'en give him a douzen of Latten spoones, and thou shalt translate them.'"

Of course the joke depends upon the pun between Latin, and the mixed metal called latten.

The next is from a MS. formerly in the Harleian Collection:

"Verses by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, occasioned by the motto to the Globe theatre—Totus mundus agit histrionem."

"Jonson. If but stage-actors all the world displays, Where shall we find spectators of their plays?
"Shakespeare. Little, or much of what we see, we do;
We are both actors and spectators too."

Of a different character is a production preserved by Dugdale, at the end of his Visitation of Salop, in the Heralds' College: it is an epitaph, inscribed upon the tomb of Sir Thomas Stanley, in Tongue church; and Dugdale, whose testimony is unimpeachable, distinctly states that "the following verses were made by William Shakespeare, the late famous tragedian."

"Written upon the east end of the tomb.

"Ask who lies here, but do not weep;
He is not dead, he doth but sleep.

This story register is for his bones:
His name is more perpetual than these stones:
And his own goodness, with himself being gone,
Shall live when every monument is none.

"Written on the west end thereof.
"Not monumental stone preserves our fame,
Not sky-aspiring pyramids our name.
The memory of him for whom this stands
Shall out-live marble and defacer's hands.
When all to time's consumption shall be given,
Stanley, for whom this stands, shall stand in heaven."

We have thus brought into a consecutive narrative the particulars respecting the life of the "Myriad-minded Shakespeare," with which our predecessors were acquainted, or which, from various sources, we have been able, during a long series of years, to collect. Yet, after all, comparing what we really know of our great dramatist with what we might possibly have known, we cannot but be aware how little has been accomplished. "Of William Shakespeare," says one of our greatest living authors (Hallam, in his Introduction to the Literature of Europe) of our greatest dead one, "whom, through the mouths of those whom he has inspired to body forth the modifications of his immense mind, we seem to know better than any human writer, it may be truly said that we scarcely know anything. We see him, so far as we do see him, not in himself, but in a reflex image from the objectivity in which he is manifested: he is Faust, and Mercutio, and Malvolio, and Jaques, and Portia, and Inogen, and Lear, and Othello; but to us he is scarcely a determined person, a substantial reality of past time, the man Shakespeare." We cannot flatter ourselves that we have done much to bring the reader better acquainted with "the man Shakespeare," but if we have done anything we shall be content; and, instead of attempting any character of our own, we will subjoin one, in the words of the distinguished writer we have above quoted, as brief in its form as it is comprehensive in its matter:—"The name of Shakespeare is the greatest in our literature—it is the greatest in all literature. No man ever came near to him in the creative powers of the mind; no man had ever such strength at once, and such variety of imagination."

If the details of his life be imperfect, the history of his mind is complete; and we leave the reader to turn from the contemplation of "the man Shakespeare" to the study of the poet Shakespeare.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

THE TEMPEST.

["The Tempest" was first printed in the folio edition of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," bearing date in 1623, where it stands first, and occupies nineteen pages, viz., from p. 1, to p. 10 inclusive. It fills the same place in the folios of 1632, 1664, and 1685.]

A MATERIAL fact, in reference to the date of the first production of "The Tempest," has only been recently ascertained: we allude to the notice of the performance of it, before King James, on November 1, 1611, (the earliest date previously discovered for its performance being 1615,) which is contained in the "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," edited by Mr. P. Cunningham for the Shakespeare Society: the memorandum is in the following form:—

"Hollums night was presented at Whithall before the Kings Majesty a play called the Tempest." In the margin is inserted the additional circumstance, that the performance was "by the King's Players," and there can be no reasonable doubt that it was Shakespeare's drama, which had been written for that company. When it had been so written, is still a point of difficulty; but the probability, we think, is that it was selected by the Master of the Revels, for representation at Court in 1611, on account of its novelty and popularity on the public stage. Eleven other dramas, as appears by the same document, were exhibited between October 31, 1611, and the same day in the next year; and it is remarkable that ten of these (as far as we possess any information respecting them) were composed by new plays, and with regard to the eleventh, it was not more than three years old. We may, perhaps, be warranted in inferring, therefore, that "The Tempest" was not then an old play.

It seems to us, likewise, that the internal evidence, derived from style and language, clearly indicates that it was a late production, and that it belongs to about the same period of our great dramatist's literary history as his "Winter's Tale," which was also chosen for a Court-play, and represented at Whitehall only four days after "The Tempest" had been exhibited. In point of construction, it must be admitted at once that there is the most obvious dissimilarity, inasmuch as "The Winter's Tale" is a piece in which theunities are utterly disregarded, while in "The Tempest" they are strictly observed. It is only in the involved and parenthetical character of some of the speeches, and in psychological resemblances, that we would institute a comparison between "The Tempest" and the "Winter's Tale," and would infer from thence that they belong to about the same period.

It may be urged, however, that what was represented at Court in 1611 was only a revival of an older play, acted before 1596, and such may have been the case: we do not, however, think it probable, for several reasons. One of these is an appa-
INTRODUCTION

TO THE PLAYS.

The TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

["The Two Gentlemen of Verona" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies nineteen pages, viz., from p. 50 to p. 68 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It is there divided into Acts and Scenes. It also stands second in the later folios.]

The only ascertained fact with which we are acquainted, in reference to "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," is, that it is included in the list of Shakespeare's Plays which Francis Meres published in his Palladis Tamia, 1598. It comes first in that enumeration, and although this is a very slight circumstance, it may afford some confirmation to the opinion, founded upon internal evidence of plot, style, and character, that it was one of the earliest, if not the very earliest of Shakespeare's original dramatic compositions.

It would, we think, be idle to attempt to fix upon any particular year: it is unquestionably the work of a young and unpractised dramatist, and the conclusion is especially unnatural and abrupt. It may have been written by our great dramatist very soon after he joined a theatrical company; and at all events we do not think it likely that it was composed subsequently to 1591. We should be inclined to place it, as indeed it stands in the work of Meres, immediately after "Love's Labor's Lost." Meres calls it the "Gentlemen of Verona."

If "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" were not the offspring merely of the author's invention, we have yet to discover the source of its plot. Points of resemblance have been dwelt upon in connection with Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia," 1590, and the "Diaries" of Montemayor, which was not translated into English by B. Yonge until 1598; but the incidents, common to the drama and to these two works, are only as much as might be found in other romances, or would present themselves spontaneously to the mind of a young poet. The notion of some critics, that "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" contains few or no marks of Shakespeare's hand, is a strong proof of their incompetence to form a judgment.

The MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

["A Most pleasant and excellent conceited Comedie, of Sir John Falstaff, and the merrie Wives of Windsor, intermixed with sundrie variable and pleasing humors, of Sr Hugh the Welch knight, Justice Stallow, and his wic. Cousin. M. Bender. With the swaggaring Vaine of Anoncunt Pastoll, and Corporal Nym. By William Shakespeare. As it hath bene divers times Acted by the right Honorable my Lord Chamberlaines servants. Both before her Majestie, and elsewhere. Lozouted Printed by T. C. for Arthur Johnson, and are to be sold at his shop in Prouice Church-yard, at the signe of the Flower do Leuue and the Crownes. 1602," 4to. 27 leaves.]

The 4to. of 1602, was "printed by T. H. for R. Mollighen," &c. in the folio, 1623, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" occupies twenty-two pages, viz., from p. 59 to p. 69 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It also stands third in the three later folios.]

This comedy was printed for the first time in a perfect state in the folio of 1623: it had come out in an imperfect state in 1602, and again in 1619, in both instances for a bookseller of the name of Arthur Johnson: Arthur Johnson acquired the right to publish it from John Busby, and the original entry, and the assignment of the play, run thus in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:

January, 1601, according to our present mode of reckoning the year, was January, 1602, and the "most pleasant and excellent conceited Comedie of Sir John Falstaff, and the merrie Wives of Windsor," (the title-page following the description in the entry) appeared in quarto with the date of 1602. It has been the custom to look upon this edition as the first sketch of the drama, which Shakespeare afterwards enlarged and improved to the form in which it appears in the folio of 1623. After the most minute examination, we are not of that opinion: it has been universally admitted that the 4to. of 1602 was piratical; and our conviction is that, like the first edition of "Henry V." in 1600, it was fraudulently made up, for the purpose of sale, partly from notes taken at the theatre, and partly from memory, without even the assistance of any of the parts as delivered out by the copyist of the theatre to the actors. It is to be observed, that John Busby, who assigned "The Merry Wives of Windsor" to Arthur Johnson in 1602, was the same bookseller who, two years before, had joined in the publication of the undoubtedly surreptitious "Henry V."

The title-page states, that it had been acted "by the Lord Chamberlain's servants" before the Queen "and elsewhere!" elsewhere, was perhaps at the Globe on the Bankside, and we may suppose, that it had been brought out in the commencement of the summer season of 1600, before the death of Sir Thomas Lucy. If the "dooze white laces" in the first scene were meant to ridicule him, Shakespeare would certainly have introduced the allusion after the death of the object of it. That it continued a favorite play we can readily believe, and we learn that it was acted before James I., not long after he came to the throne: the following memorandum is contained in the accounts of the "Revels at Court" in the latter end of 1604:

"By his Majestie's pliders. The Sunday following A Play of the Merry Wives of Winser."

This representation occurred on "the Sunday following" November 1st, 1604.

What has led some to imagine that the surreptitious impression of 1602 was the true and original form of the comedy, and that the folio edition of Shakespeare, is a tradition respecting the rapidity with which it was composed. This tradition, when traced to its source, can be carried back no farther than 1702: John Dennis in that year printed his "Comical Gallant," founded upon "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and in the dedication he states, that "the comedy was written at the command of the Queen Elizabeth, and by her direction; and she was so enger to see it acted, that she commanded it to be finished in fourteen days." Dennis gives no authority for any part of this assertion, but because he knew Dryden, it is supposed to have come from him; and because Dryden was acquainted with Davenant, it has been conjectured that the latter might have communi-

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

["Measure for Measure" was first printed in the folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies," 1623, where it occupies twenty-four pages, viz., from p. 61 to p. 84, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It was, of course, reprinted in the later folios of 1632, 1664, and 1685.]

In the "History of English Dramatic Poetry," III., 68, it is remarked, that although it seems incredible to Shakespeare that Whetstone's "Promos and Cassandra" in his eye, while writing "Measure for Measure," it is probable that he also made use of some other dramatic composition or novel, in which the same story was treated. I was led to form this opinion from the constant habit of dramatists of that period to employ the productions of their predecessors, and from the extreme likelihood, that when our old play-writers were hunting in all directions for stories which they could convert to their purpose, they would not have passed over the novel by Giraldi Cinthio, which had not only been translated, but actually converted into a drama, nearly a quarter of a century before the death of Elizabeth. Whetstone's "Promos and Cassandra," a play in two parts, was printed in 1578, though, as far as we know, never acted, and in 1594 he subsequently introduced a translation of the novel (which he alleged to be its origin), in his "Heptameron of Civil Discourses." 4to. 1582.

The Title of Cinthio's novel, the fifth of the eighth Decade of his Heptameron, gives a sufficient account of the progress of the story as he relates it. Whetstone adopts its incidents pretty exactly in his "Promos and Cassandra," but Shakespeare varies from them chiefly by the introduction of Mariano, and by the final union between the duke and Isabella. Shakespeare was not indebted to Whetstone for a single thought, nor for a casual expression, excepting as far as similarity of situation may be said to have necessarily occasioned corresponding states of feeling, and employment of language.

As to the date when "Measure for Measure" was written, we have no positive information, but we now know that it was acted at Court on St. Stephen's night, (26th December,) 1604. In the column of the account headed "The Poets which mayd the Plea's," we find the name of "Shaxberd," entered, which was the mode in which the ignorant scribe, who prepared the account, spelt the name of our great dramatist. Malone conjectured from certain allusions (such as to "the war") with Spolia, "the sweet," meaning the plague, &c., that "Measure for Measure" was written in 1603, and if we suppose it to have been selected for performance at Court on the 26th December, 1604, on account of its popularity at the theatre after its production, his supposition will receive some confirmation.

Of "Measure for Measure," Coleridge observes in his "Literary Remains," "This play, which is Shakespeare's throughout, is too much viewed, say rather, the only painful part of his genuine works. The comic and tragic parts equally border on the provoking—the one being disgusting, the other horrible; and the pardon and marriage of Angelo not merely baffles the strong indignant claim of justice (for cruelty, with lust and damnable baseness, can not be forgiven, because we cannot conceive them as being morally repented of), but it is likewise degrading to the character of woman."

early productions:” this is plausible, but we imagine, from their general dissimilarity to the style of our great dramatist, that these “long syllabifying verses” formed a portion of the old court-drama, of which Shakespeare made much use as answered his purpose: they are quite in the style of plays anterior to the time of Shakespeare, and it is easy to distinguish such portions of the comedy as he must have written.

The earliest notice we have of “The Comedy of Errors” is by Meres, in his Palladis Tamia, 1598, where he gives it to Shakespeare under the name of Errors. How much before that time it had been written and produced on the stage, we can only speculate. From an allusion to the civil war in France (in Act iii., sc. 2), which continued from 1589 to 1593, it has been conjectured that the play had its origin either during or shortly after this period.

We are now certain that “The Comedy of Errors” was represented at Whitehall on the 28th December, 1604. In the account of the Master of the Revels of the expenses of his department, from the end of October, 1604, to Shrove Tuesday, 1605, preserved in the Audit Office, we read the subsequent entry:—

“By his Maj. Piaiers. On Inosents Night, the plague of Errors,” the name of Shaxberd, or Shakespeare, being inserted in the margin as the Poet, which mayd the Plea, “The Comedy of Errors” was, therefore, contrary to the opinion of Malone, not only revived, but represented at court very soon after James I. came to the crown.

In Coleridge’s “Literary Remains,” we find “The Comedy of Errors” twice mentioned in much the same terms. Shakespeare, he observes, “has in this piece presented us with a legitimate farce, in exactest consonance with the philosophical principles and character of farce, as distinguished from comedy and entertainments. A proper force is mainly distinguished from comedy by the license allowed, and even required, in the fable, in order to produce strange and laughable situations. The story need not be probable; it is enough that it is possible. A comedy would scarcely allow even the two Antiphouses; because, although there have been instances of almost indistinguishable likeness in two persons, yet these are mere individual accidents, casus budeius nature, and the verum will not excuse the inverosimile. But farce dares add the two Dromios, and is justified in so doing by the laws of its end and constitution.”

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

“Much ado about nothing. As it hath been sundrie times publicly acted by the right honorable, the Lord Chamberlaine his servantes. Written by William Shakespeare.

—London Printed by V. S. for Andrew Wise, and William Aspley. 1600.” 4to. 36 leaves.

It is also printed in the division of “Comedies” in the folio 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages, viz., from p. 101, to p. 121, inclusive. It was reprinted in the other folio.

We have no information respecting “Much ADO about Nothing” and in to the appearance of the 4to. edition in 1600, excepting that it was entered for publication on the books of the Stationers’ Company, on the 23d August in that year, in the following manner:—

“23 Aug. 1600.

And, Wise Wm. Aspley] Two books, the one called Much ado about Nothing, and the other The Sec- ond, or the Chronicles of the History of King Henry the VIIth, with the Humors of Sir John Falstaff: written by Mr. Shakespeare.”

There is another memorandum in the same register, bearing date on the “4th August,” without the year, which runs in these terms: “As you like yt, a book. Henry the sifi, a book. Every man in his humor, a book. The Comedie of Much Ado about Nothinge, a book.” Opposite the titles of these plays are added the words, “to be staled.” This last entry, there is little doubt, belongs to the year 1600, if the date of the immediately preceding it. The object of the “stay” was probably to prevent the publication of “Henry V.,” “Every Man in His Humor,” and “Much Ado about Nothing,” by any other booksellers than Wise and Aspley.

The 4to. of “Much ADO about Nothing,” which came out in 1600, (and we know of no other impression in that form) is a well-printed work for the time, and the type is unusually good. It contains no limit from which we can at all distinctly infer the date of its composition, but Malone supposed that it was written early in the year in which it came from the press. Considering, however, that the comedy would have to be got up, acted, and become popular, before it was published, or entered for publication, for the time of its composition by Shakespeare may reasonably be carried back as far as the autumn of 1599. That it was popular, we can hardly doubt; and the extracts from the Stationers’ Registers seem to show that apprehensions were felt, lest rival booksellers should procure it to be printed.

It is not included by Meres in the list he furnishes in his Palladis Tamia, 1598; and “England’s Flor- nasus” and “A Seruants Book” do not mention it. If any conclusion could be drawn from this fact, it might be, that it was written subsequent to the appearance of one work, and prior to the publication of the other. Respecting an early performance of it at Court, Steevens supplies us with the subsequent information: “‘Much Ado about Nothing’ (as I understand from one of Mr. Vere’s MSS.) formed part of the fall of the Duke of Beaufort. Heninge, the player, received on the 20th May, 1613, the sum of £40, and £20 more as his Majesty’s gratuity, for exhibiting six plays at Hampton Court, among which was this comedy.” The change of title, if, indeed, it were made, could only have been temporary.

The serious portion of the plot of “Much ADO about Nothing,” which relates to Hero, Claudio, and John the Bastard is extremely similar to the story of Ariodante and Genevra, in Ariosto’s “Orlando Furioso,” B. v. It was separately versified in English by Peter Beverley, in imitation of Arthur Brooke’s “Romeus and Juliet,” 1562, and of Bernard Garter’s “Two English Lovers,” 1593; and it was published by the printer B. Basire, about date, two or three years after these poems had appeared.

Sir John Harington’s translation of the whole “Orlando Furioso” was originally published in 1591, but there is no special indication in “Much ADO about Nothing” that Shakespeare availed himself of it. Spenser’s version of the same incidents, for they are evidently borrowed from Ariosto, in B. H. c. 4, of his “Faerie Queene,” was printed in 1590; but Shakespeare is not to be traced to this source. Shakespeare’s plot may, therefore, have had an entirely different origin, possibly some translation, not now extant, of Bandello’s second-second novel, in vol. i. of the Lucena edition, 4to. 1554, which is entitled, “Como il S. Timbreo di Cardona, censando col Re
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Piero d'Aragona in Messina, s'inamorò di Fenicia Lionata; e i varii fortunevoli accidenti, che accadde il vero pene maggio la prendere. It is rendered the more likely that Shakespeare employed a lost version of this novel by the circumstance, that in Italian the incident in which she, who may be called the false Hero is concerned, is conducted much in the same way as in Shakespeare. Moreover, Bandello lays his scene in Messina; the father of the lady is named Lionati; and Don Pedro, or Pietro, of Arragon, is the friend of the lover who is duped by his rival.

Nobody has observed upon the important fact, in connection with "Much Ado about Nothing," that a "History of Arodante and Genevora" was played before Queen Elizabeth, "by Malcuster's children," in 1582–3. How far Shakespeare might be indebted to this production we cannot at all determine; but it is certain that the serious incidents he employed in his comedy had at an early date formed the subject of a dramatic representation.

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

(“A pleasant Conceited Comedie called, Loves labors lost. As it was presented before her Highness this last Christmas, newly corrected and augmented by Shakespeare. Imprinted at London by W. W. for Cuthbert Burby, 1598," 4to, 36 leaves.)

In the folio, 1623, “Love's Labor's Lost” occupies 23 pages, in the division of "Comedies," viz., from p. 132 to p. 144, inclusive. It was reprinted in 1631, 4to, by W. S., for John Southwicke; and the title-page states that it was published “as it was acted by his Majesties Servants at the Bishop-Friers and the Globe.” It is merely a copy of the folio, 1623, with the addition of some errors of the press.

There is a general concurrence of opinion that "Love's Labor's Lost" was one of Shakespeare's earliest productions for the stage. In his course of Lectures delivered in 1818, Coleridge was so convinced upon this point, that he said, “the internal evidence was indisputable!” and in his "Literary Remains," II. 102, we find him using these expressions:—"The characters in this play are either impersonated out of Shakespeare's own multi-formity, by imaginative self-position, or out of such as a country town and a school-boy's observation might supply." The only objection to this theory is, that at the time "Love's Labor's Lost" was composed, the author seems to have been acquainted in some degree with the nature of the Italian comic performances; but this acquaintance he might have acquired comparatively early in life. Steevens, after stating that he had not been able to discover any novel from which this comedy had been derived, adds that "the story has most of the features of an ancient romance!; but it is not at all impossible that Shakespeare found some corresponding incidents in an Italian play. However, after a long search, I have not met with any such production. The question whether Shakespeare visited Italy, and at what period of his life, cannot properly be considered here; but it is a very important point in relation both to his biography and works.

It is vain to attempt to fix with any degree of precision the date when "Love's Labor's Lost" came from the author's pen. It was first printed, as far as we now know, in 1598, 4to, and then it professed on the title-page to have been properly corrected and augmented; we are likewise told that it was presented before Queen Elizabeth "this last Christmas." “The last Christmas” probably meant Christmas, 1598; for the year at this period did not end until 25th March. It seems likely that the comedy had been written six or even eight years before, that it was revised in 1598, with certain corrections and augmentations for performance before the Queen; and this circumstance may have led to its publication immediately afterwards.

“Love Labor Lost" is mentioned by Meres in 1598, and in the second year of his poem by R[obert] T[odyl] entitled “Alme,” in the commencement of one of the stanzas of which this comedy is introduced by name:—

"Love's Labor Lost I once did see, a play Ycleped so."

This does not read as if the writer intended to say that he had seen it recently.

It is capable of proof that the play, as it stands in the folio of 1623, was reprinted from the 4to of 1598, as it adopts various errors of the press, which could not have found their way into the folio, had it been taken from a distinct manuscript. The play, however, variations, which might show that the player-editors of the folio resorted occasionally to some authority besides the 4to.

There is no entry of "Love's Labor's Lost" at Stationers' Hall, until 22d January 1600–7, when it was transferred by Burbage (the publisher of it in 1598) to Ling, who perhaps compiled a new edition. Its next appearance was in the folio, 1623; but another 4to, of no authority, was published in 1631, the year before the date of the second folio.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

(“A Midsommer nitghts dreame. As it hath bene sundry times publi Scheerly acted, by the Right honouable the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. Written by William Shakespere. Imprinted at London, for Thomas Fisher, and are to be sold at his shope, at the Signe of the White Hart, in Fleetstreet, 1600." 32 leaves.)

In the folio, 1623, it occupies 18 pages, viz., from p. 145 to 162 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies," so, of course, like the other plays, inserted in the later folio.

This drama, which on the title-pages of the earliest impressions is not called comedy, history, nor tragedy, but which is included by the player-editors of the first folio among the "comedies" of Shakespeare, was twice printed in 1600, “for Thomas Fisher” and "by James Roberts." Fisher was a bookseller, and employed some unnamed printer; but Roberts was a printer as well as a bookseller. The only entry of it at Stationers' Hall is to Fisher, and it runs as follows:—

"8 Oct. 1600. Tho. Fysher A booke called a Mysdamer nightes Dreame."

There is no memorandum regarding the impress by Roberts, which perhaps was unauthorized, although Heminge and Condell followed his text when they included "Midsummer-Night's Dream" in the folio of 1623. In some instances the folio adopts the evident misprints of Roberts, while such improvements as it makes are not obtained from Fisher's more accurate copy. The chief difference between the Quarto quartos and the folio is, that in the latter, the Acts, but not the Scenes, are distinguished.

We know from the Palladis Tamia of Meres, that “Midsummer Night’s Dream” was in existence at least two years before it came from the press. It seems highly probable that it was not written before the autumn of 1594, and if the speech of Titania in A. K. sc. 1, were intended to describe the real state of the enchantments on the season—which in some points tallies with the description of the state of the weather and the condition of the country in 1594, as given in Forman’s Diary and Stowe’s Chronicle for that year,—we may infer that the drama came from the pen of Shakespeare at the close of 1594, or in the beginning of 1595.

The Knight’s Tale of Chaucer, and the same poet’s “Tyske of Babylone,” together with Arthur Golding’s translation of the story of Pyramus and Thisbe from Ovid, are the only sources yet pointed out of the plots introduced and employed by Shakespeare. Oxburgh, Titania, and Robin Good-fellow, or Puck, are mentioned, as belonging to the fairy mythology, by many authors of the time. The Percy Society not long since reprinted a tract called “Robin Good-fellow, his Mad Pranks and Merry Jests,” from an edition in 1628; but there is little doubt that it originally came out at least forty years earlier: together with a ballad inserted in the Introduction to that reprint, it shows how Shakespeare availed himself of existing popular superstitions.

There is every reason to believe that “Midsummer-Night’s Dream” was popular: in 1602, the year before it was printed in the first folio, it is thus mentioned by Taylor, the water-poet, in his “Sir Gregory Nonsens.” I say, as it is applaudingly written, and commended to posterity, in the Midsummer-Night’s Dream.”

Tuesday, 1605: hence we have a right to infer that it gave great satisfaction at court. The fact is thus recorded in the original account of expenses, made out by the Master of the Revels, and still preserved in the Audit Office:—

"By His Maiesties Pipers, On Shrovesunday a play of the Merchant of Venice." "By his Maiest Play-errs. On Shrovesunday a play called the Merchant of Venice againe, commanded by the Kings Maie."

The name of Shaxberd, for Shakespeare, as "the poet which made the play," is added in the margin opposite both these entries.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

"As You Like It" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-three pages, viz., from p. 185 to p. 207 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It preserved its place in the three subsequent impressions of that volume in 1632, 1664, and 1685.

"As You Like It" is not only founded upon, but in some points very closely copied from, a novel by Thomas Lodge, under the title of "Rosalynde: Euphues Golden Legacie," which was originally printed in 4to, 1590, a second time in 1592, and a third edition came out in 1598. This third edition perhaps appeared early in 1598; and we are disposed to think, that the re-publication of so popular a work directed Shakespeare's attention to it. Still, "As You Like It" may have been written in the summer of 1598, and first acted in the winter of the same, or in the spring of the following year.

The only entry in the registers of the Stationers' Company relating to "As You Like It," is confirmatory of this supposition. It has been already referred to in the "Introduction" to "Much Ado about Nothing."

It is not to be forgotten, in deciding upon the probable date of "As You Like It," that Meres makes no mention of it in his Palladis Tamia, 1598; and as it was entered at Stationers' Hall on the 4th August [1600], we may conclude that it was written and acted in that interval.

The title of the Lodge, when composing his "Rosalynde: Euphues Golden Legacie," had either "The Coke's Tale of Gameyn" strongly in his recollection, or a manuscript of it actually before him. It was not printed until more than a century afterwards. According to Farmer, Shakespeare looked no farther than Lodge's novel, which he followed in "As You Like It" quite as closely as he did Greene's "Pandosto" in the "Winter's Tale." There are one or two coincidences of expression between "As You Like It" and "The Coke's Tale of Gameyn," but not perhaps more than might be accidental, and the opinion of Farmer appears to be sufficiently borne out.

In his Lectures in 1818, Coleridge eloquently and justly praises the pastoral beauty and simplicity of "As You Like It;" but he did not attempt to compare it with Lodge's "Rosalynde," where the descriptions of persons and of scenery are comparatively forced and artificial: "Shakespeare," said Coleridge, "never gives a description of rustic scenery merely for its own sake, or to show how well he can paint natural objects: he is never tedious or elaborate, but while he now and then displays marvellous accuracy and minuteness of knowledge, he usually only touches upon the larger features and broader characteristics, leaving the fillings up to the imagination. Thus in "As You Like It" he describes an oak of many centuries growth in a single line:—

"Under an oak whose antique root peeps out."

Other and inferior writers would have dwelt on this description, and worked it out with all the neatness and importance of detail. In Shakespeare the 'antique root' furnishes the whole picture."

Adam Spencer is a character in "The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn," and in Lodge's "Rosalynde:" and a great additional interest attaches to it, because it is supposed, with some appearance of truth, that the part was originally sustained by Shakespeare himself. We have this statement on the authority of Oldys' MSS.: "he is said to have derived it, immediately of course, from Gilbert Shakespeare, who survived the Restoration, and who had a faint recollection of having seen his brother William "in one of his own comedies, wherein, being to personate a decrepit old man, he wore a long beard, and appeared so weak and drooping, and unable to walk, that he was forced of his supported and carried by another person to a table, at which he was seated among some company, who were eating, and one of them sung a song." This description very exactly tallies with "As You Like It," A. ii., sc. 7.

Shakespeare found no prototypes in Lodge, nor in any other work yet discovered, for the characters of Jacques, Touchstone, and Andro. He was able, in a marvellous manner in which he has made them part of the staple of his story, and on the importance of these additions, it is needless to enlarge.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

["The Taming of the Shrew" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages, viz., from p. 208 to p. 229, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It was reprinted in the three latter folios.]

Shakespeare was indebted for nearly the whole plot of his "Taming of the Shrew" to an older play, published in 1594, under the title of "The Taming of a Shrew." The mere circumstance of the adoption of the title is for the only definite for the indefinite article, proves that he had not the slightest intention of concealing his obligation.

A copy of the "Taming of a Shrew," published as early as 1594, and once in the possession of Pope, is now in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire: the exact title of it is as follows:—

"A Pleasant Conniv'd Historie, call'd The taming of a Shrew. As it was seuerely times acted by the Right honorable the Earle of Pembroke his seruants. Printed at London by Peter Short and are to be sold by Cubert Burbig, at his shop at the Royall Exchange. 1594." 4to.

There are three entries in the Registers of the Stationers' Company relating to "The Taming of a Shrew," but not one referring to Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," which was probably never printed until it was inserted in the folio of 1623. On the question, when it was originally composed, opinions, including my own, have varied considerably; but I now think we can arrive at a tolerably satisfactory decision. Malone first believed that "The Taming of the Shrew" was written in 1606, and subsequently gave 1596 as its probable date. It appears to me, that nobody has sufficiently attended to the apparently unimportant fact that in "Hamlet" Shakespeare mistakenly introduces the name of Baptist as that of a woman, while in "The
INTRODUCTION

Taming of the Shrew" Baptista is the father of Katharine and Bianca. Had he been aware when he wrote "Hamlet" that Baptista was the name of a man, he would hardly have used it for that of a woman; but before he produced "The Taming of the Shrew" he had detected his own error. The great probability is, that "Hamlet" was written at the earliest in 1601, and "The Taming of the Shrew" perhaps came from the pen of its author not very long afterwards.

The silence of Meres in 1598 regarding any such play by Shakespeare is also important: had it then been written, he could scarcely have failed to mention it; so that we have strong negative evidence of its non-existence before the appearance of Palladis Tamia.

As it is evident that Shakespeare made great use of the old comedy, both in his Induction and in the body of his play, it is not necessary to inquire particularly to what originals the writer of "The Taming of a Shrew" resorted. As regards the Induction, Drace was of opinion that the story of "The Sleepy Awakened," in the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments," was the source of the naini inventions which have, from time to time, been referred to.

The Suppositi of Ariosto, free translated by Gacwayne, (before 1566, when it was acted at Grey's Inn) under the title of the Supposes, seems to have afforded Shakespear part of his plot: it relates to the manner in which Lucentio and Tranio pass off the Pedant as Vincentio, which is not found in the old "Taming of a Shrew." Other slight links of connexion between "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Supposes" have also been noted. How little Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" was known in the beginning of the eighteenth century, may be judged from the fact, that "The Tatler," No. 231, contains the story of it, told as of a gentleman's family then residing in Lincolnshire.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

["All's Well that Ends Well" was first printed in the folio of 1623, and occupies twenty-five pages, viz., from p. 230 to p. 254, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It fills the same space and place in the three later folios.]

The most interesting question in connexion with "All's Well that Ends Well" is, whether it was originally called "Love's Labour's Won!" If it were, we may be sure that it was written before 1598; because in that year, and under the title of "Love Labours Won," it is included by Francis Meres in the list of Shakespeare's plays introduced into his Palladis Tamia.

It was the opinion of Coleridge, that "All's Well that Ends Well," as it has come down to us, was written at two different, and rather distant periods of the poet's life. He pointed out very clearly two distinct styles, not only of thought, but of expression; and Professor Tiek, at a later date, adopted and enforced the same belief. So far we are disposed to agree with Tiek; but when he adds, that some passages which it is difficult to understand and explain, are relics of the first draught for the play, we do not concur, because they are chiefly to be discovered in that portion of the drama which affords evidence of ripen thought. There can be little doubt, however, that Coleridge and Tiek are right in their conclusion, that "All's Well that Ends Well" contains indications of the workings of Shakespeare's mind, and specimens of his composition at two separate dates of his career.

It has been a point recently controverted, whether the "Love Labours Won" of Meres were the same piece as "All's Well that Ends Well." My notion is (and the speculation deserves no stronger term) that "All's Well that Ends Well" first appeared in the first instance, and prior to 1598, called "Love's Labour's Won," and that it had a clear reference to "Love's Labor's Lost," of which it might be considered the counterpart. It was then, perhaps, laid by for some years, and revived by his author, with alterations and additions, about 1605 or 1606, when the new title of "All's Well that Ends Well," was given to it. Possibly Shakespeare altered its name, in order to give an appearance of greater novelty to the re-creation on its revival. This surmise, if well founded, would account for the difference in the titles, as we find them in Meres and in the folio of 1623.

Without here entering into the question, whether Shakespeare understood Italian, of which, we think, little doubt can be entertained, we need not suppose that he went to Boccaccio's Decameron for the story of "All's Well that Ends Well," because he found it already translated to his hands, in "The Palace of Pleasure," by William Painter, of which the first volume was published in 1566, and the second in 1567. The version by Painter may be read in "Shakespeare's Library;" and hence it will appear, that the poet was only indebted to Boccaccio for the mere outline of his plot, as regards Helen, Bertram, the Widow, and Diana. All that belongs to the characters of the Countess, the Clown, and Parolles, and the comic business in which the last is engaged, were, as far as we now know, the invention of Shakespeare; and, but for his own name, the whole of Bertram, towards the end of the drama, by the duplicity, and even falsehood, he makes him display: Coleridge was offended by the fact, that in A. iii., sc. 5, Helena, "Shakespeare's loveliest character," speaks that which is untrue under the appearance of necessity; but Bertram is convicted by the King of telling a deliberate untruth, and of perverting the looks of Diana in the face of France. In Boccaccio the winding up of the story occurs at Rousillon, as in Shakespeare, but the King is no party to the scene. The substitution of Helena for Diana (as in "Measure for Measure") we had that of Marian for Isabella) was a common incident in Italian novels.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

["Twelfth Night, Or what you Will," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages, viz., from p. 256 to p. 276 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies," p. 276 having been left blank, and unengaged. It appears in the same form in the three later folios.]

We have no record of the performance of "Twelfth-Night" at court, nor is there any mention of it in the books at Stationers' Hall until November 8, 1623, when it was registered by Blount and Jaggard, as about to be included in the first folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies." It appeared originally in that volume, under the double title, "Twelfth-Night, Or What You Will," with the Acts and Scenes duly noted.

We cannot determine with precision when it was first written, but we know that it was acted on the celebration of the Readers' Feast at the Middle Temple on February 2, 1602, according to our modern calendarization of the year. This fact we have on the evidence of an eye-witness, a barrister, whose Diary, in his own hand-writing, is preserved in the British Museum. The memorandum runs, literatim, as follows:

"Feb'y 2, 1601[2]. At our feast we had a play called Twelve-Night, or What You Will, much like the comedy of errors performed in Plautus, but more like that in Italian, called Inganni. A good practice in it to make the steward believe his lady widdowe was in love with him, by counterfying a letter, and a kind of jest or trick, very common in Italian called Inganni." It was first acted in 1547, and the earliest edition of it, with which I am acquainted, did not appear until 1582, when it bore the title of GL Inganni Comedia del Signor N. S. The other Italian drama, founded upon Bandello's novel, bears a somewhat similar title:—GL Inganni Commedia degl' Accadentis Intemati di Scuro, which was several times printed; last, perhaps, in 1611, 12mo. Whether our great dramatist saw either of these pieces before he wrote his "Twelfth-Night" may admit of doubt; but looking at the terms Manningham employs, it might seem as if it were a matter understood, at the time. "Twelfth-Night" was acted at the Temple on February 2, 1602, that is, twenty days after upon Twelfth-Night, to conclude his ii.,

This remarkable entry was pointed out in the "History of English Dramatic Poetry and the Stage," 8vo, 1831, and the Rev. Joseph Hunter, in his "Disquisition On The Tempest," 8vo, 1839, has ascertained that it was made by a person of the name of Manningham. Even if it should be objected that we have no evidence to show that this Comedy was composed shortly prior to its representation at the Middle Temple, it may be answered, that its capability of being written at the time is wholly supported by the publication of the translation of Linschoten's "Discours of Voyages into the East and West Indies." In A. ii., sc. 2, Maria says of Malvolio: "He does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies." Linschoten's "Discours of Voyages" was published in folio in English in 1596, and in that volume is inserted "the new map with the augmentation of the Indies." Meres takes no notice of "Twelfth-Night," in his list, published in the same year, and we may conclude that the Comedy was not then in existence. The words "new map," employed by Shakespeare, may be thought to show that Linschoten's "Discours" had made its appearance long before "Twelfth-Night" was produced; but on the whole, we are inclined to fix the period of its composition at the end of 1600, or in the beginning of 1601: it might be acted at the Globe in the summer of the same year, and thence transferred to the Middle Temple about six months afterwards, on account of its continued popularity.

"Twelfth-Night," in English, French, and Italian, have been pointed out, nearly all of them discovered within the present century. A voluminous and various author of the name of Barnabe Rich, who had been brought up a soldier, published a volume, which he called "Rich his Farewell to Military Profession," without date, but between the years 1578 and 1581: a re-impression of it appeared in 1606, and it contains a novel entitled "Apolonius and Silla," which has many points of resemblance to Shakespeare's comedy. If our great dramatist at all availed himself of its incidents, he must of course have used an earlier edition than that of 1606. One minute circumstance in relation to it may deserve notice. Manningham in his Diary calls Olivia a "widow," and in Rich's novel the lady, who answers to Olivia, is a widow, but in Shakespeare she never had been married. It is possible that in the form in which the comedy was performed on February 2, 1601-2, she was a widow, and that the author subsequently made the change; but it is more likely, as Olivia must have been in mourning for the loss of her brother, that Manningham mistook her condition, and concluded hastily that she lamented the loss of her husband.

Rich furnishes us with the title of no work to which he was indebted; but we may conclude that, either immediately or intermittently, he derived his chief materials from the Italian of Bandello, or from the French of Belleforest.

Upon the novel by Bandello two Italian plays were composed, which were printed, and have come to our time. The title of one of these is given by Manningham, where he says that Shakespeare's "Twelfth-Night" is most like that in Italian called Inganni." It was first acted in 1547, and the earliest edition of it, with which I am acquainted, did not appear until 1582, when it bore the title of GL Inganni Comedia del Signor N. S. The other Italian drama, founded upon Bandello's novel, bears a somewhat similar title:—GL Inganni Commedia degl' Accadentis Intemati di Scuro, which was several times printed; last, perhaps, in 1611, 12mo. Whether our great dramatist saw either of these pieces before he wrote his "Twelfth-Night" may admit of doubt; but looking at the terms Manningham employs, it might seem as if it were a matter understood, at the time. "Twelfth-Night" was acted at the Temple on February 2, 1602, that is, twenty days after upon Twelfth-Night, to conclude his ii.,

In the details of the plot, as well as in the conduct and characters of the two plays, there is some resemblance between GL Inganni and "Twelfth-Night"; but our great dramatist has given an actual, as well as an intellectual elevation to the whole subject, by the manner in which he has treated it; and has co-opted, it may be, in most respects, be considered a low comedy into a fine romantic drama.

The likeness between GL Inganni and "Twelfth-Night" is certainly, in some points of the story, stronger than that between GL Inganni and Shakespeare's drama; but to neither can we say, with any degree of certainty, that our great dramatist resorted, although he had perhaps read both, when he was composing his best mode of adapting to the stage the incidents of Bandello's novel. There is no hint, in any source yet discovered, for the smallest portion of the comic business of "Twelfth-Night." In both the Italian dramas it is of the most homely and vulgar materials, by the intervention of empes, braggarts, pedants, and servants, who deal in the coarsest jokes, and are guilty of most base coquetry. Shakespeare shows his infinite superiority in each department: in the more serious portion of his drama he employed the incidents furnished by predecessors as the mere scaffolding for the erection of his own beautiful edifice; and for the comic scenes, combining so admirably with, and assisting so importantly in the progress of the main plot, he seems, as usual, to have drawn merely upon his own interminable resources.

It was an opinion, confidently stated by Colderidge in his lectures in 1818, that the passage in Act ii. sc. 4, beginning

"Too old, by heaven! let still the woman take An elder than herself," had a direct application to the circumstances of his marriage with Anne Hathaway, who was so much senior to the poet. Some of Shakespeare's biographers had previously enforced this notion, and others have since followed it up; but Colderidge took the opportunity of enlarging eloquently on the manner in which young poets have frequently connected themselves with women of very ordinary personal and mental attractions, the imagination supplying all deficiencies, clothing the object of affection with grace and beauty, and furnishing her with every accomplishment.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

("The Winter's Tale" was first printed in folio in 1623, where it occupies twenty-seven pages, from p. 372 to 399, and is the last in the division of "Comedies." The book of p. 398 is left blank and unengaged. The later folios adopt the same arrangement.

In the Stationers' Registers there is no earlier entry of "The Winter's Tale" than that of November 8, 1623, when the publication of the first folio was contemplated by Blount and Jaggard.

Three pieces of evidence tend to the conclusion, that "The Winter's Tale" was brought out early in 1611: the first of these has never until now been adduced, and it consists of the following entry in the account of the Master of the Revels, Sir George Buc, from the 31st of October, 1611, to the same day, 1612:—

"The 5th of November: A play called the winters nigites Tale.

No author's name is mentioned, but the piece was represented at Whitehall, by "the king's players," as we find stated in the margin, and there can be no hesitation in deciding that "The Winter's Night's Tale" was Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale:" and that this play, which is also included in the same account, was probably selected in consequence of its novelty and popularity.

The second piece of evidence on this point has also recently come to light. It is contained in a MS. Diary, or Note-book kept by Dr. Simon Forman, in which, under date of the 15th May, 1611, he states that he saw "The Winter's Tale," at the Globe Theatre: this was the May preceding the representation of it at Court on the 5th November. He gives a brief account of the plot, which ingeniously includes all the main incidents. We have reason to think that "The Winter's Tale" was in its first run on the 15th May, 1611, and that the Globe Theatre had not then been long opened for the season.

The opinion that the play was then a novelty, is strongly confirmed by the third piece of evidence, which Malone discovered late in life. He found a memorandum in the office-book of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels, dated the 19th August, 1623, in which it was stated that "The Winter's Tale," by Shakespeare, had been performed before Sir George Buc. Sir George Buc was Master of the Revels from October, 1610, until May, 1622. Sir George Buc must, therefore, have licensed "The Winter's Tale" between October, 1610, when he was appointed to his office, and May, 1611, when Forman saw it at the Globe.

It might have been composed by Shakespeare in the autumn and winter of 1610-11, with a view to its production on the Bank-side, as soon as the usual performances by the King's players commenced there.

We have seen that "The Tempest" and "The Winter's Tale" were both acted at Whitehall, from October, 1611, to October, 1612. How much older "The Tempest" might be than "The Winter's Tale," we have no means of determining; but there is a circumstance which shows that the composition of "The Tempest" was anterior to that of "The Winter's Tale;" and this brings us to speak of the novel upon which the latter is founded.

As early as the year 1588, Robert Greene printed a tract entitled "The Passion of Pantagruel, The Tale of Time," better known as "The History of Durastus and Fawnia," the title it bore in some of the later copies. As far as we now know, it was not reprinted until 1607, and a third impression appeared in 1609: it afterwards went through many editions; but it seems not unlikely that Shakespeare was directed to it, as a proper subject for dramatic representation, by the third impression which came out the year before we suppose him to have commenced writing his "Winter's Tale." In many respects our great dramatist follows Greene's story very closely, as may be seen by the recent republication of "Pantagruel" from the unique copy of 1588, in "Shakespeare's Library." There is, however, one remarkable variation, which it is necessary to point out. Greene says:—

"The guard left her" (the Queen) "in this perplexity, and carried the child to the king, who, quite devoid of pity, commanded that without delay it should be put in the boat, having neither soil norrudder to guide it, and so to be carried into the midst of the sea, and there left to the wind and wave, as the destinies please to appoint."

The child thus "left to the wind and wave" is the Perdita of Shakespeare, who describes the way in which the infant was exposed very differently, and probably for this reason:—that in "The Tempest" he had previously (perhaps not long before) represented Prospero and Miranda turned adrift on sea in the same manner as Greene had stated his heroine to have been disposed of. When, therefore, Shake- speare came to write "The Winter's Tale," instead of following Greene, as he had usually done in other minor circumstances, he varied from the original narrative, in order to avoid an objectionable similarity of incident in his two dramas. In representing the Bohemian child as exposed, Shakespeare adopted the popular notion, as it had been encouraged since 1588 by Grece's "Pantagruel."

"The idea of this delightful dramat" (says Colc- ridge in his Lit. Rem.) "is a genuine jealousy of disposition, and it should be immediately followed by the perusal of 'Othello,' which is the direct contrast of this idea, and it shows a firmness in the mind, a culpable tendency of temper, having certain well-known and well-defined effects and consequences, all of which are visible in Leonteus, and I boldly say, not one of which marks its presence in Othello."

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN.

("The Life and Death of King John" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages; viz: from p. 1 to p. 23 inclusive, a new pagination beginning with the "Historie of the Levies." It occupies the same place and the same space in the re-impressions of 1632, 1643, and 1663.)

"King John," the earliest of Shakespeare's "Histories" in the folio of 1623, (where they are arranged according to the reigns of the different monarchs,) first appeared in that volume, and the Registers of the Stationers' Company have been searched in vain for any entry regarding it: it is not enumerated by Blount and Jaggard on the 8th November, 1623, when they inserted a list of the pieces, "not formerly entered to other men," about to be included in their folio; hence an inference might be drawn that there had been some previous entry of "King John" to other men," and, perhaps, even that the play had been anonymously published.

It seems indisputable that Shakespeare's "King John" was founded upon an older play, three times printed anterior to the publication of the folio of 1623: “The first and second part of the troublesome Reign of John, King of England,” came from the press in 1594, 1611, and 1622. Malone, and others who have adverted to this production, have obviously not had the several impressions before them. The earliest copy, that of 1594, has no name or surname at all, but bears the initials “W. Sh.” to indicate the author, and that of 1622, “W. Shakespeare,” the surname only at length. Steevens once thought that the ascription of it to Shakespeare by fraudulent booksellers, who wished it to be taken for his popular work, was correct, but he subsequently abandoned this untenable opinion.

Some early editors, believing King John to have been in possession of the stage prior to 1591, when it was originally printed, we have no precise information, but Shakespeare found it there, and took the course usual with dramatists of the time, by applying to his own purposes as much of it as he thought would be advantageous. He converted the “two parts” into one drama, and in many of the main features followed the story, not as he knew it in history, but as it was fixed in popular belief. In some particulars he much improved upon the conduct of the incidents: for instance, in the first act of the old “King John,” Lady Falconbridge is, needlessly and objectionably, made a spectator of the scene in which the bastardy of her son Philip is discussed before King John and his mother. Another amendment of the original is the absence of Constance from the stage when the marriage between Lewis and Blanch is debated and determined. A third material variation ought not to be passed over without remark. Although Shakespeare, like the author or authors of the old “King John,” employs the Bishop of Canterbury’s register from the monasteries in England, he avoids the scenes of extortion and racydlry of the elder play, in which the monks and nuns are turned into ridicule, and the indecency and licentiousness of their lives exposed.

Upon the question, when “King John” was written by Shakespeare, we have no knowledge beyond the fact that Francis Meres introduces it into his list in 1598. Sir Walter Scott would assign it to the reign of John, 1598, but the chance seems to be, that it was written a short time before it was spoken of by Meres: we should be disposed to assign it to a date between 1596 and 1598, when the old “King John” had gone a little out of recollection, and when Meres would have had time to become acquainted with Shakespeare’s drama.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

KING RICHARD II.

“The Tragedie of King Richard the Second: with new additions of the Parliament Scene, and the deposing of King Richard. As it hath been late actedy by the Kings Majesties seruants, at the Globe. By William Shakespeare. London Printed for John Stilly, and are to be sold at his shop in Paules Church-yard, at the signe of the Fox. 1615. 4to. 39 leaves.

In the folio of 1623, “The life and death of King Richard the Second” occupies twenty-three pages, viz, from p. 23 to p. 45, inclusive. The three other folios reprint it in the same form, and in all it is divided into Acts and Scenes.)

Above we have given the titles of four quarto editions of “King Richard II,” which preceded the publication of the folio of 1623, and which were all published during the lifetime of Shakespeare: they bear date respectively in 1597, 1598, 1608, and 1615. It will be observed that the title of the edition of 1608 states that it contains “new additions of the Parliament Scene, and the deposing of King Richard.” The Duke of Devonshire is in possession of an unique copy, dated 1608, the title of which merely follows the wording of the preceding impression of 1598, omitting any notice of “new additions,” though containing the whole of them. The same of our great dramatist first appears in connection with this historical play in 1598, as if Shakespeare, on White’s Wise comment, had printed and published their edition of 1597, did not know, or were not authorized to state, that Shakespeare was the writer of it. Precisely the same was the case with “King Richard III,” printed and published by the same parties in the same year.

We will first speak regarding the date of the original production of “Richard II,” and then of the period when it is likely that the “new additions” were inserted.

It was entered on the Stationers’ Register in 1597, in the following manner:—

This memorandum was made anterior, but perhaps only shortly anterior, to the actual publication of “Richard II,” and it forms the earliest notice of its existence. Malone supposes that it was written in 1593, but he does not produce a single fact or argument to support his view, and it is contended that a note of time was to be found in the allusions in the first and second Acts to the disturbances in Ireland. It is quite certain that the rebellion in that country was revived in 1594, and proclaimed in 1595: but it is far from clear that any reference to it was intended by Shakespeare. Where the matter is so extremely doubtful, we shall not attempt to fix on any particular year. Meres mentions “Richard the 2” in 1598.

Respecting the “new additions” of “the depo- sing of King Richard” we have some evidence, the existence of which was not known in the time of Malone, who conjectured that this scene had originally formed part of Shakespeare’s play, and was “suppressed in the printed copy of 1597, from the fear of offending Elizabeth,” and not published, with the rest, until 1608. Such may have been the case, but we now know that there were two separate plays upon the events of the reign of Richard II., and the deposition seems to have formed a portion of both.

For the incidents of this “most admirable of all Shakespeare’s purely historical plays,” as Coleridge calls it, our great poet appears to have gone no further than Holinshed, who was himself indebted to Hall and Fabian. However, Shakespeare has nowhere felt himself bound to adhere to chronology when it better answered his purpose to desert it.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Thus, the Prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., is spoken of in Act v., sc. 3, as frequenting taverns and stews, when he was in fact only twelve years old. This is exactly one of those anachronisms which, in the words of Schlegel, Shakespeare committed "purposely and most deliberately." His design, of course, was in this instance to link together "Richard II." and the first part of "Henry IV."

Of the four quartos of "Richard II." the most valuable, for its readings and general accuracy beyond all dispute, is the impression of 1597. The other three quartos were, more or less, printed from it, and the folio of 1623, which has taken the later impression of 1597, as the foundation of its text; but, from a few words found only in the folio, it may seem that the play-editors referred also to some extrinsic authority. It is quite certain, however, that the folio copied obvious and indisputable blunders from the quarto of 1615.

The 4to. edition of 1613 also consists of 40 leaves: and the only difference from that of 1608 is that the signature "f. 4to." of 1608 are the date, and the statement that it was "Printed by W. W.".

In the folio of 1623, "The First Part of Henry the Fourth, with the Life and Death of Henry Sirnamed Hot-spurre," occupies twenty-six pages, viz., from p. 46 to p. 73 inclusive. In the later folio it is reprinted in the same form."

At the time when Shakespeare selected the portion of history included in the following play, as a fit subject for dramatic representation, the stage was in possession of old plays, entitled "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth," of which three early impressions, one printed in 1598, and two others without date, have come down to us: a copy of one edition without date is in the Collection of the Duke of Devonshire; and, judging from the type and other circumstances, we may conclude that it was anterior to the impression of 1598, and that it made its appearance shortly after 1594, on the 14th of May of which year it was entered on the Stationers' Registers. The fact of its being in prose, may lead to the conjecture that it was not written until after 1588. That a play upon the events of the reign of Henry V. was upon the stage in 1592, we have the indisputable evidence of Thomas Nash, in his notorious work, "Pierce Penniless, his Supplication," which went through three editions in the same year: we quote from the first, where he says, "What a glorious thing it is to have Henry the Fifth represented on the Stage, leading the French King prisoners, and forcing him and the Dolphin to swear allegiance to him! We know also that a drama, called "Harry the V.," was performed by Henslowe's Company on the 29th November, 1595, and it appears likely that it was a revival of "The Famous Victories," with some important additions, which gave it the attraction of a new play; for the receipts (as we find by Henslowe's Diary) of such works as was generally only produced by a first representation. The reproduction of "The Famous Victories" by a rival company, possibly led Shakespeare to consider in what way, and with what improvements, he could avail himself of some of the same incidents for the theatre to which he belonged. The year 1596 may therefore have been the date when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry IV.," Part i.

It is to be observed, that the incidents which are summarily dismissed in one old play, are extended by our great dramatist over three—the two parts of "Henry IV." and "Henry V." It is impossible to institute any parallel between "The Famous Victories" and Shakespeare's drama; for, besides that the former has reached us evidently in mutilated shape, the immeasurable superiority of the latter is such, as to render any attempt to trace resemblance rather a matter of contrast than comparison.

Sir John Oldcastle is one of the persons in "The Famous Victories," and no doubt can be entertained that the character of Sir John Falstaff, in the first part of Shakespeare's "Henry IV.," was originally the stimulation to Oldcastle. The question could formerly have been felt upon this point, it must have been recently entirely removed by Mr. Halliwell's very curious and interesting tract, "On the character of Sir John Falstaff, as originally exhibited by Shakespeare," 12mo, 1841. How the identity of Oldcastle and Falstaff could ever have been questioned after the discovery in the following play by Nathaniel Field, called, "Amends for Ladies," 1618, it is difficult to comprehend; the lines seem to us decisive:

"—Did you never see
The play where the fat knight, right Oldcastle, Did tell you truly what this honor was?"

This can allude to nothing but to Falstaff's speech in Act v. sc. 2, of the ensuing play; and it would also show (as Mr. Halliwell points out) that Falstaff sometimes retained the name of Oldcastle after the author had altered it to that of Falstaff.

Although we are without any contemporaneous notices of the performance of Shakespeare's "Henry IV." Part i., there cannot be a doubt that it was extraordinarily popular. It went through five distinct impressions in 4to, in 1598, 1599, 1604, 1608, and 1613, before it was printed in the first folio. Meres introduces "Henry the IVth" into his list in 1598, and we need feel little doubt that he alluded to Part i., because, on a preceding page, he makes a quotation from one of Falstaff's speeches,—"there is nothing but ragery in villainous man,"—though without acknowledging the source from which it was taken.

With regard to the text of this play, it is unquestionably found in its purest state in the earliest 4to. of 1598, and to that we have mainly adhered. The editors of the folio, 1623, copied implicitly the 4to.

"The Chronicle History of Henry the Fifth, with his battle fought at Agin Court in France. Together with ancient Fistall. As it hath been sundry times played by the Right honorable the Lord Chamberlain his servants. Printed for T. P. 1610. 4to. 27 leaves.

"The Life of Henry the Fift, in the folio of 1623, occupies twenty-seven pages. Viz. from p. 69 to p. 95 inclusive. The pagination from "Henry IV." Part ii. to "Henry V." is not continued, but a new series begins with "Henry V." on p. 69, and is regularly followed to the end of the "Histories." The folio, 1623, adopts this error, but it is avoided in the later folio impressions."

It is a circumstance deserving remark, that not one of the title-pages of the three quarto editions of "Henry V." attributes the authorship of the play to Shakespeare. The fact, no doubt, is, that there never was an authorized edition of "Henry V." until 1599, when he appeared in the folio of 1600, and that the quarto impressions were surreptitious, and were published without the consent of the author, or of the company to which he was attached. The dramas must have enjoyed great respect, if not more than the modern productions for which Shakespeare was instrumental in giving to the world some pieces, with the composition of which Shakespeare had no concern, though ascribed to him on the title-page. The internal evidence shows that the edition was made up, not from any authentic manuscript, nor even from any combination of the separate parts delivered out to the actors by the copist of the play, but from what could be taken down in short notes, which were communicated to the players, and which were substituted for the performance taking place. A play called "Henry V." was represented at Court on the 7th January, 1605, as we learn from "The Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels," edited by Mr. 1. Cunningham, and printed by the Shakespeare Society; and these important additions may have been inserted for that occasion. The entry runs, literatim, as follows—

"On the 7 of January was played the play of Henry the fit."

In the margin we are informed that it was acted by his Majesty's players, but the name of the author is not in this instance given, although "Shaxberd" is placed opposite the title of "Measure for Measure," stated to have been exhibited on a preceding night. The fact that the actors belonged to Shakespeare's company renders it most probable that his play was performed on the occasion.

Our opinion, then, is that Shakespeare did not originally write his "Henry V." by any means as we find it in the folio of 1623, and that it was first produced without various scenes and speeches subsequently written and introduced: we are perfectly convinced that the three quarto editions of 1600, 1602, and 1608, do not at all contain the play as it was acted in the first instance; but were hastily made up from notes taken at the theatre during the performance, subsequently patched together, and printed in haste for the satisfaction of public curiosity. Now and then we meet with a few consecutive lines, showing the existence of a separate copy, but in general the text is monstrously mangled and disfigured.

The quartos contain no hint of the Choruses, but a passage in which precedes Act v. certainly relates to the expedition of the Earl of Essex to Ireland, between the 15th April and the 28th September, 1599, and must have been written during his absence:—

"As, by a lower but loving likelihood, Were now the general of our gracious empress (As in good time he may) from Ireland coming, Bringing rebellion branched on his sword, How would the peaceful city quit To welcome him?"

The above lines were, therefore, composed between the 15th April and the 28th September, 1599, and most likely the Choruses formed part of the piece as originally acted. Upon this supposition, the question when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry VI." is brought to a narrow point; and confirmed as it is by the omission of all mention of the play by Meres, in his "Palladis Tamia," 1598, we need feel little doubt that his first sketch came from the pen of Shakespeare, for performance at the Globe theatre, early in the summer of 1599. The enlarged drama, as it stands in the folio of 1623, we are disposed to believe was not put into the complete shape in which it has there come down to us, until shortly before the date when it was played at Court.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

["The First Part of Henry the Sixth" was printed originally in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-four pages; viz., from p. 96 to p. 119, inclusive, in the division of "Histories." It was reprinted in the folio 1632, 1664, and 1665.]

This historical drama is first found in the folio of 1623: no earlier edition of it in any shape, or in any degree of imperfection, has been discovered. This single fact is sufficient, in our mind, to establish Shakespeare's claim to the authorship of it, even were we to take Malone's assertion for granted (which we are by no means inclined to do) that the internal evidence is all opposed to that claim. When Heminge and Condell published the folio of 1623, many of Shakespeare's contemporaries, authors, actors, and auditors, were alive; and the player-editors, if they would have been guilty of the desire of honesty, would hardly have committed the folly of inserting a play in their volume which was not his production, and perhaps well known to have been the work of some rival dramatist.

Our opinion is therefore directly adverse to that of Malone, who, having been "long struck with the manage of the parts Shakespeare essayed in these plays," afterwards came to the conclusion that he had been entirely mistaken, and that none of these peculiarities were to be traced in the first part of "Henry VI.": "I am, therefore (he added), decisively of opinion, that this play was not written by Shakespeare.

With reference to the question, how far and at what time Shakespeare became connected with the plays, known as the three parts of "Henry VI.," it is necessary to observe, that it was very usual in the time of our great dramatist, for one poet to take up the production of another, and, by making additions to and improvements on it, to stamp it as his own, and to introduce the use of the theatre to which he belonged. This practice applied to the works of living as well as of dead poets, and it has been conjectured that when Robert Greene spoke of Shakespeare, as "the only Shakes-\(\text{e}n\)e in a country," and as "an upstart crow beautified with our feathers," he alluded explicitly to the manifest fact which Shakespeare had employed certain dramas, by Greene and others, as the foundation of his three parts of "Henry VI." These certain dramas were some undiscovered original of the first part of "Henry VI."

It was by making additions, alterations, and improvements in these three pieces, that Shakespeare's name became associated with them as their author, and hence the player-editors felt themselves justified in inserting them among his other works in the folio of 1623. There are several other theories respecting the older plays we have been considering. Either of the molluscs, it seems to us, is supported by sufficient testimony.

Although no such drama has come down to us, we know, on the authority of Henslowe's Diary, that there was a play called "Harey the VI.," acted on 3d March, 1591-2, and so popular as to have been repeated twelve times. This was, perhaps, the piece which Shakespeare subsequently altered and improved, and to which Nash alludes in his "Pierce Penniless," 1592, where he speaks of "brave Talbot" having been made "to triumph again on the stage," after having been two hundred years in his tomb.

If our great dramatist founded his first part of "Henry VI.," upon the play produced by Henslowe's company, of course, it could not have been written until after March, 1592; but with regard to the precise date of its composition we must remain in uncertainty. Malone's later notion was, as we have already observed, that Shakespeare's hand was not to be traced in any part of it; but Steevens called attention to several remarkable coincidences of episodes and language, though there is not the strongest presumptive evidence that more than one author was engaged on the work, passages might be point out so much in the spirit and character of Shakespeare, that we cannot conceive them to have come from any other pen.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

["The second Part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Good Duke Humphrey," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-seven pages; viz., from p. 190 to p. 146, inclusive, in the division of "Histories." It fills the same place in the subsequent folio impressions.]

The "history" is an alteration of a play printed in 1594, under the following title: "The First part of the Contention betwixt the two famous houses of York and Lancaster, with the death of the good Duke Humphrey: And the banishment and death of the Duke of Suffolk, and the Tragicall end of the proud Cardinal of Winchester, with the notable Rebellion of Jacke Cade: And the Duke of Yorkes first clame unto the Crowne. London Printed by Thomas Creed, for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his shop under Saint Peter's Church in the City of London, by the Spine of Mr. Yarde, 1619."

The first part of the play here printed is a far better copy of Shakespeare than the preceding part. It is a more complete copy, and is the better for it, inasmuch as it is not marked with the flaws of the three earlier parts. The play is a more serious and philosophical piece than the earlier parts, and it is in this part that Shakespeare approaches nearest to the style and thought of the contemplative poet.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS. lxv

Cornwall, 1594." By whom it was written we have no information; but it was entered on the Stationers' Registers on the 12th March, 1593. Millington published a second edition of it in 1600: on the 19th April, 1602, it was assigned by Millington to Tho. Pavier, and we hear of it again, in the Stationers' Register, merely as "York and Lancaster," on the 5th November, 1630.

The name of Shakespeare was not connected with "the first part of the Contention," until about the year 1619, when T. P. (Thomas Pavier) printed a new edition of the first, and what he called "the second, part" of the same play, with the name of "William Shakespeare, Great," upon the general title-page. The object of Pavier was no doubt fraudulent: he wished to have it believed, that the old play was the production of our great dramatist. Shakespeare's property, according to our present notions, was only in the additions and improvements he introduced, which are included in the folios of 1623. But the old play has many passages which Shakespeare rejected, and the murder of Duke Humphrey is somewhat differently managed. In general, however, Shakespeare adopted the whole context of the story, and we need not think it necessary to correct the obvious historical errors of the original. It is impossible to assign a date to this play excepting by conjecture.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The third Part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Duke of York," was first printed in the folio of 1663, where it comprises twenty-six pages, in the division of "Histories," viz., from p. 147 to p. 172, inclusive, pages 165 and 166 being misprinted 167 and 168, so that these numbers are twice inserted. The error is corrected in the folios 1664 and 1685."

None of the commentators ever saw the first edition of the drama upon which, we may presume, Shakespeare founded his third part of "Henry VI.:" it bears the following title: "The true Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, and the death of the good King Henrie the Sixth, with the whole content of the two houses Lancaster and York, as it was sundrie times acted by the Right Honourable the Earle of Pembroke his servants, Printed at London by P. S. for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his shoppe under Saint Peters Church in Cornwall. 1595." Vso. This play, like "the First Part of the Contention," was reprinted for the same bookseller in 1600, 4to. About the year 1619 a re-impression of both plays was published by T. P.; and the name of Shakespeare, as has been already observed in our Introduction to "Henry VI.,” part ii, first appears in connection with these "histories" in that edition. The object of Pavier, as before remarked, was no doubt fraudulent.

Claimers, who possessed the only known copy of "The True Tragedy," 1595, without scruple assigned that piece to Christopher Marlowe. Although there is no ground whatever for giving it to Marlowe, there is some reason for supposing that it came from the pen of Robert Greene.

As in "Henry VI.," part ii, Shakespeare availed himself of "The First Part of the Contention," 1594, to in "Henry VI.," part iii, he applied to his own purposes much of "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York," 1595. He made, however, considerable omissions, as well as large additions, and in the last two Acts he sometimes varied materially from the conduct of the story as he found it in the older play.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedy of Richard the Third; with the Landing of the Earl of Richmond, and the Battle at Bosworth Field," occupies thirty-two pages, viz., from p. 171 to 204, inclusive. There is no material variation in the later folios.

The popularity of Shakespeare's "Richard the Third" must have been great, judging only from the various quarto editions which preceded the publication of it in the folio of 1623. It originally came out in 1597, without the name of the author: it was reprinted in 1598, with "by William Shakespere" on the title-page, and again in 1602, all three impressions having been made for the same bookseller, Andrew Wise, who professed, in his last edition, that the play had been "newly augmented," although it was in fact only a reprint of the previous impressions of 1597 and 1598. On the 27th June, 1603, it was assigned to Matthew Lawe, as appears by an entry in the Stationers' Registers; accordingly, he published the fourth edition of it with the date of 1605: this fifth edition was printed for the same bookseller in 1613. This last time it came out in quarto, anterior to its appearance in the first folio; but after that date, three other quarto impressions are known, viz., in 1624, 1629, and 1634, and it is remarkable that these were all mere reprints of the earlier quarto, not one of them including any of the passages which the player-editors of the folio first inserted in their volume. This fact might show that some members of the players did not know that there were any material variations between the earlier quarto and the folio, that they
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

... did not think them of importance, or that the projectors of the folio were considered to have some species of copyright in the additions. These additions, part of the original play. Steevens was of opinion that the quarto, 1597, contained a better text than the folio; such is not our opinion; for though the quarto sets right several doubtful matters, it is not well printed, even for a production of that day, and bears marks of having been brought out in haste, and from an imperfect manuscript. The copy of the "History" in the folio of 1623 was in some places a reprint of the quarto, 1602, as several obvious errors of the press are repeated. For the additions, a manuscript was no doubt employed; and the variations in some scenes, particularly near the middle of the play, are so numerous, and the corrections so frequent, that it is probable a transcript belonging to the theatre was there consulted. Our text is that of the folio.

The earliest entry in the Stationers' Registers relating to Shakespeare's "Richard the Third," is in these terms:—

"20 Oct. 1597 Andrew Wise. The Tragedie of Kynge Richard the Third, with the death of the Duke of Clarence." It is certain that there was an historical drama upon some of the events of the reign of Richard III., anterior to that of Shakespeare. Sir John Harington in his "Apologie for Poetry," 1591, speaks of a tragedy of "Richard the Third," acted at St. John's, Cambridge, which would "have moved Phidias, the tyrant, and terrified all tyrannous-minded men:" and Steevens adduced Heywood's "Apology for Actors," 1612, to the same effect. Both those authors, however, referred to a Latin drama on the story of Richard III., written by Dr. Legge, and acted at Cambridge before 1588. Steevens followed up his quotation from Heywood by the copy of an entry in the Stationers' Registers, dated June 19, 1594, relating to an English play on the same subject. A perfect copy of this very rare play is in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, and from it we transcribe the following title-page:—

"The true Tragedie of Richard the third; Wherein is shewed the death of Edward the fourth, with the smothering of the two young Princes in the Tower; With a lamentable case of Shore's wife, an example for all wicked women. And lastly, the commotion and laying of the two noble Houses, Lancaster and Yorke. As it was played by the Queens-Majesties Players. London Printed by Thomas Creede, and are to be sold by William Barley, at his shop in Newgate Market, near Christ Church doore, 1594."

The piece, itself, as a literary composition, deserves little remark, but as a drama it possesses several curious features. It is in some respects unlike any relic of the kind, and was evidently written several years before it came from Creede's press, probably as early as 1588.

The style in which it is composed merits observation: it is partly in prose, partly in heavy blank-verse, (such as was penned before Marlowe had inaugurated the new form,) partly in rhymed and advanced couplets, partly in sit-syllable rhyming couplets, and stanzas, and partly in the long fourteen-syllable metre, which seems to have been popular even before prose was employed upon our stage. In every view of it, it may be asserted, few more curious dramatic relics exist in our language. It is perhaps the most ancient printed specimen of composition for a public theatre, of which the subject was derived from English history.

Boswell asserts that "The True Tragedy of Richard the Third" had "evidently been used and read by Shakespeare," but we cannot trace any peculiarity in the play which was probably purely accidental, and are merely trivial. Two persons could hardly take up the same period of our annals, as the ground-work of a drama, without some coincidences; but there is no point, either in the conduct of the plot or in the language in which it is clothed, where our great dramatist does not show his measureless superiority. The portion of the story in which the two plays may best approach one another, is just before the murder of the princes, where Richard strangely takes a page into his confidence respecting the fittest agent for the purpose.

Malone was of opinion that Shakespeare wrote "Richard the Third" in 1593, but did not adduce a particle of evidence, and none in fact exists. We should be disposed to place it somewhat nearer the time of publication.

KING HENRY VIII.

["The Famous History of the Life of King Henry the Eighth," printed in the folio of 1553, where it occupies twenty-eight pages; viz. from p. 256 to p. 283, inclusive. It is the last play in the division of "Histories." It fills the same place in the later impression in the same form.]

The principal question, in relation to Shakespeare's "Henry the Eighth," is, when it was written. We are satisfied, both by the internal and external evidence, that it came from the poet's pen after James I. had ascended the throne, in 1603.

Independently of the whole character of the drama, which was little calculated to please Elizabeth, it seems to us that Cranmer's prophecy, in Act v. sc. 4, is quite decisive. There the poet first speaks of Elizabeth, and of the advantages derived from her rule, and then proceeds in the clearest manner to notice her successor:—

"Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself: So shall she leave her blessedness to one (When heavens shall call her from this cloud of darkness) Who, from the sacred ashes of her honor, Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fast."

Ingenuity cannot pervert these lines to any other meaning; but it has been said that they, and some others which follow them, were a subsequent introduction; and, moreover, that they were the work of Ben Jonson. A very recent revival of the play in the reign of James I. does not exist the slightest evidence to establish either proposition. Any person, reading the whole of Cranmer's speech at the christening, can hardly fail to perceive such an entireness and sequence of thoughts and words in it, as to make it very unlikely that it was not dictated by the same intellect, and written by the same pen. The words "aged print," in a succeeding line (no part of the inspired addition by Jonson) would never have been used by Shakespeare during the life of Elizabeth.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

As to external evidence, there is one fact which has never had sufficient importance given to it. We allude to the following memorandum in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:

"12 Feb. 1604

"Nath. Butler. By ye good allowance for the Entertainments of K. Henry 8th before he began to print it; and then procured the wardens hands to yt for the entrance of yt: he is to have the same for his copy."

Chalmers asserted that this entry referred to a contemporaneous play by Samuel Rowley, under the title of "The Procession of K. Henry 8th," on which we need not now enter. It may be observed that the "enterlude" is expressly called in the entry "K. Henry 8th," and we feel no hesitation in concluding that it referred to Shakespeare's drama, which had probably been brought out at the Globe Theatre in the summer of 1604. No edition of it is known before it appeared in the folio of 1623, and we may infer that Butler failed in getting "good allowance" with the wardens' hands to it.

In the instance of "Henry the Eighth," as of many other works by our great dramatist, there is ground for believing that there existed a preceding play on the same story. Henslowe's Diary affords us some important evidence on this point. According to this authority two plays were written in the year 1601 for the Earl of Pembroke's Theatre, relating to the events of the life of Cardinal Wolsey, including necessarily some of the chief incidents of the reign of Henry VIII. These plays consisted of a first and second part, the one called "The Rising of Cardinal Wolsey," and the other, "Cardinal Wolsey." We collect that the last was produced first, and in the sequel it met with so much success that the occasion of the second drama, containing, in fact, the commencement of the story. Of this course of proceeding Henslowe's Diary furnishes several other examples.

We may conclude with tolerable certainty that Shakespeare wrote "Henry the Eighth" in the winter of 1600-1, and that it was first acted at the Globe soon after the commencement of the season there, which seems to have begun towards the close of April, as soon as a theatre open to the weather could be conveniently employed. The coronation procession of Anne Boleyn forms a prominent feature in the drama; and as the coronation of James I. and Anne of Denmark took place on the 24th July, 1603, it is reasonable to suppose that the auditors at the Globe were intended to be reminded of that event, and that the show, detailed with such unusual minuteness in the folio of 1623, was meant as a remote imitation of its splendor.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA:

[The Famous Historic of Troilus and Cressied. Excellently expressing the beginning of all the wars, with the covered weding of Pandarces Prince of Licia. Written by William Shakespeare. London Imprinted by G. Eld for R. Bonian and W. White, to be sold at the sign of the gloves in Paub's Church-yard, near against the great North door. 1609"

4to. 46 leaves.

"The History of Troilus and Cressida. As it was acted by the Kings Men actants at the Globe. Written by William Shakespeare. London Imprinted by G. Eld for R. Bonian and W. White, to be sold at the sign of the gloves in Paub's Church-yard, near against the great North door. 1609"

4to. 45 leaves.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedie of Troilus and Cressida" occupies twenty-nine pages, the Prologue filling the first page and the last being left blank. It retains its place in the later folio; but in that of 1685 the Prologue is placed at the head of the page on which the play commences."

This play was originally printed in 1609. It was formerly supposed that there were two editions in that year, but they were merely different issues of the same impression; the body of the work (with two exceptions) is alike in each; they were from the types of the same printer, and were published by the same booksellers. The title-pages, as may be seen, vary materially; but there is another more remarkable alteration. On the title-page of the copies first circulated, it is not stated that the drama had been represented by any company; and in a sort of preface headed, "A never Witter to an ever Reader. News," it is asserted that it had never been "staled with the stage, never clapper-clawed with the palms of the vulgar;" in other words, that the play had not been acted. This was probably true; but as "Troilus and Cressida" was very soon afterwards brought upon the stage, it became necessary for the publishers to substitute a new title-page and to state that accordingly a re-issue of the same edition took place, by the title-page of which it appeared, that the play was printed "as it was acted by the King's Majesty's servants at the Globe."

In the Stationers' Register are two entries, of distinct dates, relating to a play, or plays, called, "Troilus and Cressida": they are in the following terms:

"7 Feb. 1602-3

"Mr. Roberts] The booke of Troilus and Cressida, as yt is actyd by my Lo. Chamberlens men."

"28 Jan. 1602-3

"Rich. Bonion and Hen. Whil-ly] Entered for their coppy under 1 hand of Mr. Suger Deputy to S. Whitley, and Mr. Wodnes Loun. A booke called the History of Troilus and Cressida."

The edition of 1609 was, doubtless, published in consequence of the entry of "28 Jan. 1602-3," but if Roberts printed a "Troilus and Cressida," whether by Shakespeare or by any other dramatist, in consequence of the earlier entry of "7 Feb. 1602-3," none such has come down to our time. Shakespeare's tragedy was not again printed, as far as can now be ascertained, until it appeared, under other peculiar circumstances, in the folio of 1623.

In that volume the dramatic works of Shakespeare, as is well known, are printed in three divisions—"Comedies," "Histories," and "Tragedies," and a list of them, under those heads, is inserted at the commencement. In that list "Troilus and Cressida" is not found; and it is further remarkable, that it is inserted near the middle of the folio of 1623, without any paging, excepting that the second leaf is numbered 79 and 80: the signatures also do not correspond with any others in the series. Hence it was inferred by Farmer, that the insertion of "Troilus and Cressida" was an afterthought by the player-editors, and that when the rest of the folio was printed, they had not intended to include it. The peculiar circumstances to which we have alluded may, however, be sufficiently accounted for by the supposition that "Troilus and Cressida" was given to, and executed by, a different printer. The list of "Comedies," "Histories," and "Tragedies," at the beginning of the volume was most likely printed last, and the person who formed it accidentally omitted "Troilus and Cressida," because it had been as accidentally omitted in the pagination.

The second issue of Bonar and Walley's edition of 1609 was not made until after the tragedy had been acted at the Globe, as is stated on the title-
This is an introduction to the plays. It discusses the difficulty of attributing plays to Shakespeare due to the lack of evidence, the reliance on conjecture and research, and the importance of popular plays and their influence on the development of drama. It mentions the work of scholars such as Charles and the possibilities of a play called "Troilus and Cressida" being by Shakespeare, despite the lack of evidence. The introduction also touches on the relationship between the bard's work and the lives of his contemporaries, and the importance of preserving his legacy. It concludes with a call to the reader to engage with the plays and the history they represent.

ADDRESS

PREFIXED TO SOME COPIES OF TROILUS AND CRESSIDA, OF THE EDITION OF 1609.

Eternal reader, you have here a new play, never stated with the stage, never clapper-changed with the palms of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palm comical; for it is a birth of your brain, that never undertook any thing comical vainly: and were but the vain names of comedies changed for the titles of commodities, or of plays for pleases, you should see all those grand censers, that now style them such vanities, flock to them for the main grace of their gravities; especially this author's comedies, that are so framed to the life, that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, showing such a dexterity and power of wit, that the most displeased with plays are pleased with his comedies. And all such dull and heavy-witted as the wit is in his comedies, that they seem (for their height of pleasure) to be born in that sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst all there is none more witty than this; and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not, (for so much as will make you think your testern well bestowed) but for so much worth, as even poor I know to be stuffed in it. It deserves such a labour, as well as the best pleasure of the day. To the end: "Iatro Plautus: and believe this, that when he is gone, and his comedies out of sale, you will scramble for them, and set up a new English inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the peril of your pleasure's loss, and judgment's, refuse not, nor like this the less for not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude: but thank fortune for the scope it hath made amongst you, since it is permitted to all scarce comedy to which you should have prayed for them, rather than been prayed. And so I leave all such to be prayed for (for the states of their wits' healths) that will not prize it. —Yale.

CORIOLANUS.

[The Tragedy of Coriolanus was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies thirty pages, viz., from p. 1 to p. 30, inclusive, a new pagination commencing with that drama. In the folio of 1637 the new pagination begins]

And set up a new English inquisition. This prophecy has been well verified of late years, when (to say nothing of the prices of the first editions of Shakespeare's undoubted works) £100 have been given for a copy of the old "Ta- ming of a Shrew," 1594, and £150 for "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York," 1595, merely because they were plays which Shakespeare made use of in his compositions.

Rather than been prayed. This passage refers, probably, to the unwillingness of the company to which Shake- speare belonged, here termed the "grand possessors," to allow any of their plays to be printed. Such seems to have been the case with all the associations of actors, and hence the imperfect manner in which most of the dramas of the time have come down to us, and the few that issued from the press, compared with the number that were writ- ten. The word "them," in "prayed for them," refers to "his comedies," mentioned above.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Ixx

with "Troilus and Cressida," and in the folio of 1664 and 1685 "Coriolanus" is inserted in the same order.

Nothing has yet been discovered to lead to the belief that there was a play on the story of Coriolanus anterior to Shakespeare's tragedy. Henslowe's Diary contains no hint of the kind.

The materials for this drama appear to have been derived exclusively from "the Life of Cains Martius Coriolanus," in the early translation of Plutarch by Sir Thomas North. That translation came from the press in folio in 1579, with the following title: "The Lives of the noble Grecians and Romans, compared together by that grave learned Philosopher and Historian Plutarch, Plutarchus of Chremon."

It was avowedly made from the French of Amiot, Bishop of Auxerre, and appears to have been very popular: though published at a high price (equal to about £5 of the present money), it was several times reprinted; and we may, perhaps, presume that our great dramatist made use of an impression nearer his own time, possibly that of 1595. In many of the principal speeches he has followed this authority with verbal exactness; and he was indebted to it for the whole conduct of his plot. The action occupies less than four years, for it commences subsequent to the retirement of the people to Mons Sacer in 262, after the foundation of Rome, and terminates with the death of Coriolanus in A. D. 266.

"The Tragedy of Coriolanus" originally appeared in the folio of 1623, where it is divided into acts but not into scenes; and it was registered at Stationers' Hall by Blount and Jaggard on the 8th November of that year, as one of the "copies" which had not been "entered to other men." Hence we infer that there had been no previous edition of it in quarto. Marston supposed that "Coriolanus" was not published until 1610; but we are destitute of all evidence on the point, beyond what may be derived from the style of composition: this would certainly induce us to fix it somewhat later in the career of our great dramatist.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

["The most lamentable Roman Tragedie of Titus Andronicus. As it hath sundie times bee playde by the Right Honorable the Earle of Pembroke, the Earle of Darby, the Earl of Susses, and the Lord Chamberlaine theyr Servantes." London, Printed by R. for Edward Wise, and are to bee solde at his shoppe, at the little North doore of Pauls, at the signe of the Gun. 1600.] 4to. 40 leaves.

"The most lamentable Tragedie of Titus Andronicus. As it hath sundie times bee playde by the Kings Maiesties Servantes. London, Printed for Edward Wise, and are to be solde at his shoppe, near the little North doore of Pauls, at the signe of the Gun. 1611." 4to. 40 leaves.

In the folio of 1623, "The Lamentable Tragedie of Titus Andronicus" occupies twenty-two pages, in the division of "Tragedies," etc., from p. 21 to p. 24. Inclusive. The three last folios, of course, insert it in the same part of the volume.

We feel no hesitation in assigning "Titus Andronicus" to Shakespeare. Whether he may lay claim to it as the author of the entire tragedy, or only in a qualified sense, as having made additions to, and improvements in it, is a different and a more difficult question.

We find it given to him by his contemporary, Francis Meres, in his * Palladium Tamia*, 1598. It was also inserted in the folio of 1623 by Shakespeare's fellow-actors, Heminge and Condell. Had it not been by our great dramatist, Meres, who was well acquainted with the literature of his time, would not have attributed it to him; and the player-editors, who had been Shakespeare's "fellows and friends," and were men of character and experience, would not have omitted it in their volume. These two facts are, in our view, sufficient.

It was, undoubtedly, one of his earliest, if not his very earliest dramatic production. All are aware that there is a most marked distinction between his mode of composition early and late in life; as exhibited, for instance, in "Love's Labor's Lost," and "The Winter's Tale," and we apprehend that "Titus Andronicus" belongs to a period even anterior to the former. Supposing "Titus Andronicus" to have been written about 1588, we are to recollect that our dramatic poets were then only beginning to throw off the shackles of rhyme, and their versification partook of the weight and monotony which were the usual accompaniments of couplets. "Titus Andronicus" is to be read under this impression, and many passages will then be found in it, which we think, are remarkable indications of skill and power in an unpractised dramatist: as a poetical production it has not hitherto had justice done to it, on account, partly, of the revolting nature of the plot. Neither is internal evidence wholly wanting, for words and phrases employed by Shakespeare in his other works may be pointed out; and in Art ii, sc. 1, we meet a remarkable expression, which is also contained in "Venus and Adonis."

With reference to the general complexity of the drama, and the character of the plot, it must also be borne in mind that it was produced at a time, when scenes of horror were especially welcome to public audiences, and when pieces were actually recommended to their admiration in consequence of the blood and slaughter with which they abounded.

The oldest known edition of "Titus Andronicus" bears date in 1600: but we feel convinced that a more ancient impression will some time or other again be brought to light. That it once existed, we have the testimony of Langbaine, in his "Account of English Dramatic Poets," 1691, where he tells us that the play was "first printed 4to. Lond. 1594." Consistently with this assertion we find the following entry in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:—

"6 Feb. 1593
John Daster] A booke entitled a noble Roman History of Tytus Andronicus."

The Stationers' books contain several subsequent memoranda respecting "Titus Andronicus," bearing date 12th April, 1602, 14th December, 1624, and 8th December, 1630; but none which seems to have relation to the editions of 1600 and 1611. No quarto impressions of a subsequent date are known; and the tragedy next appeared in the folio of 1623, which was printed from the quarto of 1611.

It is very possible that Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus" was founded upon some anterior dramatic performance; but in this point we have no evidence beyond what may be collected from the piece itself, in certain real or supposed dissimilarities of composition.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

The most excellent and Lamentable Tragedie of Romeo and Juliet. As it hath been sundrie times publicly Acted, by the Kings Maiesties Servants at the Globe. Now corrected, augmented and amended: London, Printed for John Smethwick, and are to be sold at his Shop in Saint Dunstanes Church-yard, in Fleetstreet under the Dyre. 1600. 4to. 46 leaves.

In the folio of 1623 "The Tragedie of Romeo and Juliet" occupies twenty-five pages, viz. from p. 53 to p. 79, inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." It fills the same space in the folios of 1609, 1636, and 1645.

It is certain that there was an English play upon the story of Romeo and Juliet before the year 1562; and the fact establishes that, even at that early date, our dramatists resorted to Italian novels, or translations of them, for the subjects of their productions. It is the most ancient piece of evidence of the kind yet discovered, and it is given by Arthur Brooke, who in that year published a narrative poem, called "The Tragical Historye of Romeo and Juliet." At the close of his address "to the Reader" he observes:—"Though I saw the same argument lately set forth on stage with more commendation than I can look for, (being there much better set forth, than I have, or can do,) yet the same matter, penned as it is, may serve the like good effect." Thus we see also that a scene of the kind had been received with commendation," and that Brooke himself, unquestionably a competent judge, admits its excellence.

We can scarcely suppose that no other drama would be founded upon the same interesting incidents between 1562 and the date when Shakespeare wrote his tragedy, a period of, probably, more than thirty years. We think it not improbable that the kind is given in the manuscript, record, and certainly no such work, either manuscript or printed, has come down to us. Of the extreme popularity of the story we have abundant proof, and of a remote date. It was included by William Paynter in the "second tame" of his "Fable of Pleasure," the dedication of which he dates 4th November, 1567; and in old writers we find frequent mention of the hero and heroine.

How far Shakespeare might be indebted to any such production we have no means of deciding; but Malone, Steevens, and others have gone upon the supposition, that Shakespeare was only under obligations either to Brooke's poem, or to Paynter's novel; and least of all do they seem to have contemplated the possibility, that he might have obtained assistance from some foreign source.

Arthur Brooke avowed that he derived his materials from Bandello (Part ii. Nov. 9), La fortunata morte di due infelici amanti, &c.; and Paynter very literally translated Boistcteau's Histoire de deux Amans, &c., in the collection of Histories Tragiques published by the Bege-forest. Steevens was disposed to think that our great dramatist had obtained more from Paynter than from Brooke, while Malone supported, and we think, established, a contrary opinion.

Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" originally came out, but in an imperfect manner, in 1597, quarto. This edition is in two different types, and was probably printed by two different presses. It has generally been treated as an authorized impression from an authentic manuscript. Such, after the most careful examination, is not our opinion. We think that the manuscript used by the printer or printers (no bookseller's or stationer's name is placed at the bottom of the title-page) was made up, partly from portions of the play as it was acted, but unduly obtained, and partly from notes taken at the theatre during representation. The second edition was printed in 1599, and it professes to have been "newly corrected, augmented, and amended." The third dated edition appeared in 1609; but some copies without a date are known, which most likely were posterior to 1609, but anterior to the appearance of the folio in 1632. The quarto, 1637, is of no authority.

The quarto, 1609, was printed from the edition which came out ten years earlier; and the repetition, in the folio of 1623, of some decided errors at the press, shows that it was a reprint of the quarto of 1609. Besides it is remarkable, that the same comparatively early quarto impression contains a Prologue, it was not transferred to the folio. The quarto, 1597, has lines not in the quarto, 1599, 1609, nor in the folio; and the folio, reprinting the quarto, 1609, besides ordinary errors, makes several important omissions. Our text is that of the quarto, 1599, compared, of course, with the quarto, 1609, and with the folio of 1623, and in some places importantly assisted by the quarto of 1597.

It will be observed that on the title-page of the quarto, 1597, it is stated that "Romeo and Juliet" was acted by the players of Lord Hunsdon; and hence Malone argued that it must have been first printed, and transferred to the folio between July, 1596, and April, 1597. In this opinion we coincide.

It is remarkable that in no edition of "Romeo and Juliet," printed anterior to the publication of the folio of 1623, do we find Shakespeare's name upon the title-page. Yet Meres, in his Palladis Tamia, had distinctly assigned it to him in 1598; and although the name of the author might be purposely left out in the imperfect copy of 1597, the learned man could be no reason, especially after the announcement by Meres, for not inserting it in the "corrected, augmented, and amended" edition of 1599. But it is wanting even in the impression of 1609, although Shakespeare's popularity must then have been at its height.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

("The Life of Tymon of Athens" first appeared in the folio of 1663, where it occupies, in the division of "Tragedies," twenty-two pages, numbered from 89 to 98 inclusive, but pp. 81 and 82, by an error, are repeated. Page 98 is followed by a list, headed, "The Actors' Names," and the list of characters fills the whole page; the back of it is left blank. The drama bears the same title in the later folios.

Shakespeare is supposed not to have written "Timon of Athens" until late in his theatrical career, and Malone has fixed upon 1610 as the probable date when it came from his pen. We know of no extrinsic evidence to confirm or contradict this opinion. The tragedy was printed in 1623, in the folio edited by Heminge and Condell; and having been inserted in the Registers of the Stationers' Company as a play "not formerly entered to other men," we may infer that it had not previously come from the press. The verification is remarkably loose and irregular, but it is made to appear more so by the manner in which it was originally printed. The object, especially near the close, seems to have been to make the drama occupy as much space as could be conveniently filled; consequently, many of the lines are arbitrarily divided into two.

There is an apparent want of finish about some portions of "Timon of Athens," while others are elaborately wrought. Coleridge said, in 1815, that he saw the same vigorous hand at work throughout; that it was one of the author's most complete performances; and he gave no countenance to the notion, that any parts of a previously existing play had been retained in "Timon of Athens," as it had come down to us. The players, however, he felt convinced, had done the poet much injustice; and he especially instanced the clumsy, "clap-trap" blow at the Puritanus in Act iii, sc. 3, as an interpolation by the actor of the part of Timon's servant. Coleridge accounted for the ruggedness and inequality of the versification upon the same principle, and he was persuaded that only a corrupt and imperfect copy had come to the hands of the player-editors of the last century. His admiration of some parts of the tragedy was unbounded; but he maintained that it was, on the whole, a painful and disagreeable production, because it gave only a disadvantageous picture of human nature, very inconsistent with what, he firmly believed, was our great poet's real view of the characters of his fellow creatures. He said that the whole piece was a bitter dramatic satire, —a species of writing in which Shakespeare had shown, as in all other kinds, that he could reach the very highest point of excellence. Coleridge could not help suspecting that the subject might have been taken up under some temporary feeling of vexation and disappointment. How far this notion is well founded can of course be matter of mere speculation; but a whole play could hardly be composed under a transient fit of irritation, and it as it seems more likely, that in this instance, as in others, Shakespeare adopted the story because he thought he could make it acceptable as a dramatic representation. We agree with Farmer in thinking that there probably existed some earlier popular play of which Shakespeare's was the Shakespearean version in Paynter's "Schown of Pleasure," were the common property of the poets of the day; and the strange and beastly nature of Timon of Athens" is inserted in the first volume of that collection, which came out before 1567. Paynter professes to have derived his brief materials from the life of Marcus Antonius, in Plutarch; but Sir Thomas North's translation having made its appearance in 1579, all the circumstances may have been familiar to most readers. True it is, that Shakespeare does not appear to have followed these authorities at all closely, and there may have been some version of Lucian then current with which we are now acquainted.

We know also that there existed about that date a play upon the subject of Timon of Athens. The original manuscript of it is in the library of the Rev. Alexander Dyce, who has recently superintended an impression of it for the Shakespeare Society. He gives it as his opinion, that it was "intended for the amusement of an academic audience," and although the epilogue may be considered rather of a contrary complexion, the learned editor is probably right: it is, however, nearly certain that it was acted; and although it will not bear a moment's comparison with Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens," similar incidents and persons are contained in both.

JULIUS CAESAR.

No early quarto edition of "Julius Caesar" is known, and there is reason to believe that it never appeared in that form. The manuscript originally used for the folio of 1623 must have been extremely perfect, and free from corruptions, for there is, perhaps, no drama in the volume more accurately printed.

Malone and others have arrived at the conclusion that "Julius Caesar" could not have been written before 1607. We think there is good ground for believing that it was acted before 1603.

We found this opinion upon the resemblance between a stanza found in Drayton's "Barons' Wars," 1602, and a passage in "Julius Caesar," Act v., sc. 5, from which, after nature considering all the circumstances, we feel warranted in concluding, that Drayton, having heard "Julius Caesar" at the theatre, or seen it in manuscript before 1603, applied to his own purpose, perhaps unconsciously, what, in fact, belonged to another poet.

Shakespeare appears to have derived nearly all his materials from Plutarch, as translated by Sir Thomas North, and first published in 1579. At the same time, it is not unlikely that there was a preceding play. It is a new fact, ascertained from an entry in Henslowe's Diary dated 22d May, 1602, that Anthony Munday, Michael Drayton, John Webster, Thomas Middleton, and other poets, were engaged upon a tragedy entitled "Cæsar's Revenge." The probability is, that these dramatists united their exertions, in order without delay to bring out a tragedy on the same subject as that of Shakespeare, which, perhaps, was then performing at the Globe Theatre with success.

From Vertue's manuscripts we learn that a play, called "Caesar's Tragedy," was acted at Court in 1613, which was perhaps the Shakespearean version of Paynter's "Palace of Pleasure." A play, or some part of it, written by Munday, Drayton, Webster, Middleton, and others, or a play printed in 1607, under the title of "The Tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, or Caesar's Revenge," Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his "Revels' Accounts," has shown that a dramatic piece, with the title of "The Tragedy of Cæsar," was exhibited at Court on January 31, 1606-7.

MACBETH.

"The Tragedy of Macbeth" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages; viz. from p. 131 to p. 151 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." The Acts and Scenes are regularly marked there, as well as in the later folio.

The only ascertained fact respecting the performance of "Macbeth," in the lifetime of its author, is that it was represented at the Globe Theatre on the 20th of April, 1610. Whether it was then a new play, it is impossible to decide; but we are inclined to think that it was not, and that Malone was right in his conjecture, that it was first acted about the year 1606. A detailed account of the plot is contained in Dr. Simon Forman's manuscript Diary, preserved in the Ashmolean Museum, from which it appears, that he saw "Macbeth" played at the Globe on the day we have stated.

Our principal reason for thinking that "Macbeth" had been originally represented at least four years before 1610, is the striking allusion, in Act iv. sc. 1, to the union of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the hands of James I. That monarch ascended the throne in March, 1602-3.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

and was proclaimed king of Great Britain and Ireland in October, 1604; and the words, "Some I see, That two-fold balls and triple sceptres carry," would have had little point, if we suppose them to have been delivered after the king who bore the balls and sceptres had been more than seven years on the throne.

Shakespeare, doubtless, derived all the materials he required from Holinshed, without resorting to Beza's, or to any other scriptural or secular authority. Steevens continued to maintain, that Shakespeare was indebted, in some degree, to Middleton's "Witch" for the preternatural portion of "Macbeth;" but Malone, who at first entertained the same view of the subject, ultimately abandoned it, and became convinced that "The Witch" was a play written subsequently to the production of "Macbeth." What must surprise everybody is, that a poet of Middleton's rank could so degrade the awful beings of Shakespeare's invention; for although, as Lamb observes, "the power of Middleton's witches is in some measure over the mind," they are of a degenerate race, as if, Shakespeare having created them, no other mind was sufficiently exalted to continue their existence.

Whether Shakespeare obtained his knowledge regarding these agents, and of the locality he supposes them to have frequented, from actual observation,—whether, in short, he had ever visited Scotland,—is a point we have considered in the Biography of the poet. At whatever date we suppose Shakespeare to have written "Macbeth," we may perhaps infer, from a passage in Kemp's "Nine Days' Wonder," 1600, that there existed a ballad upon the story, which may have been older than the tragedy. The point, however, is doubtful, and it is obvious that Kemp did not mean to be very intelligible; his other allusions to ballad-makers of his time are purposely obscure.

"Macbeth," however, some ground for thinking, that a lost play upon similar incidents preceded the work of Shakespeare; how far that lost play might be an improvement upon the old translated "Historie" we have no means of deciding, nor what extent Shakespeare availed himself of such improvement.

We feel confident, however, that the "Hamlet," which we have come down to us in at least six quarto impressions, in the folio of 1623, and in the later impressions in that form, was not written until the winter of 1601, or the spring of 1602.

Malone, Steevens, and the other commentators, were acquainted with no edition of the tragedy anterior to the quarto of 1604, which professes to be "enlarged to almost as much again as it was," they, therefore, reasonably supposed that it had been printed before; and within the last twenty years a single copy of an edition in 1603 has been discovered. This, in fact, seems to have been the abbreviated and imperfect edition, consisting of only about half as much as the impression of 1604. From whose press it came we have no information, but it is supposed to have been "printed for N. L. and John Trundel." N. L. was Nicholas Ling; and L. R., the printer of the edition of 1604, was no doubt, James Roberts, who, two years before, had made the following entry in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:—

"20 July 1602. James Roberts's books, The Revenge of Hamlet prince of Denmark, as it was lately acted by the Lord Chamberlain's servants."

The words, "as it was lately acted," are important upon the question of date, and the entry farther proves, that the tragedy had been performed by the company to which Shakespeare belonged. In the spring of 1603, "the Lord Chamberlain's servants" became the King's players; and on the title-page of the quarto of 1603 it is asserted that it had been acted "by his Highness' servants." Thus we see, that in July, 1602, there was an intention to print and publish a play called "The Revenge of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark," and this intention, we may fairly conclude, arose out of the previous production of the piece, as it was then acted by "the Lord Chamberlain's servants," who, in May following, obtained the title of "the King's players." The object of Roberts in making the entry already quoted, was to secure it to himself, being, no doubt, aware that other printers and booksellers would endeavor to anticipate him. It seems probable, that he was unable to obtain such a copy of "Hamlet" as he would put his name to; but some inferior and nameless printer, who was not so scrupulous, having surreptitiously secured a manuscript of the play, however imperfect, which would answer the purpose, and gratify public curiosity, the edition bearing date in 1603 was published. Such, we have little doubt, was the origin of the impression of which only one single copy has reached us, and of which, probably, but a few were sold, as its worthlessness was soon discovered, and it was quickly entirely superseded by the enlarged impression of 1604. But although we entirely reject the quarto of 1603, as an authentic "Hamlet," it is of high value in enabling us to settle the text of various important passages. It proves, besides, that certain portions of the play, as it appears in the folio of 1623, which do not form part of the quarto of 1604, were originally acted, and were not, as has been hitherto imagined, subsequent introductions.

The impression of 1604 being intended to supersede that of 1603, which gave a most mangled and imperfect notion of the drama in its true beauty, we may perhaps presume that the quarto of 1604 was, at least, as authentic a copy of "Hamlet" as the editions of any of Shakespeare's plays that came from the press during his lifetime. It contains various passages, some of them of great importance to the conduct and character of the hero, not to be found in the folio of 1623; while the folio includes other passages, which are left out of the quarto of 1604; although, as before remarked, we have the evidence of the quarto of 1603, that they were originally acted.

We are inclined to think, that if "Hamlet," in the folio of 1623, were not composed from some now unknown quarto, it was derived from a manuscript obtained by Heminge and Condell from the theatre. The Acts and Scenes are, however, marked only in the first and second Acts, after which no divisions of the kind are noticed; and where Act iii. commences is merely matter of modern conjecture. Some large portions of the play appear to have been omitted for the sake of shortening the performance; and any editor who should content himself with reprinting the folio without large additions from the quarto, would present but an imperfect notion of the drama as it came from the hand of the poet.

Corderlidge, after vindicating himself from the accusation that he had derived his ideas of Hamlet from Schlegel, thus sums up the character of Hamlet: "In Hamlet, Shakespeare seems to have wished to exemplify the moral necessity of a due balance between our attention to the objects of our senses, and our meditation on the workings of our mind,—an equilibrium between the real and the imaginary worlds. In Hamlet this balance is disturbed; his thoughts and the images of his fancy are far more vivid than his actual perceptions; and his very perceptions, instantly passing through the medium of his contemplations, acquire, as they pass, a form and a color not naturally their own. Hence we see a great, an almost enormous, intellectual activity, and a proportionate aversion to real action consequent upon it, with all its symptoms and accompanying qualities. This character Shakespeare places in circumstances under which it is obliged to act on the spur of the moment. Hamlet is brave, and careless of death; but he vacillates from sensibility, and procrastinates from thought, and loses the power of action in the energy of resolve."

KING LEAR.

"[M. William Shake-speare: His True Chronicle Historie of the life and death of King Lear and his Three Daugh-thers. The title-page of a third impression in 1608 corresponds with that last above given.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedie of King Lear" occupies twenty-seven pages, in the division of "Tragedies" viz., from p. 583 to p. 609, inclusive. The last page but one, by an error, is numbered 38, instead of 38. In the first, as also in the folios of 1623, 1644, and 1663, the Acts and Scenes are regularly marked.

The most remarkable circumstance connected with the early publication of "King Lear" is, that the same stationer published three quarto impressions of it in 1608, that stationer being a person who had not put forth any of the authentic (as far as they can deserve to be so considered) editions of Shakespeare's plays. After it had been thus thrice printed (for they were not merely re-issues with fresh title-pages) in the same year, the tragedy was not again printed until it appeared in the folio of 1623. Why it was never republished in quarto, in the interval, must be matter of speculation, but such was not an unusual occurrence with the works of our great dramatist. The extreme popularity of "King Lear" seems proved by the mere fact that the public demand for it, in the first year of its publication, could not be satisfied without three distinct impressions.

It will be seen by the copies of the title-pages which we have inserted, that although Nathaniel Butter was the publisher of the three quarto editions, he only put his address on the title-page of one of them. A more remarkable circumstance, in relation to the title-pages of "King Lear," is, that the same principal variant is met with in the quarto at the top of them, the type being larger than that used for any other part of the work: moreover, we have it again at the head of the leaf on which

OTHELLO.

("The Tragedy of Othello, The Moor of Venice." As it hath been severally acted at the Globe, and the Black-Friars, by his Majesty's Servants. Written by William Shakespeare. London, Printed by N. O. for Thomas Wilksly, and are to be sold at his shop, at the Eagle and Child, in Britton's Bazaar. 1622." 4to. 48 leaves, irregularly pag'd."

The Tragedie of Othello, the Moor of Venice," printed by C. J., and sold by R. J. and J. B. at the sign of the Vine in St. Paul's Churchyard. 1623."

The part of the memorandum which relates to "Othello" is interlined, as if added afterwards; but thus we find decisively, that this tragedy was in being in the summer of 1602; and the probability is, that it was selected for performance because it was a new play, having been brought out at the Globe theatre in the spring of that year.

The incidents, with some variation, are to be found in Chintio's Hecatommithi. This novel was early translated into French, and in all probability into English, but no such version has descended to us. Our great dramatist may indeed have read the story in the original language; and it is highly probable that he was sufficiently acquainted with Italian for the purpose.

We have seen, by the quotation from "The Egerton Papers," that the company by which "Othello" was performed at Hardfield was called "Burbidge's players;" and there can be no doubt that he was the leading actor of the company, and thereby in the account gave his name to the association, though properly denominated the Lord Chanales's Tragedy. As regards the original actor of the part of Othello, as we learn from an elegy upon his death, among the late Mr. Heber's manuscripts.

There are two quarto editions of "Othello," one bearing date in 1622, the year before the first folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," appeared, and the other printed in 1630. An exact copy of the title-page of the quarto of 1622, will be found in the usual place, and that published in 1630 differs only in the imprint, which is "by A. M. for Richard Hawkins," &c. Malone summarily dismissed the impression of 1630, as an "edition of no authority," but it is very clear that he had never sufficiently examined it. It was subsequently printed from a manuscript different from that used for the quarto of 1622, or for the folio of 1623; and it presents a number of various readings, some of which singularly illustrate the original text of "Othello."

Walkley, the publisher of the quarto of 1622, thus entered that edition on the Stationers' Registers, shortly previous to its appearance:

"OCT. 1621. The Walkley Entred for h's, to wit, under the innumerable of Sir George Buck and of the Wardens: The Tragedie of Othello, the Moor of Venice."

It is perhaps not too much to presume, that this impression, though dated 1622, had come out at the close of 1621; and that it preceded the folio of 1623 is very obvious, from the fact, that "Othello" was not included in their list by Blount and Jaggard, the publishers of the folio of 1623, because they were aware that it had already been printed, and that it had been entered as the property of another bookseller. The quartos of 1622 were preceded by the following address:
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

"The Stationer to the Reader.

"To set forth a book without an epistle were like to the old English proverb, 'A blue coat without a badge,' and the author being dead, I thought good to take that piece of work upon me. To commend it I will not—for that which is good, I hope every man will commend without entreaty; and I am the holder, the printer, the compositor, he that makes the work. Thus leaving every one to the liberty of judgment, I have ventured to print this play, and leave it to the general censure.

Your, Thomas Wakley."

The publishers of the folio of 1623, perhaps purchased Wakley's interest in "Othello.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

We are without any record that "Antony and Cleopatra" was ever performed; and when in Act v., sc. 2, the heroine anticipates that "some squeaking Cleopatra" will "buy her greatness" on the stage, Shakespeare seems to hint that no young male performer would be able to sustain the part without excessive work, which is, without more or less, applied to many of his other female characters; and the wonder, of course, is how so much delicacy, tenderness, and beauty could be infused into parts which the poet knew must be represented by beardless and crack-voiced boys.

The period of the year at which "Antony and Cleopatra" was entered on the Stationers' Registers might lead to the inference, that, having been written late in 1606, it was brought out at the Globe in the spring of 1608, and that Edward Blount (one of the publishers of the folio of 1623) thus put in his claim to the publication of the tragedy, if he could procure a manuscript of it. The memorandum bears date on the 25th May, 1608, and the piece is stated to be "a book" called "Anthony and Cleopatra." Perhaps Blount was unable to obtain a copy of it, and, as far as we now know, it was printed for the first time in the folio of 1623.

It does not appear that there was any preceding drama on the story, with the exception of the "Cleopatra" of Samuel Daniel, originally published in 1594, to which Shakespeare was clearly未经授权的 obligation. Any slight resemblance between the two is to be accounted for by the fact, that both poets resorted to the same authority for their materials—Plutarch, whose "Lives" had been translated by Sir T. North in 1579.

Of all Shakespeare's historical plays (says Coleridge) "Antony and Cleopatra" is by far the most wonderful. The author, in which he has followed history so minutely, and yet there are few in which he impresses the notion of angelic strength so much—perhaps none in which he impresses it more strongly. This is greatly owing to the manner in which the fiery force is sustained throughout, and to the numerous momentary flashes of nature, counteracting the historic abstraction."

CYMBELINE.

(\"The Tragedie of Cymbeline\" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it stands last in the division of \"Tragedies,\" and occupies thirty-one pages, viz., from p. 369 to p. 399; misprinted "p. 390. There is another error in the pagination, as p. 379 is numbered p. 389. These errors are corrected in the three later folios.\)

The materials in Holinshed for the historical portion of "Cymbeline" are so imperfect and scanty, that a belief may be entertained that Shakespeare resorted to some other more fertile source, which the most diligent inquiries have yet failed to discover. The Cymbeline of Capri, the Guiderius and Arviragus, occur in the old Chronicle, and there we hear of the tribute demanded by the Roman emperor, but nothing is said of the stealing of the two young princes, nor of their residence with Bellarius among the mountains, and final restoration to their father.

All that relates to Posthumus, Imogen, and Inchi- no is merely fabulous, and some of the chief incidents of this part of the plot are to be found in French, Italian, and English. We will speak of them separately.

They had been employed for a dramatic purpose in France at an early date, in a miracle-play, printed in 1593 by Messer, Monneret and Michel, in their Théatre d'Histoire Industry and Merit. There is a manuscript in the Bibliothèque du Roi. In that piece, mixed up with many romantic circumstances, we find the wager on the chastity of the heroine, her flight in the disguise of a page, the proof of her innocence, and her final restoration to her husband.

The novel by Boccaccio has many corresponding features: the book of Guiderius, and bears the following title: "Bernabo da Genova, da Ambrogio lu ingannato, perde il suo, e comanda che in moglie innocente sia uscire. Ella scampa, et in habito di uomo serve il Soldano; ritrova ingannatore, e Bernabo conduce in Alessandria, dove l'ingannatore punito, ripresa habito femine li col marito riechi si tornano a Genoa."

A modern production of this play has produced scenes which have found its way into our language at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Steevens states that it was printed in 1603, and again in 1620, in a tract called "Westward for Smelts." The incidents in "Westward for Smelts" are completely anglicised, and the scene is laid in this country in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV.

Malone thought that "Cymbeline" was written in 1609; and although we do not adopt his reasoning upon the point, we are strongly inclined to believe that this drama was not, at all events, written at an earlier period. Forman, the astrologer, was present when "Cymbeline" was acted—most likely in 1610 or 1611—but he does not in his Diary insert the date when, nor the place where, he saw it. His brief account of the plot is contained in his "Book of Plays and Notes thereof."

We have certainly no right to conclude that "Cymbeline" was a new piece when Forman witnessed the performance of it; but various critics have concurred in the opinion (which we ourselves entertain) that in style and versification it resembles "The Winter's Tale," and that the two dramas belong to about the same period of the poet's life. Forman saw "The Winter's Tale" on 17th May, 1611, and, perhaps, he saw "Cymbeline" at the Globe in the spring of the preceding year. That it was acted at court at an early date is more than probable, but we are without any record of such an event until 1st January, 1633; under which date Sir Henry Herbert, the Master of the Revels, registers that it was performed by the King's Players, and that it was "well liked by the King."

It is the last of the "Tragedies" in the folio of 1633, and we have reason to suppose that it had not been printed at any earlier period. There are no divisions of acts and scenes are throughout regularly marked.

"The late, And much admired Play, called Pericles, Prince of Tyre. With the true Relation of the whole History, adversates, and fortunes of the said Prince: Written by William Shakespeare: London, Printed by I. N. for R. B. and are to be sold at his shop in Chandeside, at the sign of the Bible. 1630."

4to. 34 leaves.

In the folio of 1664, the following is the heading of the page on which the play begins: "The late much admired Play, called, Pericles, Prince of Tyre. With the true Relation of the whole History, Adventures, and Fortunes of the said Prince. Written by W. Shakespeare, and published in his life time."

It occupies twenty-pages, viz. from p. 1 to p. 20, inclusive, a new pagination of the volume commencing with "Pericles." It is there divided into Acts, but irregularly, and the Scenes are not marked.

The first question to be settled in relation to "Pericles," is its title to a place among the collected works of Shakespeare.

There is so marked a character about every thing that proceeded from the pen of our great dramatist,-his mode of thought, and his style of expression, are so unlike those of any of his contemporaries, that he can never be mistaken. They are clearly visible in all the later portion of the play; and so indisputable does this fact appear to us, that, we confidently assert, however strong may be the external evidence to the same point, the internal evidence is infinitely stronger: to those who have studied his works it will seem incontrovertible.

An opinion has long prevailed, and we have no doubt it is well founded, that two hands are to be traced in the composition of "Pericles." The larger part of the first three Acts were in all probability the work of an inferior dramatist; to these Shakespeare added comparatively little; but he found it necessary, as the story advanced and as the interest increased, to insert more of his own composition. He began to write directly scenes in the third Act, and afterwards we feel persuaded that we could extract nearly every line that was not dictated by his great intellect. We apprehend that Shakespeare found a drama on the story in the possession of one of the companies performing in London, and that, in accordance with the ordinary practice of the time, he made additions to and improvements in it, and procured it to be represented at the Globe theatre. Who might be the author of the original piece, it would be in vain to conjecture. Although we have no decisive proof that Shakespeare ever worked in immediate concert with any of his contemporaries, it was the custom with nearly all the dramatists of his day, and it is not impossible that such was the case with "Pericles."

Having thus spoken of the internal evidence of authorship, we will now advert briefly to the external evidence, that it was the work of our great dramatist. In the first place it was printed in 1609, with his name at full length, and rendered unusually obvious, on the title-page. It may next be mentioned, that previous to the insertion of "Pericles" in the folio of 1664, it had been imputed to Shakespeare by S. Shepherd, in his "Times Displayed in Six Septads," 1646; and in line of Brome's "Jovial Crew," 1652. Dryden gave it to Shakespeare in 1675, in the Prologue to C. Davenant's "Circe." Thus, as far as stage tradition is of value, it is uniformly in favor of our position; and it is moreover to be observed, that until comparatively modern times it has never been contradicted.

The incidents of "Pericles" are found in Law- rence Twine's translation from the Gesta Romani- rum, first published in 1576, under the title of "The Pattern of Painful Adventures," in which the three chief characters are not named as in Shakespeare, but are called Apollonius, Lucreia, and Thuris. This novel was several times reprinted, and an edition was published in 1608, and another, with the year in which "Pericles" was first represented "at the Globe on the Bank-side," as is stated on the title-page of the earliest edition in 1609. The drama seems to have been extremely popular, but the usual difficulty being experienced by booksellers in obtaining a copy of it, Nathaniel Butter probably employed some person to attend the performance at the thea- tre, and to copy notes there taken, and of Twine's version of the story, (which, as we remarked, had just before been reprinted) to compose a novel out of the incidents of the play under the following title: "The Painful Adventures of Pericles Prince of Tyre. Being the true History of the Play of Peri- cles, as it was lately presented by the worthy and an- cient Poet John Gower. At London. Printed by T. P. for Nathaniel Butter. 1668." It has also a woodcut of Gower, no doubt, in the costume he wore at the Globe.

This publication is valuable, not merely because it is the only known specimen of the kind of that date in our language, but because though in prose, (with the exception of a song,) it gives some of the speeches more at length, than in the play as it has come down to us, and explains several obscure and disputed passages. It also affords strong presumptive evidence that the drama has not reached us by any means in the shape in which it was originally represented.

"Pericles" was five times printed before it was inserted in the folio of 1664, viz. in 1609, 1611, 1619, 1630, and 1635. The folio seems to have been copied from the last of these, with a multiplication of errors, but with some corrections. The first edition of 1609 was obviously brought out in haste, and there are many corruptions in it; but more pains were taken with it than Malone, Steevens, and others imagined; they never compared different copies of the same edition, or they would have seen that the impressions vary importantly, and that several mistakes, discovered as the play went through the press, were care- fully set right. The commentators dwell upon the blunders of the old copies, in order to warrant their own extraordinary innovations; but wherever we could do so, with due regard to the sense of the author, we have restored the text to that of the earliest impression.
THE DEDICATION.

[INSERTED IN THE FOLIO OF 1632.]

To the most Noble and Incomparable Pair of Brothers, William Earl of Pembroke, &c. Lord Chamberlain to the King's most Excellent Majesty.

And Philip Earl of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Majesty's Bedchamber.

Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good Lords.

Right Honorable,

Whilst we study to be thankful in our particular for the many favors we have received from your Lordships, we are fallen upon the ill fortune, to mingle two of the most diverse things that can be, fear, and rashness; rashness in the enterprise, and fear of the success. For, when we value the places your Highnesses sustain, we cannot but know their dignity greater, than to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have deprived ourselves of the defence of our Dedication. But since your Lordships have been pleased to think these trifles something, heretofore; and have prosecuted both them, and their Author living, with so much favor, we hope, (that they outliving him, and he not having the fate, common with some, to be executor to his own writings) you will use the like indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any book choose his patrons, or find them: this hath done both. For, so much were your Lordships' likenings of the several parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the volume asked to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his orphans, guardians; without ambition either of self-profit, or fame; only to keep the memory of so worthy a friend, and fellow alive, as was our Shakespeare, by humble offer of his plays, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come near your Lordships but with a kind of religious address, it hath been the height of our care, who are the presenters, to make the present worthy of your Highnesses by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considered, my lords. We cannot go beyond our own powers. Country hands reach forth milk, cream, fruits, or what they have; and many nations, (we have heard) that had not guns and incense, obtained their requests with a leavened cake. It was no fault to approach their gods, by what means they could; and the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to temples. In that name, therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your Highnesses these remains of your servant Shakespeare; that what delight is in them, may be ever your Lordships', the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a pair so careful to show their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is Your Lordships' most bounden,

John Heminge.

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS.

From the most able, to him that can but spell; though you are numbered, We had rather you were weighty. Especially, when the fate of all books depends upon your capacities; and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well, it is now public, and you will stand for your privileges, we know: to read, and censure. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a book, the stationer says. Then, how odd soever your brains be, or your wisdoms, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your sixpence' worth, your shilling's worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you do, buy. Censure will not drive a trade, or make the jack go. And though you be a magistrate of wit, and sit on the stage at Blackfriars, or the Cockpit, to arraign plays daily, know, these plays have had their trial already, and stood out all appeals: and do now come forth quitted rather by a decree of court, than any purchased letters of commendation.

It had been a thing, we confess, worthy to have been wished, that the Author himself had lived to have set forth, and overseen his own writings; but since it hath been ordained otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envy his friends the office of their care, and pain, to have collected and published them; and so to have published them, as where (before) you were abused with divers stolen, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealths of injurious imposters, that exposed them; even those, are now offered to your view cured, and perfect of their limbs, and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happy imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together; and what he thought, he uttered with that easiness, that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who only gather his works, and give them you, to praise him. It is yours that read him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will find enough, both to draw, and hold you; for his wit can no more lie hid, than it could be lost. Read him, therefore; and again, and again: and if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his friends, who, if you need, can be your guides: if you need them not, you can lead yourselves, and others. And such readers we wish him.

COMMENDATORY VERSES.

Upon the Effigies of my worthy Friend, the Author, Master William Shakespeare, and his Works.

SPECTATOR, this life's shadow is:—to see
The true image, and a livelier he,
Turn reader. But observe his comic vein,
Laugh; and proceed next to a tragic strain,
Then weep: so,—when thou find'st two contraries,
Two different passions from thy rapt soul rise,—
Say, (who alone effect such wonders could)
Rare Shake-speare to the life thou dost behold.

An Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shakespeare.

What need my Shakespeare for his honor'd bones,
The labor of an age in piled stones;
Or that his hollow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?—
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'st thou such dull witness of thy name?
Tuon, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a lasting monument:
For whilst, to the shame of slow-endoevring art,
Thy easy numbers flow; and that each part
 Hath, from the leaves of thy unvalued book,
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took;
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;
And, so sepulchred, in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

To the Memory of the deceased Author, Master W. Shakespeare.

Shakespeare, at length thy pious followers give
The world thy works; thy works, by which outlive
Thy tomb thy name must: when that stone is rent,
And time dissolves thy Stratford monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still: this book,
When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look
Fresh to all ages; when posterity
Shall loathe what's new, think all is prodigy
That is not Shakespeare's, every line, each verse,
Here shall revive, redeem thee from thy hearse.
Nor fire, nor cankering age, as Naso said
Of his, thy wit-traught book shall once invade:
Nor shall I e'er believe or think thee dead,
(Though miss'd) until our bankrupt stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new strain t' out-do
Passions of Juliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I hear a scene more nobly take
Than when thy half-word parleying Romans quake:
Till these, till any of thy volume's rest,
Shall with more fire, more being, be express'd,
Sure, (our Shako-speare,) thou canst never die,
But, crown'd with laurel, live eternally. L. DIGGES.

To the Memory of M. W. Shake-speare.

We wonder'd (Shake-speare) that thou went'st so soon
From the world's stage to the grave's tiring-room:
We thought thee dead; but this thy printed worth
Tells thy spectators, that thou went'st but forth
To enter with applause. An actor's art
Can die, and live to act a second part:

That's but an exit of mortality,
This a re-entrance to a plaudit.

To the Memory of my beloved, the Author,
Mr. William Shakespeare, and what he hath left us.

To draw no envy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book, and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such,
As neither man, nor muse, can praise too much;
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage; but these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
For seekest ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin, where it seem'd to raise:
These are, as some infamous bawd, or whore,
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more?
But thou art proof against them; and, indeed,
Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need
I, therefore, will begin:—Son of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser; or bid Beaumont lie
A little further, to make thee a room:
Thou art a monument without a tomb;
And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
I mean, with great but disproportion'd muses;
For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee with pulses; and
Tell how far thou didst our Lysikrithe,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line:
And though thou hastad small Latin, and less Greek,
From thence to honor thee, I would not seek
For names; but call forth thundering Eschylus,
Euripides, and Sophocles, to us,
Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,
To live again, to hear thy huskin tread
And shake a stage: or, when thy socks were on,
Leave thee alone, for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome,
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain! thou hast one to show,
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time;
And all the muses still were in their prime,
When like Apollo he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm.
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines;
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As since she will vouchsafe no other wit.
The merry Greek, the merry Aristophanes,
Next Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part:
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion; and that he,
Who casts to write a living line, must swear,
COMMENDATORY VERSES.

Ixxix

(Such as thine are) and strike the second beat Upon the muses' anvils; turn the same,
(And himself with it) that he thinks to frame;
Or for the laurel he may gain a scorn,
For a good poet's made, as well as born:
And such wert thou. Look, how the father's face Lives in his name; even so the name
Of Shakespeare's mind, and manners, brightly shines
In his well-turned and true-filed lines;
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Avon, what a sight it were,
To see thee in our water yet appear;
And make thy maidens, with the work of Thomas,
That so did take Eliza, and our James.
But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanc'd, and made a constellation there:
Shine forth, thou star of poets; and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheer, the drooping stage;
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath morn'd like night,
And despair'd, but for thy volume's light.

BEN JONSON.

On worthy Master Shakespeare, and his Poems.

A MIND reflecting ages past, whose clear
And equal surface can make things appear,
Distinguish a thousand years, and represent
Them in their lively colors, just extent:
To outrun last time, retrieve the fates.
Roll back the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
Of Death and Lethe, where (confused) lie
Great heaps of ruinous mortality:
In that deep desky dungeon to discern
A royal ghost from churls; by art to learn
The physiognomy of slades, and give Them sudden birth, wondering how oft they live;
What story coldly tells, what poets feign
At second hand, and picture without brain,
Senseless and soul-less shows: to give a stage
(Amply, and true with life) voice, action, age,
As Plato's year, and new scene of the world,
Them unto us, or us to them had hush'd:
To raise our ancient sovereigns from their hearse,
Make kings his subjects; by exchanging verse
Enliven their pale trunks, that the present age
Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet so to temper passion, that our ears
Take pleasure in their pain, and eyes in tears
Both weep and smile; fearful at plots so sad,
Then laughing at our fear; abus'd, and glad
To be abus'd; affected with that truth
Which we perceive is false, pleas'd in that rath
At which we start, and, by elaborate play,
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crab-like way
Time past made pastime, and in ugly sort Disgorge up his ravin for our sport:—
—While the plebian imp, from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and works upon
Mankind by secret engines; now to move
A chilling pity, then a rigorous love;
To strike up and stroke down, both joy and ire;
To steer th' affections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew, stol'n from ourselves:—
This, and much more, which cannot be express'd
But by himself, his tongue, and his own breast,
Was Shakespeare's freehold; which his cunning
Improved by favor of the nine-fold train;
[\text{\ldots}]

Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts,
And she whose praise the heavenly body chants;
These jointly wo'd him, envying one another,
(Obey'd by all as spouse, but lov'd as brother)
And wrought a curious robe, of sable grave,
Fresh green, and pleasant yellow, red most brave,
And constant blue, rich purple, guiltless white,
The lowly roset, and the scarlet bright:
Branch'd and embroider'd like the painted spring;
Each leaf match'd with a flower, and each string
Of golden wire, each line of silk: there run
Italian works, whose thread the sisters span;
And there did sing, or seem to sing, the choice
Birds of a foreign nation, with a fascinating voice:
Here hangs a mossy rock; there plays a fair
But chiding fountain, purled: not the air,
Nor clouds, nor thunder, but were living drawn;
Not out of common tiffany or lawn,
But fine materials, which the muses know,
And only know the countries where they grow.
Now, when thou canst no longer him enjoy,
In mortal garments pent,—death may destroy,
They say, his body: but his verse shall live,
And more than nature takes our hands shall give:
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakespeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crown'd,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosian meat,
In a well-lined vesture, rich, and neat.
So with this robe they clothed him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stain, nor envy tear it.
The friendly admirer of his endowments.

I. M. S.

Upon the Lines, and Life, of the famous Scenic Poet, Master W. Shakespeare.

Those hands which you so clapp'd, go now and wing,
You Britons brave; for done are Shake-spere's days:
His days are done that made the dainty phys,
Which made the Globe of heaven and earth to ring.
Died is that vein, dried is the Thespian spring,
In mortal garments pent,—death may destroy,
They say, his body: but his verse shall live,
And more than nature takes our hands shall give:
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakespeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crown'd,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosian meat,
In a well-lined vesture, rich, and neat.
So with this robe they clothed him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stain, nor envy tear it.
The friendly admirer of his endowments.

HUGH HOLLAND.

[The following are Ben Jonson's lines on the Portrait of Shakespeare, precisely as they stand on a separate leaf opposite to the title-page of the edition of 1623, and which are reprinted in the same place, with some trifling variation of typography, in the folio of 1632.]

To the Reader.

This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shake-speare cut;
Wherein the Graver had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life:
O, could he but have drawn his wit
As well in brass, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was ever writ in brass.
But since he cannot, Reader, look
Not at his picture, but his book.

THE TEMPEST.

Act III.—Scene 1.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ALONSO, King of Naples.
SEBASTIAN, his Brother.
PROSPERO, the right Duke of Milan.
ANTONIO, his Brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
FERDINAND, Son to the King of Naples.
GONZALO, an honest old Counsellor.
ADRIAN, ?
FRANCISCO, Lords.
CALIBAN, a savage and deformed Slave.
TRINCULO, a Jester.

STEPHANO, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship, Boatswain, Mariners.
MIRANDA, Daughter to Prospero.
ARIEL, an airy Spirit.
IRIS, Ceres, Juno, Nymphs, Reapers.

Other Spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE, 2 a Ship at Sea; afterwards an uninhabited Island.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at Sea.

A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard.

Enter a Ship-master and a Boatswain, as on shipboard, shaking off wet.

Master. Boatswain!
Boats. Here, master: what cheer?
Mast. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to 't yarely, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir.

Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts! yare, yare. Take in the topsail; tend to the master's whistle.—Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and Others, from the Cabin.

* Readily; nimbly.—b Quick; ready.

* "Play the men," i. e., Behave like men.—4 Present instant.
complexion is perfect gallowys. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging: make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage. If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

_Exit._

_Re-enter_ Boatswain._

Boats. Down with the topmast: yare; lower, lower. Bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.—

_Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo._

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink? Seb. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, inccharitable dog! Boats. Work you, then. Ant. Hang, cur, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

_Gon._ I'll warrant him for drowning; though the ship was no stronger than a nutshell, and as leaky as an _unstanch'd_ wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold. Set her two _courses_; off to sea again; lay her off.

_Enter_ Mariners, _wet._

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exeunt._

_Boats._ What! must our mouths be closed? [rant._

_Gon._ The king and prince at prayers! let us assist

For our case is as theirs. [them._

_Seb._ I am out of patience.

_Ant._ We are _merely_ cheated of our lives by drunkards.—

This wide-chapp'd rascal,—would, thou might'st lie drowning.

_The washing of ten tides!_

_Gon._ He'll be hanged yet,

Though every drop of water swear against it, And gape at wid'st to 2 glut him. [A _confused noise within._] Mercy on us!—

_We split, we split!—Farewell, my wife and childrens!—

_Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split!—

_Ant._ Let's all sink with the king. [Exeunt._

_Seb._ Let's take leave of him. [Exeunt._

_Gon._ Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; long heath, brown furze, anything. The wills above be done! but I would fain die a dry death. [Exeunt._

_SCENE II._—The Island: before the cell of Prospero.

_Enter_ Prospero and Miranda._

_Mira._ If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. The sky, it seems, would pour down sinking pitch, But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's heat, Dashes the fire out. O! I have suffer'd With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel, Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her, Dash'd all to pieces. O! the cry did knock Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd. Had I been any god of power, I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The _fraughted_ souls within her.

_Pro._ Be collected: No more amazement. Tell your piteous heart, There's no harm done.

*Incontinent. — "Two courses," i.e., mainsail and foresail. — Absolutely. — To engulph; to swallow. — The _fraughted_ souls; & c, the souls constituting the freight.

Mira. O, woe the day!

_Pro._ No harm. I have done nothing but in care of thee, (Of thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing Of whence I am; nor that I am more better Than Prospero, master of a _full_ poor cell, And thy no greater father.

Mira. More to know Did never muddle with my thoughts.

_Pro._ 'Tis time I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand, And pluck my magic garment from me.—So:—

[ _Lays down his robe._

_Lie there my art._ Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort. The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd The very _virtue_ of compassion in thee, I have with such _provision_ in mine art So safely order'd, that there is no _soul—_ No, not so much _perdition_ as an hair, But to any creature in the vessel Which thou hear'st cry, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down;

For thou must now know farther.

_Pro._ You have often Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd, And left me to a bootless inquisition, Concluding, "Stay, not yet!"

_Pro._ The hour's now come, The very minute bids thee one thine ear; Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember A time before we came unto this cell? _4_Sits down._ I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not _Out_ three years old.

_Mira._ Certainly, sir, I can.

_Pro._ By what? by any other house, or person? Of anything the image tell me, that Hath kept with thy remembrance.

_Mira._ 'Tis far off; And rather like a dream, than an assurance That my remembrance warrants.

_Had I not Four or five women once, that tended me? _Pro._ Thou hast'd, and more, Miranda. But how is't, That this lives in thy mind? What scest thou else In the dark backward and _abysm_ of time? If thou remember'st aught, ere thou cam'st here, How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

_Mira._ But that I do not.

_Pro._ Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year since, Thy father was the duke of Milan, and A prince of power.

_Mira._ Sir, are not you my father? _Pro._ Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and She said,—thou wast my daughter; and thy father Was _treacherous_ of Milan, _2thou_ his only heir _6_and princes, no worse issued.

_Mira._ O, the heavens! What foul play had we, that we came from thence? Or blessed wast, we did? _Pro._ Both, both, my girl: By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence; But blessedly _1 hopel hither._

_Mira._ Was duke _of_ Milan! O! my heart bleeds To think o' the _mean_ that I have turn'd you to, Which is from my remembrance. Please you, further.

_Pro._ My brother, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio,— I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should Be so peridious!—he whom, next thyself, Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put

I, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o'er again: it is a faint,
That wrings mine eyes to't.

Pro.
Hear a little farther,
And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon's; without the which this story
Were most impertinent.

Mira.
Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?

Pro.
Well demanded, wench:
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not,
So dear the love my people bore me, nor set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
With colors fairer painted their foul ends.
In few, they hurried us abroad a boe
Bore us some leagues to sea, where they prepar'd
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg'd,
Nor tack, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quitt it: there they hoist us,
To cry to the sea that roar'd to us; to sigh
To the winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira.
Alack! what trouble
Was I then to you!

Pro.
O! a cherubin
Thou wast, that did preserve me. Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt,
Under my burden ground'd; which rais'd in me
An under-giving stomach, to hear up Against what should subdue.

Mira.
How came we ashore?

Pro. By Providence divine.
Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, (who being then appointed Master of this design) did give us with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
Which since have steaded much: so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I lov'd my books, he furnish'd me,
From my own library, with volumes that
I prize above my dukedom.

Mira.
But ever see that man!

Pro. Now I arise: —I'Puts on his robe again.
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arriv'd; and here
I have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more prof't
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.

Mira.
Heavens thank you for'r! And now, I pray you, sir,
For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
For raising this sea-storm?

Pro.
Know thus far forth,—
By accident most strange, bountiful Fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my prescience,
I find my remembrance, which
A most auspicious star, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Here cease more questions.
Thou art inclin'd to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way:—I know thou canst not choose.—

[MIRANDA SLEEPS.
Come away, servant, come! I am ready now.
Approach, my Ariel: come!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master; grave sir, hail. I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be’t to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl’d clouds: to thy strong bidding task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro. Hast thou, spirit,
Perform’d to point the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. To every article.
I boarded the king’s ship; now on the beak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam’d a massacre: sometimes, I’d divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join. Jove’s lightnings, the precursors
Of the dreadful thunder-claps, more ‘momentary
And sight-outrassing were not: the fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty Neptune
Seem to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.

Pro. My brave spirit!
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?

Ari. Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play’d
Some tricks of desperation. All, but mariners,
Plung’d in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me: the king’s son, Ferdinand,
With his hair up-standing (then like reeds, not hair)
Was the first man that leap’d; cried, “Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here.”

Pro. Why, that’s my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my master.

Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Ari. Not a hair perish’d;
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But freasher than before: and, as thou badst me,
In troops I have dispers’d them “bout the isle.
The king’s son have I landed by himself,
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs
In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

Pro. Of the king’s ship,
The mariners, say, how thou hast dispos’d,
And all the rest of the fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbor
Is the king’s ship; in the deep nook, where once
Thou call’dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still-vox’d Bermoothes, there she’s hid:
The mariners all under hatches stow’d;
Whom, with a charm joined to their suffer’d labor,
I have left asleep: and for the rest of the fleet
Which I dispers’d, they all have met again,
And all upon the Mediterranean float,
Bound sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the king’s ship wreck’d,
And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform’d; but there’s more work.
What is the time of the day?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses. The time ’twixt six and now
Must by us both be spent most graciously. [pains,
Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me
Let me ‘remember thee; what thou hast promis’d,
Which is not yet performed me.

Pro. How now! moody? What is ’t thou count demand?

Ari. My liberty.

Pro. Before the time be out? no more.

Ari. I prithee
Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakes, serv’d
Without or grudge, or grumblings. Thou didst promise
To bate me a full year.

Pro. Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No. [goze

Pro. Thou dost; and think’st it much, to tread the
Of the salt deep,
To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins o’ th’ earth,
When it is b’ak’d with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir. [got

Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou for
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

Ari. No, sir.

Pro. Thou hast. Where was she born?

Ari. Speak; tell me.

Ari. Sir, in *Argier.

Pro. O! was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forget’st. This damn’d witch, Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from *Argier,
Thou knowst, was banish’d: for one thing she did,
They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, sir. [child,

Pro. This blue-eyed bag was hither brought with
And here was left by the sailors: thou, my slave
As thou report’st thyself, wast then her servant:
And, for thou was a spirit too delicate
To act her earthly and ahorr’d commands,
Refusing her grand *hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rife
Imprison’d, thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years; within which space she died,
And left thee there, where thou didst voyt thy groans
As fast as mill-wheel’s strike. Then was this island (Save for a son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hang-born) not honor’d with
A human shape.

Ari. Yes; Caliban, her son.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so; that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best knowst
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the damn’d, which Sycorax
Could not again unde: it was mine art,
When I arriv’d and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmur’st, I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast how’ld away twelve winters.

Ari. Pardon, master: I will be correspondent to command,
And serve my *sprite gently.

Pro. Do so, and after two days
I will discharge thee.

Ari. That’s my noble master! What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

* Algiers.— Beliefs; commands.— Immutable.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.

Pro. Go, make thyself a like nymph o' the sea; be subject to no sight but thine and mine; invisible to every eyeball, else. Go, take this shape, and hither come in't; go; hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.]

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well; Awake!

Mero. The strangeness of your story put [I Waking.]

Heaviness in me. Pro. Shake it off. Come on: We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never yields us kind answer. Mero. 'Tis a villain, sir, I do not love to look on.

[Exit.]

Pro. But, as 'tis, we can not miss him: he does make our fire, fetch in our wood, and serves in offices that profit us. —What ho! slave! Caliban! Thou earth, thou! speak.

Cal. [Within.] There's wood enough within.

Re-enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My 4 quaint Ariel, Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself. Upon thy wicked dam, come forth! Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd With ravens' feather from unworthy face, Drop on you both! a southwest blow on ye, And blister you all e'er! Pro. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; erehins Shall, for that vast of night that they may work, All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging Than bees that made 'em. Cal. I must eat my dinner. This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother, [first, Which thou tak'st from me. When thou art cam'st here Thou strokest me, and mad'st much of me; wouldst give me Water with berries in't; and teach me how To name the bigger light, and how the less, That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee, And show'd thee all the qualities o' this isle, [file. The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place, and for Cursed be I that did so! —All the charms Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you; For I am all the subjects that you have, Which first was mine own king: and here you stay me, In this hard rock, whiles you do keep me The rest o' th' island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave, Whom stripes may move, not kindness, I have us'd thee, Fifth as thou art, with human care; and lodg'd thee In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate The honor of my child.

Cal. O ho! O ho!—would it had been done! Thou didst prevent me: I had peopled else This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorred slave, Which any print of goodness will not take, Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee, Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage, Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like A thing most brutish, I endowed thy purposes With words that made them known; but thy vile race, natures Hence, thou didst learn, had that in't which good Could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou Deservedly confin'd into this rock, Who hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on't Is, I know how to curse. The red plague fad you, For learning me your language!

Pro. Go, Hag-seed, hence! Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou'rt best, To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice? If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps; Fill all thy bones with aches; make thee roar, That bleats shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, pray thee!—I must obey: his art is of such power, [Aside. It would control my dam's god, Setebos, And make a vessel of him.

Pro. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban. Re-enter Ariel, invisible, playing and singing; Ferdinando following.

Ariel's Song.

Come unto these yellow sands, And then take hands: Cours'd side when you have, and kiss'd! The wild waves a whist, Foot it feely here and there; And, sweet sprites, the burden bear. Hark, hark! Burden. Bow, wow. [Dispersedly.

The watch-dogs bark: Burden. Bow, wow. Hark, hark! I hear The strain of strutting chantiere Cry, cock-a-doodle-do. Fer. Where should this music be? 't is th' air, or th' earth?— It sounds no more:—and sure, it waits upon Some god o' th' island. Sitting on a bank, Weeping again the king my father's wreck, This music crept by me upon the waters, Allaying both their fury, and my passion, With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it, Or it hath drawn me rather: — but 'tis gone. No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies; Of his bones are coral made; Those are pearls that were his eyes: Nothing of him that doth fade, But doth suffer a sea-change Into something rich and strange. Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:

[Burden: ding-dong.]

Hark! now I hear them,—ding-dong, bell.

Fer. The dishty does remember my drown'd father.— This is no mortal business, nor no sound That the earth owes.—I hear it now above me.

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance And say, what thou seest yond! Mira. What is't? a spirit? Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir, It carries a brace form: — a, 'tis a spirit.

[Destroy. —Still; silent. —Gran.]
Pro. No, wench: it eats and sleeps, and hath such sense
As we have; such. This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; and but he's something stain'd
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou mightst call
A goodly person. He hath lost his follows, [him
And strays about to find 'em.
Mira. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.
Pro. It goes on, I see, [ Aside.
As my soul prompts it.—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee
Within two days for this.
Fer. Most sure, the goddess! [Seeing her. On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island, [Kneels.
And that you will some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid, or no?
Mira. No wonder, sir; But, certainly a maid.
Fer. My language! heavens!—[Rises.
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.
Pro. How! the best? What wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?
Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me,
And that he does weep: myself am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, beheld
The king, my father, wreck'd.
Mira. Alack, for mercy! Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of Milan,
And his brave son, beingawan.
Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could a control thee,
If now 'twere fit to do't. [Aside. At the first sight
They have chang'd eyes—deliver Ariel, [sir; I'll set thee free for this! [To him. A word, good
I care, you have done yourself some b wrong: a word.
Mira. Why speaks my father so ungently? This Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first
That e'er I sigh'd for. Pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way!
Fer. O! if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.
Pro. Soft, sir: one word more.— [Aside. They are both in either's powers: but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light. [To him. One word more:
I charge thee,
That thou attend me. Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.
Fer.
Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a
If the ill spirit have so fair a house, [Temple.
Good things will strive to dwell without.'
Pro. Follow me.— [To FERD. Speak not for him; he's a traitor.—Come.
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shall thou drink, thy food shall be
The flesh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

* Confute.—b Done yourself some wrong," i.e., spoken a falsehood.—" Own'tst.

Pro. What! I say:
My foot my tutor?—Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who mak'st a show, but dar'st not strike, thy con-sience
Is so possess'd with guilt: come from thy e'ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.
Mira. Beseech you, father! [Pro. Hence! hang not on my garments.
Mira. Sir, have pity: I'll be your surety.
Pro. Silence! one word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What! An advocate for an impostor! hush!
Thou think'st there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench! To the most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.
Mira. My affections
Are from most humble: I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.
Pro. Come on; obey: [To Ferd.
Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigor in them.
Fer. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up,
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats,
To whom I am subdu'd, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.
Pro. It works.—Come on.—
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—Follow me. [To Ferd. and Mira.
Hark, what thou else shalt do me. [To Ariel.
Mira. Be of comfort.
My father's a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted,
Which now came from him.
Pro. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds; and then, exactly do
All points of my command. [To Ferd.
Ari. To the syllable.
Pro. Come, follow.—Speak not for him. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo,
Adrian, Francisco, and Others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry: you have cause
(So have we all) of joy, for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our that woe
Is common: every day, some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then, wisely, good sir, weigh

* Terrible; formidable. — b Guard. — c Cause; subject. —
 d Merchant-vessel.
Our sorrow with our comfort.

_Alon._ Pr'ythee, peace.

_Seb._ He receives comfort like cold porridge.

_Ant._ The visitor will not give him o'er so.

_Seb._ Look; he's winding up the watch of his wit: by and by it will strike.

_Gon._ Sir—

_Seb._ One:—tell.

_Gos._ When every grief is entertain'd, that's offer'd,

Comes to the enterainer—

_Seb._ A dollar.

_Gon._ Dolor comes to him, indeed: you have spoken truer than you purpose.

_Seb._ You have taken it wiser than I meant you should.

_Gon._ Therefore, my lord,

_Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

_Alon._ I pr'ythee, spare.

_Gos._ Well, I have done. But yet—

_Seb._ He will be talking.

_Ant._ 'Which, or he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

_Seb._ The old cock.

_Ant._ The cockrel.

_Seb._ Done. The wager?

_Ant._ A laughter.

_Seb._ A match.

_Adr._ Though this island seem to be desert,—

_Seb._ Ha, ha, ha!

_Adr._ So, you're paid.

_Adr._ Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,—

_Yet—

_Ant._ Yet—

_Ant._ He could not miss it.

_Ant._ It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicaté temperance.

_Seb._ Temperance was a delicate wench. [erew.

_Seb._ Ay, and a subtle, as he mostlearnedly deliv-

_Ant._ The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

_Seb._ As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.

_Ant._ Or as 'twere perfumed by a fen.

_Gon._ Here is every thing advantageous to life.

_Ant._ True; save means to live.

_Seb._ Of that there's none, or little.

_Gon._ How fresh and lusty the grass looks! how green!

_Ant._ The ground, indeed, is tunny.

_Seb._ With an eye of green in't.

_Ant._ He misses not much.

_Seb._ No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

_Gon._ But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit—

_Seb._ As many vouch'd rarities are.

_Gon._ That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dyed, than stain'd with salt water.

_Ant._ If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

_Seb._ Ay, or veryfalsely pocket up his report.

_Gon._ Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Africa, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

_Seb._ Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

_Adr._ Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.

_Gon._ Not since widow Dido's time.

_Ant._ Widow? a pox o' that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido?

_Seb._ What if he had said, widower Encas too? good lord, how you take it!

_Adr._ Widow Dido, said you? you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

_Gon._ This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

_Adr._ Carthage?

_Gon._ I assure you, Carthage.

_Ant._ His word is more than the miraculous harp.

_Seb._ He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

_Ant._ What impossible matter will he make easy next?

_Seb._ I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

_Ant._ And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

_Gon._ Ay?

_Ant._ Why, in good time.

_Gon._ Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh, as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

_Ant._ And the rarest that e'er came there.

_Seb._ Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido.

_Ant._ Of widow Dido; ay, widow Dido.

_Gon._ Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

_Ant._ That sort was well fish'd for.

_Gon._ When I wore it at your daughter's marriage?

[against

_Alon._ You cram these words into mine ears,

The stomach of my sense. Would I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,

My son is lost; and, in my state, she too,

Who is so far from Italy remov'd,

I ne'er again shall see her. O, mine heir

Of Naples and of Milan! what strange fish

Hath made his meal on thee?

_Fren._ Sir, he may live.

I saw him beat the surges under him,

And ride upon their backs: he trod the water,

Whose eminence he flung aside, and breathed

The surge most swain that met him: his bold head

Bove the cretive waters was he kept, and carried

Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke.

To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basia bow'd,

As stooping to relieve him. I not doubt,

He came alive to land.

_Alon._ No, no; he's gone.

_Seb._ Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss

That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,

But rather lose her to an African:

Where she, at least, is banish'd from your eye,

Who hath cause to wet the grief on't.

_Alon._ Pr'ythee, peace.

_Seb._ You were kneeld to, and importuned other-

By all of us; and the fair soul herself [wise

'Weight'd between lothness and obedience, 'as

Which end o' the beam should bow. We have lost your son,

I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have

More widows in them, of this business' making,

Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault's

Your own.

_Alon._ So is the drearest of the loss.

_Gon._ My lord Sebastian,

The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,

And time to speak it in: you rub the sore;

When you should bring the plaster.

_Seb._ Very well.
And watch your safety.

ACT II.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.—[Alone.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them?

Ant. It is the quality of the climate.

Seb. Why

Doth it not then, our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I: my spirits are nimbly.

They fell together all, as by consent;

They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might,

Worthy Sebastian!—O! what might!—No more:

And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,

[And

What thou shouldst be. Th' occasion speaks thee,

My strong imaginacion sees a crown,

Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What! art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely,

It is a sleepy language, and thou speak'st

Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep

With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,

And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

Thou let'st thy fortunate sleep—die rather; wink'st

Whilest thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly:

There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you

Must be so too, if heed me; which to do,

Terbles thee o'er.

Seb. Well: I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb,

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O!

If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish,

Whilest you mock it! how, in stripping it,

You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,

Most often do so near the bottom run

By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on.

The setting of thine eye, and thine cheek, proclaim

A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,

Which throes thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir.

Although this lord of weak remembrance, this

(Who shall be of as little memory,

When he is earth'd) hath here almost persuaded (For he's a spirit of persuasion, only Profess to persuade) the king, his son's alive,

'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd,

As he that sleeps here, swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O! out of that no hope,

What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even

Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,

But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me,

That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then, tell me,

Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that

Can have no love, unless the sun were post,

(Th' man! the moon's too slow) till new-born chins

Be rough and razonable; she, *for whom

* 'Trows thee o'er;* i. e., makes thee three times what thou art.
The Tempest

SCENE II.

We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast against it, and by that destiny to perform an act, whereof what's past is prologue, what's to come, in yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this?—How say you?

'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis; so is she heir of Naples; twice which regions there is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit seems to cry out, "How shall that Chiribell measure us back to Naples?"—Keep in Tunis, and let Sebastian wake!—Say this were death, that now hath seized them; why, they were no worse than now they are. There be, that can rule Naples as well as he that sleeps; lords that can prove as amply, and unaccommodately, as this Gonzalo; I myself could make a stomach of as deep chat. O, that you bore the mind that I do! what a sleep were this for your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content
Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember, you yield supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. And look how well my garments sit upon me; much faster than before. My brother's servants were they my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience—

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if it were a kybe, it would put me to my slipper; but I feel not this deity in my bosom; twenty consciences, that stand 'twixt me and Milan, candid be they, and melt, ere they molest! Here lies your brother, no better than the earth he lies upon.

If he were that which now he's like, that's dead, whom I, with this obedient steel, three inches of it, can lay to bed for every; while you, doing thus, to the perpetual wink for nay might put this ancient morsel, this Sir Prudence, who should not upbraid our course: for all the rest, they'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk; they'll tell the clock to any business that we say before the hour.

Seb. Thy case, dear friend, shall be my precedent: as thou go'st Milan, I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword; one stroke shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'st; and I, the king, shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together; and when I rear my hand, do you the like, To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O! but one word. [They converse apart.

Music. Ariel descends invisible.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger
That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth (For else his project dies) to keep them living.

[Sings in Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do nothing lie,
Open ye his conspiracy
His time doth lack.

If of life you keep a care,
Shake off slumber, and beware:
Awake! Awake!

a. "Cast," i. e., cast up.—b. "In yours and my discharge," i. e., depends on what you and I are to perform.—c. Jackdaw.

"Much faster," i. e., more nearly, desity.—d. "If it were a kybe," i. e., if conscience were a skilful one, it would make my activity.—e. A hint.

Ant. Then, let us both be sudden.

Gon. Now, good angels, preserve the king!

[They wake.

Alon. Why, how now, ho! awake! Why are you drawn?

Wherefore thus ghostly looking?

Gon. What's the matter?

Seb. Whiles we stood here securing your repose, even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing, like bulls, or rather lions; did it not wake you? it struck mine ear most terribly.

Alon. I heard nothing.

Ant. O! 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

Alon. Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Gon. Upon mine honor, sir, I heard a humming, and that a strange one too, which did awake me. I shak'd you, sir, and cry'd: as mine eyes open'd, I saw their weapons drawn. There was a noise, that's verity: 'tis best we stand upon our guard, or that we quit this place. Let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground, and let's make farther search
For your poor son.

Gon. Heavens keep him from these beasts; for he is, sure, 'tis the island.

Alon. Lead away. [Exeunt. Ari. Prospero, my lord, shall know what I have done:

So, king, go safely on to seek thy son.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Caliban, with a burden of wood. A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bags, fens, flats, on Prosper full, and make him by inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me, and yet I needs must curse; but they'll not pinch, fright me with shrivel shows, pitch me in the mire, nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but For every trifle are they set upon me: sometime like spoes, that b moe and chatter at me, And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues Do kiss me into madness.—Lo, now! lo! Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me For bringing wood in slowly: I'll fall flat; perchance, he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing in the wind: yond' same black cloud, yond' huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond' same cloud can not choose but fall by pelting.

What have we here! [Seeing Caliban.] A man or a fish? Dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man: any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legg'd like a man! and his furs like arms! Warm, 'o my troth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt. [Thunder.] Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will here shroud, till the drench of the storm be past.

8. Fairy — Make mouths.—A black jack of leather to hold beer.—i. e., Make a man's fortune.

Enter Stephano, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea.

Here shall I die a-shore.—

This is a very scurry tune to sing at a man's funeral. Well, here's my comfort. [Drinks.]

The master, the swabber, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Lost'ra Moll, Meg, and Marion, and Margery,
But none of us can'd for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a sting,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang!
She lost not the anger of tar, nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she'd itch.
Then, to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a scurry tune too; but here's my comfort. [Drinks.]

Cal. Do not torment me: O!
Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here? Do you put tricks upon us with noises, and means of Indo? Ha! I have not 'scap'd drowning, to be afeard now of your four legs; for it hath been said, as proper a man as ever went on four legs can not make him give ground, and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: O!
Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devil should be learnt our language? I will give him some relief, it it be for that: if I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on nec's-leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, pr'ythee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take 'too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt soon, I know it by thy trembling: now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways; open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, eat. Open your mouth: this will shake your shanking. I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again.

[Caliban drinks.]

Cal. I should know that voice. It should be— but he is drowned, and these are devils. O, defend me!—

Ste. Four legs, and two voices! a most delicate monster. His forward voice, now, is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague. Come,—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him: I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me, for I am Trinculo:—be not afraid,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth. I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed! How came'st thou to be the besiege of this moon-calf? Can be vent Trinculo?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke.—But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano? Two Neapolitans 'scaped?

Ste. Prythee, do not turn me about: my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprites. That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor: I will kneel to him.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? How cam'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how thou cam'st hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved overboard, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthly. 4

Ste. Here: swear, then, how thou escap'st.

Trin. Swam a-shore, man, like a duck. I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here: kiss the book. Though thou cam'st swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano! hast any more of this?
Ste. The whole butt, man: my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how doth thine auge?

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out of the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee: my mistress showed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents. Swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster, I took for him!—a very weak monster. —The man i' the moon!—a most poor credulous monster.—Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island; and I will kiss thy foot. I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most peridious and drunk-en monster, when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Ste. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on, then; down and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurvy monster! I could find in my heart to beat him,—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —But that the poor monster's in drink. An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries; I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.

4 An allusion to the proverb, "He who eats with the devil had need of a long spoon."—Stow (excrement.)
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I pray thee, let me bring thee where crabs grow; And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts; Show thee a jay's nest, and instaue thee how To scare the nimble "marmozet": I'll bring thee To clustering filders, and sometimes I'll get thee Young 1 snakes from the rock: wilt thou go with me? Ste. I pray thee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle.—Follow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. Farcewell, master; farcewell, farcewell.

Trin. A bowling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dans I'll make for fish; Nor fetch in fising
At requiring,
Nor scrape 2 trencher, nor wash dish; 'Tain 'Ban 'Ban, Co—Caliban,
Has a new master—Get a new man.

Freaom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom! hey-day, freedom! Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful, and their labor Delight in them sets off; some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This may my means Would be as heavy to me, as odious; but The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead, And makes my labor's pleasures: O! she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed; And he's composed of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up, Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress [Ness Weeps when she sees me work; and, says, such base Had never like executor. I forget: But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labors; Most busy, 1 longest when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero behind.

Mir. Abs! now, pray you, Work not so hard: I would, the lightning had Burst up those logs that you are eujoin'd to pile. Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns, 'Twill weep for having wearied you. My father Is hard at study; pray now rest yourself: He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O, most dear mistress! The sun will set, before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit down, I'll bear your logs the while. Pray, give me that: I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature: I had rather crack my sinews, break my back, Than you should such dishonor undergo, While I sit lazy by.

Small monkey.

Mir. It would become me As well as it does you; and I should do it With much more ease, for my good will is to it, And yours it is against. I'll make it known.

Fer. Poor worm! thou art infected; This visitation shows it.

Mir. You look wearily.

Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis my morning with me, When you are by at night. I do beseech you, Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers.

Mir. What is your name?

Miranda. O my father! I have broke your 2 host to say so. [To herself.

Fer. Admit'rd Miranda! Indeed, the top of admiration; worth What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady I have ey'd with best regard; and many a time The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues Have I lik'd several women; never any With so full soul, but some defect in her Did querril with the noblest grace she ow'd, And put it to the 3 foil: but you, O you! So perfect, and so peerless, are created Of every creature's best.

Mir. I do not know One of my sex; no woman's face remember, Save, from my glass, mine own: nor have I seen More that I may call men, than you, good friend, And my dear father. How features are abroad, I am skill-less of; but, by my modesty, (The jewel in my drawer) I would not wish Any companion in the world but you; Nor can imagination form a shape, Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle Something too wildly, and my father's precepts I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition, A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king; (I would, not so!) and would no more endure This wooden slavery, than to suffer The flesh-fly blow my mouth.—Hear my soul speak: The very instant that I saw you, did My heart fly to your service; there resides, To make me slave to it; and for your sake, Am I this patient log-man.

Mir. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven! O earth! bear witness to this And crown what I profess with kind event, [sound, If I speak true; if hollowly, invert What best is boded me to mischief! I, Beyond all limit of 4 sought else i' the world, Do love, prize, honor you.

Mir. I am a fool, To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. Fair encounter Of two most rare affections! Heavens main grace On that which breeds between them! [Aside.

Fer. Wherefore weep you?

Mir. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer What I desire to give; and much less take, What I shall die to want. But this is trifling; And all the more it seeks to hide itself. The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning, And prompt me, plain and holy innocence! I am your wife, if you will marry me; If not, I'll die your maid: to be your 4 fellow You may deny me; but I'll be your servant, Whether you will or no.

1 Behest; command. — 2 Owner. — 4 Put it to the foil; i.e., set it off by contrast. — 3 Companion.
SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter STEPHANO and TRINCULO; CALIBAN following with a bottle.

Ste. Tell not me:—when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em.—Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this island! They say, there's but five upon this island: we are three of them; if the other two be brained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee: thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack; for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, monster-messiah.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll lie, like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honor? Let me lick thy shoe. I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou debauched fish thou, was there ever man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he!—that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mutineer, the next tree—The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I; kneel and repeat it: I will stand, and so shall Trinculo. [CALIBAN kneels.]

Enter ARIEL, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant; a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Ste. Mum then, and no more. [To CALIBAN.

Cal. I say by sorcery he got this isle; from me he got it: if thy greatness will, Revenge it on him—for, I know, thou dar'st; But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Trin. How, now, shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea, my lord: I'll yield him thee at once, Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not. [patch!—

Cal. What a 'pied ninny's this! Thou scurril I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, And take his bottle from him: when that's gone, He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him Where the quick 'freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no farther danger: interrupt the monster one word farther, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock of thee.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits, and hearing too!—A pox o' your bottle! this can suck, and drinking do. A murmur on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand farther off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand farther.—Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him the afternoon to sleep; 'tis then you may'st brain him, Having first seiz'd his books; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his d'ezendant with thy knife. Remember, First to possess his books; for without them He's but a sod, as I am, nor hath now One spirit to command: they all do hate him, As rootedly as I. Burn but his books; He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them) Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal: And that most deeply to consider is The beauty of his daughter; he himself Calls her a comparil: I never saw a woman, But only Syconax my dam, and she; But she as far surpasseth Syconax, As great'st doe least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant, And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) And Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys.—Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep; Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honor.

*Standard-bearer.
Scene III.

The Tempest.

12

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Col. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure.

Let us be jocund: will you troll the catch?

You taught me but a while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason.

Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings. Float 'em, and scout 'em; and scout 'em, and float 'em; thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

[Aside.]

Ari. Plays the tune on a Taylor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee.

Mercy upon us!

[Aside.] Art thou afraid?

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises, Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not. Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometimes voices, That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep, Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming, The clouds, methought, would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd I cry'd to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.

Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow.—I would, I could see this taborer: he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and Others.

Gen. 'Byr' la'kin, I can go no further, sir; my old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed.

Through 4th sight-rights, and 'manders by your pa, I needs must rest me.

[Aside]

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, Who am myself 'so' with weakness, To the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it No longer for my flatterer: he is drowned, Whom thus we stray to find; and the seas mocks Our frastare search on land. Well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's so out of hope.

[Aside to Sebastian.]

Do not, for one repulse, forgo the purpose That you resolve'd to effect.

Seb. The next advantage Will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it be to-night.

For, now they are oppressed with travel, they Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance, As when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night: no more.

[Solemn and strange music; and Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutations; and, inviting the King, &c., to eat, they depart.]

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark! Gonz. Marvelous sweet music!

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollerie. Now I will believe That there are unicorns; that in Arabia There is one tree, the phoenix,thrice; one phoenix At this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both; And what does else want credit, come to me, And I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers never did lie, Though fools at home condemn them.

Gonz. If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me? If I should say, I saw such islanders, (For, 'certes, these are people of the island) Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, Their manners are more gentle, kind, than of Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. [Aside.] Honest lord.

Thou hast said well; for some of you there present, Are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much music, Such shapes, such 1'gestures, and such 2 sounds, express lyric (Although they want the use of tongue) a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. [Aside.] Praise in departing.

Pro. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I. Gonz. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys, Who would believe that there were mountain-icing 1Dew-lapp'd 1 like bulls, whose throats had hanging at Wall's of flesh? or that there were such men, Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now, we Each 2putter-out of five for one will bring us [find, Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed, Although my last: no matter, since I feel The best is past.—Brother, my lord the duke, Stand to, and do us we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel like a harpy, claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny (That hath to 'instrument this lower world, And what is in't) the never-surfitted sea Hath caused to belch up, and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men Being most unapt to live. I have made you mad; And even with such like valor men hang and drawn Their proper selves. You fools! and my fellows Are ministers of fate: the elements,

4[Alon, Seb., &c., draw their Swords.]

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemo'k'd-at-stabs Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish One 2dowle that's in my plume: my fellow-ministers.

1A little while ago. 2Twangling. 3By our Lady. 4Straight palm. —Winding course.—Seized.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT IV.

Are like invulnerable. If you could hurt,
Your swords are now no marvel for your strengths,
And will not be uplifted. But, remember,
(For that's my business to you) that you three,
From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
Expost'd unto the sea, (which hath requit it)
Him, and his innocent child: for which foul deed
The powers, delaying not forgetting, have Incens'd the seas and shores; yea, all the creatures,
Against your peace. Thee, of thy son, Alonso,
They have bereft; and do pronounce by me,
Lingering perdition (worse than any death
Can be at once) shall step by step attend
You, and your ways; whose wrath to guard you from (Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your heads) is nothing, but heart's sorrow,
And a clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with mock and moneys, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Above.] Bravely the figure of this happy hast thou
Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouing.
Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'bated,
In what thou hast'd to say: so, with good life
And observation strange, my meaker ministers
Their several kinds have done. My high charms work,
And these, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they now are in my power;
And in these fits I leave them, while I visit
Young Ferdinand, (whom they suppose is drown'd)
And his and my lov'd darling. [Exit PROSPERO.

Gon. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand
In this strange stare! [You
You
O, it is monstrous! monstrous! Methought, the billows spoke, and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounc'd
The name of Prosper; it did base my trespass.
Therefore my son the oze is bedded; and
I'll seek him deeper than ever plummet sounded,
And with him there lie maul'd. [Exit.]

Sob. But one fiend at a time,
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ant. I'll be thy second. [Exeunt SEB. and ANT.

Gon. All three of them are desperate: their great Like poison given to work a great time after,
New 'gins to bite the spirits. I do beseech thee,
That are of supper joints, follow them swiftly,
And binder them from what this 4 ecstasy
May now provoke them to.

Adr. Follow, I pray you. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before PROSPERO'S Cell.

Enter PROSPERO, FERDINAND, and MIRANDA.

Pro. If I have too austerity punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life,
Or that for which I live; whom once again
I Tender to thy hands. All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand!

Do not smile at me that I boast her off,
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And make it half behind her.

Pro. I do believe it,
Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter: but
If thou dost break her virgin knot before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may,
With full and holy rite, be minister'd,
No sweet `suspension shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hale,
Source-yielded disdain, and discord, shall brestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now, the murkiesest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'est suggestion
Our worser genius can, shall never melt
Mine honor into lust, to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phæbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept claim'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke.
Sit then, and talk with her; she is thine own.

What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy menager follow your last service
Did worthily perform, and I must use you
In such another trick. Go, bring the rabble,
O'erm which I give thee power, here, to this place:
Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently?

Pro. Ay, with a twinkle.

Ari. Before you can say, "Come," and "go,"
And breathe twice; and cry, "so so;"
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow.

Do you love me, master! no?

Pro. Deadly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach,
Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well I conceive. [Exit.

Pro. Look, thou be true. Do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oats are straw
To the fire 't the blood. Be more abstemious,
Or else, good night, your vow.

Fer. I warrant you, sir; the white-cold virgin snow upon my heart
Abates the ardor of my liver.

Pro. Well.—

Now come, my Ariel! bring a 6 corallary,
Rather than want a spirit: appear, and perty.—
No tongue, all eyes; be silent. [Soft music.

A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich less
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and peas;
Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And that meads thatch'd with 'stover, them to keep;
Thy banks with pioned and pilled boughs
Which spongy April at thy best betroin
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns and thy 3 brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor to u.

Scene 1.

The Tempest.

Being

and

thy pole-clip vineyard;
And thy sea-marge, sterile, and rocky-hard;
Where thou thyself dost air; the queen of the sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am I.
Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace,
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place;
[Junio descends slowly.
To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail, many-color'd messenger, that seer
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who with thy saflon wings upon my flowers
Diffus'd honey-dipple, blessings showers:
And with each cind of thy blue bow dost crown
My blosky acres, and my unshrub'd down,
Rich scarf to my proud earth; why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither, to this short-graz'd green?
Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the bless'd lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow,
If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know,
Do now attend the queen? since they did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got,
Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company
I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society
Be not afraid: I met her deity
Cutting the clouds towards Paphos, and her son
Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have done
Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be light'd; but in vain:
Mars's hot minion is return'd again;
Her wasps-head'd son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

Cer. Highest queen of state,
Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Jun. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me,
To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,
And honor'd in their issue.

Juno. Honor, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing;
Hourly joys be still upon you!
Juno sings her blessings on you.
Earth's increase, foxon plenty,
Borns, and gleaners never empty;
Vines, with clustering bunches growing;
Plants, with goodly burden bowing;
Rain come to you, at the farthest,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be hold
To think these spirits!
Pro. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call'd to exact
My present fascines.
Fer. Let me live here ever:
So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife,
Makes this place Paradise.

[Junio and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Pro. Sweet now, silence!
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do. Hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marred. [brooks,
Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wandering
With your edge crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love: be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sun-burn'd Sickenmen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry.
Make holy-day: your eye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.
[Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join
With the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end Whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks;
after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they hourly vanish.

Pro. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come.—[To the Spirits.] Well done.—
Avoid:—no more.

Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mir. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distress'd:
Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov'd sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, are all spirits, and
Are melt'd into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself;
Yo, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant fade,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.—Sir, I am vex'd:
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my insomny.
If you be pleas'd, retire into my cell,
And there repose: a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer. Mira. We wish your peace.
[Exeunt.
Pro. Come with a thought!—I thank thee.—
Ariel, come!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I leave to. What's thy pleasure?
Pro. Spirit,
We must prepare to meet with Caliban.
Ari. Ay, my commander: when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear'd,
Lest I might anger thee.
[leta?
Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these var-
Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking;
So full of valor, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet, yet always heading Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their cars,
Advance their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music: so I charm'd their cars,
That, calf-like, they my bowing follow'd, through Tow'dl'd bribes, sharp furze, prickling borne, and thorns,
THE TEMPEST.

ACT V.

Which enter'd their frail skins: at last I left them P't the filthy mantled pool beyond your cell, There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake O'erstunk their feet.

Pro. This was well done, my bird.

Thy shape invisible retain thou still: The trumpery in my house, go, bring it hither, For 'tis stale to catch these thieves.

Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.

Pro. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains, Humanly taken, all, all lost, quite lost; And as with age his body niger grows, So his mind rankers. I will plague them all, Re-enter Ariel, laden with glittering apparel, &c.

Even to roaring.—Come, hang them on this line.

Ariel. hangs them on the line, and with Prospero remains unseen.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all weat.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly; that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than play'd the 3Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss, at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you,— Trin. Thouwert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favor still.

Ste. Patient, for the prize I'll bring thee to; softly; Shall hood-wink this mischance: therefore, speak All's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool.— Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonor in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er ears for my labor.

Cal. Enrtrve, my king, be quiet. Sceat thou here? This is the mouth o' the cell: no noise, and enter: Do that good mischief, which may make this island Thine own for ever, and I, the Caliban, For aye thy foot-liege.

Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! look, what a wardrobe here is for thee! 3[Seeing the apparel.

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool: it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a frippery.—O king Stphano! Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo: by this hand, I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it. [mean, Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! what do you To dot on such baggage? Let't alone, And do the murder first: if he awake, From toe to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches; Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster.—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, and't like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest: here's a garment for't; wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country. "Swell by line and level," is an excellent pass of pate; there's another garment fort.

Trin. Monster, come; put some 4line upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time, And all be turn'd to barnacles, or to apes With favours of villainous love.

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: help to bear this away, where my boghead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom. Go to; carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

[4A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers spirits, in shape of hounds, and hunt them about: Prospero and Ariel setting them on.]

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey! Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver! [Cal., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews [them, With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make Than 5pard, or cat o' mountain. 6Cries of roaring.

Ari. Hark! they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour Lie at my mercy all mine enemies; Shortly shall all my labors end, and thou Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little, Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes: and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head: My charms crack not, my spirits obey, and time Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day? Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord, You said our work should cease.

Pro. I did say so, When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the king and his followers? Ari. Confid'nd together In the same fashion as you gave in charge; Just as you left them: all prisoners, sir; In the line-grove which 5weather-feeds your cell; They cannot 6budge till your release. The king, His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted, And the remainder mourning over them, Drim-full of sorrow, and dismay: but chiefly Him that you term'd, sir, the good old lord, Gonzalo: His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops From coves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works That if you now behold them, your affections [them, Would become tender.

Pro. Dost thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, but a touch, a feeling Of their afflictions, and shall not myself, One of their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier mov'd than thou art? Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the yet, with my nobler reason, 'gainst my fury 7quick, Do I take part. The rarer action is In virtue, than in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown farther. Go; release them, Ariel.
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.
Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit. Pro. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and green woods, and ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back; you demy-puppets, that
By moonshine do the 1 green-sward ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid
(Wake masters though ye be) I have be-dim'd
The nocturnal star, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And twixt the green sea and the azure
d'vail
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt; the strong'ns'd promontory
Have I made shake; and by the 2 spears pluck'd up
The pine and cedar: graves, at my command,
Have I waked their sleeper oped, and let them forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I here abjure; and, when I have requir'd
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do)
To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is for; I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book. [Solemn music.
Re-enter ARIEL: after him, ALONSO, with a frantic gesture, attended by GONZALO; SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO in like manner, attended by ADRIAN and FRANCISCO: they all enter the circle which PROSPERO had made, and there stand charmed; which PROSPERO observing, speaks.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
Now useless, boil'd within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopped.—
Noble Gonzalo, honorable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the 3 flow of thine,
Fall fellowly drops.—The charm dissolves space;
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason.—O good Gonzalo! (My true preserver, and a loyal servant
To him thou follow'st, I will pay thy graces
Home, both in word and deed. Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter?
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act;—[blood,
Thou'tt pinch'd for't not soon, Sebastian.—Flesh and
You brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian,
(Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee,
Unnatural though thou art.—Their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy. Not one of them,
That yet looks on me, 'tis not would know me.—Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapiers in my cell; [Exit ARIEL.
I will dispose me, and myself provide;
As I was sometime Milan.—Quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.
ARIEL re-enters singing, and helps to attire PROSPERO.
Ari. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie:

* Root.

There I'll cool. When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly.
After summer, merrily:
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom—so, so, so.—
To the king's ship, in this inmost place.
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master, and the boatswain,
Being awake, enforce them to this place,
And presently, I pr'ythee.
Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit ARIEL.

Pro. [Attired as Duke.] Behold, sir king,
The wronged duke of Milan, Prospero.
For more assurance that a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alon. Where thou beest he, or no,
Or some enchanted 4 devil to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse
Bears as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
Th' affiction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me. This must crave
(An if this be all) a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
[pero Thou pardon me thy wrongs.—But how should Prosp.
Being live, and be here?

Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honor cannot
Be measur'd, or confin'd.

Gen. Whether this be,
Or not, I will not swear.

Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtilties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain.—Welcome, my friends all.
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
[Aside to SEB. and ANT.
I here could pluck his highness' Brown upon you,
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

SEB. [Aside.] The devil speaks in him.

Pro. No.—
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest 5 faults; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, performe, I know
Thou must restore.

Alon. If thou beest Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost, (How sharp the point of this remembrance is!)
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. I am 6 woe for't, sir.
Alon. Irrepiable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss?

Pro. As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.

8 Sorry.
Alon. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddle in that oozy bed [ter?
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daugh-

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,
There they devour their reason, and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath; but, howsoever you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed,
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Beginning this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in,
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.

Prospero draws a curtain, and discovers Ferdi-and Miranda playing at chess

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.

Pro. No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world. [wangle.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should
And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.

Neb. A most high miracle!
Pro. Though the seas threaten they are merciful:
I have curs'd them without cause. [Kneels to Alon.
Alon. Now, all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou cam'st here.

Mira. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O, brave new world,
That has such people in't!

Pro. 'Tis now to thee. [play?
Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at Your old acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath nevered us,
And brought us thus together?

Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But by immortal providence, she is mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers.
But O! how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness.

Pro. There, sir, stop;
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.

Gen. I have inly wept,
Or that I have spoke ere this: Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown,
For it is you that have chaldk'd forth the way,
Which brought us hither!

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalez.

Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue Should become kings of Naples? O! rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars. In one voyage
Did Charibe his husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, his brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom,
In a poor crust; and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.

Alon. Give me your hands: [To Fer. and Mir.
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy!

Gon. Be it so: Amen.

Re-enter ARIEL, with the Master and Boatswain amazingly following.

O look, sir! look, sir! here are more of us.
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. —Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'board, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
Boats. The best news is, that we have safely
Found our king, and company: the next, our ship,
Which but three glasses since we gave out split,
Is tight, and 'tare, and bravely rigg'd, as when
We first put out to sea.

Ari. Sir, all this service [Aside.
Have I done since I went.

Pro. My tricksy spirit! [Aside.
Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger.—Say, how came you hither?
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'll strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And (how we know not) all clapp'd under hatches,
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awak'd; straightforward, at liberty:
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capering to eye her: on a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither.

Ari. Was't well done?

be free.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of; some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my liege,
Do not infrast your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure,
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you (Which to you shall seem probable) of every
These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well.—Come hither, spirit;
Set Caliban and his companions free; [Aside.
Untie the spell. [Exit ARIEL.] How farse my gracious
There are yet missing of your company
[sir?
Some few odd lads, that you remember not.

Re-enter ARIEL, driving in CALIBAN, STEPHANO, and TRINCULO, in their stolen apparel.

Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man
Take care for himself, for all is but fortune.
Coragio! bully-monster, coragio!
Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head,
Here's a goodly sight.
Cal. O Setebos! these be brave spirits, indeed.
How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.

*Wonder; marvel.
THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

Seb. Ha, ha!
What things are these, my lord Antonio?
Will money buy them?

Ant. Very like: one of them is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords, Then say, if they be true.—This mis-shapen knave, His mother was a witch; and one so strong That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs, And deal in her command with all her power. These three have robb’d me; and this demi-devil (For he’s a bastard one) had plotted with them To take my life: two of these fellows you Must know, and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.

Cal. I shall be pinch’d to death.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler? Seb. He is drunk now: where had he wine?

Pro. You’d be king of the isle, sirrah?

Ste. I should have been a sore one then.

Alon. This is as strange a thing as e’er I look’d on.

Pointing to Caliban.

Pro. He is as disproportion’d in his manners, As in his shape.—Go, sirrah, to my cell; Take with you your companions: as you look To hath no pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I’ll be wise hereafter, And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass Was I, to take this drunken for a god, And worship this doll fool?

Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you Seb. Or stole it, rather. [Found it.

[Exeunt Cal., Ste., and Trin.

Pro. Sir, I invite your bigness, and your train, To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest For this one night; which, part of it, I’ll waste

With such discourse, as I not doubt, shall make it Go quick away; the story of my life, And the particular accidents gone by, Since I came to this isle; and in the morn, I’ll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples, Where I have hope to see the nuptial Of these our dear-beloved solemniz’d; And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I’ll deliver all; And promise you calm seas, suspicions gales, And sail, so expeditious, that shall catch Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,— That is thy charge: then, to the elements; Be free, and fare thou well!—Please you draw near.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o’erthrown, And what strength I have’s mine own; Which is most faint: now, ’tis true, I must be here confin’d by you, Or sent to Naples. Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got, And pardon’d the deceiver, dwell In this bare island, by your spell; But release me from my bands, With the help of your good hands. Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please. Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant; And my ending is despair, Unless I be relief’d by prayer; Which pieces so, that it assaults Mercy itself, and frees all faults. As you from crimes would pardon’d be, Let your indulgence set me free.

*By your applause.

*Honest.—“Gilded ’em,” I.e., made them drunk.

Antonio, Father to Proteus.
Thurio, a foolish rival to Valentine.
Eglamour, agent of Silvia in her escape.
Speed, a clownish Servant to Valentine.
Launce, the like to Proteus.

Scene: sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan, and on the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

Scene I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus! Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. What not, affliction chains thy tender days? To the sweet glances of thy honor'd love, I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein, Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou become, sweet Valentine, adieu. Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness, When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy bead's-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a love-book pray for my success

Panthio, Servant to Antonio.
Host, where Julia lodges.
Outlaws with Valentine.
Julia, beloved of Proteus.
Silvia, beloved of Valentine.
Lucetta, Waiting-woman to Julia.
Servants, Musicians.

Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee. Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love, How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont. Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love, For he was more than ever shoes in love. Val. 'Tis true; but you are over boots in love, And yet you never swam the Hellespont. Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots. Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not. Pro. What? Val. To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans; Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labor won: However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished. Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool. Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove. Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at: I am not love. Val. Love is your master, for he masters you; And he that is so yoked by a fool,

Give me not the boots, i.e., Do not make a laughing-stock of me. — Reasoning; circumstantial deductions. — Conduct.
SCENE II.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

21

Mothinks, should not be chronicled for wise.
Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, so eating love
Inhabits the finest wits of all.
Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud,
Losing its verdure then in the prime,
And all the fair effects of future hopes,
But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee,
That art a votary to fond desire?
Once more adieu. My father at the *road
Promises my coming, there to see me ship'd.
Pro. And chissel will I bring thee, Valentine.
Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave.
To Milan let me hear from thee by letters,
For thy success in love, and what news else
Betide thee in absence of thy friend,
And I likewise will visit thee with mine.
Pro. All happiness becalme to thee in Milan.
Val. As much to you at home; and so, farewell.
Pro. He after honor hunters, I after love: [Exit.
He leaves his friends to digivory thern more;
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love.
Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,
War with good counsel, set the world at nought,
Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you. Saw you my master?
Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.
Speed. Twenty to one, then, he is ship'd already,
And I have play'd the *sheep in losing him.
Speed. This proves me still a very often stray,
As if the shepherd be awhile away.
Speed. You conclude, that my master is shepherd, then, and I a sheep?
Pro. I do.
Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether
I wake or sleep.
Pro. A silly answer, and sitting well a sheep.
Speed. This proves me still a fitter sheep.
Pro. True, and thy master a shepherd.
Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.
Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.
Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.
Pro. The shepherd for fowlers follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.
Speed. Such another proof will make me cry "liza."
Pro. But, dost thou hear? gay'st thou my letter to Julia?
Speed. Ay, sir; I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to Lucetta, a lost mutton; and, as a lost mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labor.
Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.
Speed. If the ground be overcharg'd, you were best stick her.
Pro. Nay, in that you are a "stray," twere best point you. Now are you "stray."
Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.
Pro. You mistake: I mean the pound, the pinfold.
Speed. From a pound to a pin I fold it over and over,
'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.
Pro. But what said she? did she nod?
Speed. [Speed nods.]
Speed. You mistook, sir; I say she did nod, and you ask me, if she did nod? and I say I.
Pro. And that set together, is noddy.
Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.
Pro. No, no; you shall have it for bearing the letter.
Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.
Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?
Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly;
not having but the word noddy for my pains.
Pro. Beslow me, but you have a quick wit.
Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.
Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief: what said she?
Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may both be at once deliver'd.
Pro. Well, sir; here is for your purse. What said she?
Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.
Pro. Why? Couldst thou perceive so much from her?
Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her
2 better;
No, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter;
And being so hard to me that brought 2 to her your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling 'you her mind.
Give her no token but stones, for she's as hard as steel.
Pro. What! said she nothing?
Speed. No, not so much as "take this for thy pains." To testify thy bounty, I thank you, you have fortesten'd me; in requisit whereof, henceforth
I carry your letters yourself.
And so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.
[2 Exit.
Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck,
Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
Being destin'd to a drier death on shore. —
I must go send some better messenger:
I fear my Julia would not resign my lines,
Receiving them from such a worthless post. 2[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Julia's Garden.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldst thou, then, counsel me to fall in love?
Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheedfully.
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen,
That every day with 2 parle encounter me,
In thy opinion which is worthiest love? [mind
Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Sir Eglamour?
Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich 2 Mercutio?
Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.
Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?
Luc. Lord, lord! to see what folly reigns in us!
Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 'tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus 2 a loving gentleman.
Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest? Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him best. Jul. Your reason? Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason: I think him so, because I think him so. Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him? Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away. Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never mov'd me. Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye. Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small. Luc. Fire that's closest kept burns most of all. Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love. Luc. Of! they love least, that let men know their Jul. I would I knew his mind. [love. Luc. Peruse this paper, madam. [Gives Jul. "To Julia," Say, from whom? [a letter. Luc. That the contents will show. Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee? [Proteus. Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from He would have given it, but, being in the way, Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray. Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker! Dare you presume to harbor wanton lines? To whisper and conspire against my youth? Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth, And you an officer fit for the place. Think you, they love, 'tis seen, let it return'd, [back. Or else return me into my sight. Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate. Jul. Will you be gone? Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit. Jul. And yet, I would I had o'erlook'd the letter. It was a shame to call her back again, And pray her to a fault for which I chid her. What fool is she, that knows I am a maid, And would not force the letter to my view, Since maids, in modesty, say "No!" to that Which they would have the profferer construe, "Ay." Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love, That like a teazy babe will scratch the nurse, And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod. He would hurlishly chide me; Lucetta back, When willingly I would have had her here: How angrily I taught my brow to frown, When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile. My penance is to call Lucetta back, And ask remission for my folly past.— What ho! Lucetta! Re-enter Lucetta. Luc. What would your ladyship? Jul. Is it near dinner-time? Luc. I would, it were; That you might kill your stomach on your meat, And not upon your maid. [I drops the letter, and takes it up again. Jul. What is't that you took up so gingerly? Luc. Nothing. Jul. Why didst thou stoop, then? Luc. To take a paper up That I let fall. Jul. And is that paper nothing? Luc. Nothing concerning me. Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns. Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns, Unless it have a false interpreter. Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme. Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune, Give me a note: your ladyship can set— Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible, Best sing it to the tune of "Light o' love." Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune. —Matchmaker.
Pant. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?

Pant. He wonder'd, that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discover isles and countries;
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider'd well his loss of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time.
The time, when, whither or how, I best may send him
Pant. I think, your lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.
Ant. I know it well.
Pant. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him
There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth, and nobleness of birth.
Ant. I like thy counsel: well hast thou advis'd;
And, that thou may'st perceive how I like it,
The execution of it shall make known.
Even with the swiftest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.
Pant. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphono;
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.
Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:
And, in good time, now will we break with him.
Enter Proteus, not seeing his Father.
Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
[Kissing a letter.
Here is her oath for love, her honor's pawn.
Of that our fathers would applaud our loves,
And seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia!
Ant. How now! what letter are you reading there?
Pro. May'st please your lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine,
Putting deliver'd by a friend that came from him.
[It up.
Ant. Lend me the letter: let me see what news.
Pro. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well he is prov'd;
And daily grace'd by the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?
Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.
Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.
Must not that I thus suddenly proceed,
For what I will, I will, and there the end,
I am resolv'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentine in the emperor's court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go:
'Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.
Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:
Please you, deliberate a day or two.
[thee.
Ant. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after
No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go,
Come on, Pantano: you shall be employ'd
To hasten on his expedition.
[Exeunt Antonio and Pantano.
Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for fear of burning,
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
And, with the vantage of mine own excuse,
Hath he excepted most against my love.
'O! how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day,
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away.
Re-enter Pantano.
Pant. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:
He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go.
Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answers no.
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.
Val. Not mine; my gloves are 8 on.
Speed. Why then this may be yours, for this is but 8 one.
Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it's mine.—
Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine!
Ah Silvia! Silvia!
Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!
Val. How now, sirrah?
Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.
Val. Why, sir, where do you find her?
Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.
Val. Well, you'll still be too forward. [slow.
Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too
Val. Go to, sir. Tell me, do you know madam
Speed. She that your worship loves? [Silvia!
Val. Why, how now you that I am in love!
Speed. Marry, by these special marks. First, you have learn'd, like sir Proteus, to wrest your arms, like a mad-content; to relish a love song, like a robin-redbreast; to walk alone, like one that has't the pestilence; to sigh like a schoolboy that hath lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that hath buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes 1 diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak polite, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laugh'd, to crow like a cock; when you walk'd, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; and when you look'd sadly, it was for want of money; and now you are so metamorphos'd with a mistess, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.
Val. Are all these things perceived in me?
Speed. They are all perceived without ye.

*Little corrigence.—Reproach.—Reputation.—Break the matter to him.
Respects.—Sorted with, i. e., agreeable to.
Wonder.
Val. Without me? they cannot.
Seduc. Without you? say, that's certain; for, without you were so simple, none else would be: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the winter in an unripened, that not an eye that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your madly.
Val. But, tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?
Seduc. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?
Val. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.
Seduc. Why, sir, I know her not.
Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not.
Seduc. Is she not hard-favor'd, sir?
Val. Not so fair, boy, as well-favor'd.
Seduc. Sir, I know that well enough.
Val. What dost thou know?
Seduc. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well-favor'd.
Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but her favor infinite.
Seduc. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.
Val. How painted? and how out of count?
Seduc. Marry, sir, so painted to make her fair, that no man 'counts of her beauty.
Val. How esteem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.
Seduc. You never saw her since she was deform'd.
Val. How long hath she been deform'd?
Seduc. Ever since you loved her.
Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her, and still I see her beautiful.
Seduc. If you love her, you cannot see her.
Val. Why?
Seduc. Because love is blind. O! that you had made your own eyes, or your own eyes had had the lights they were wont to want, when you chid at sir Proteus for going ungartered!
Val. What should I see then?
Seduc. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity; for, being in love, could not see to garter his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.
Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.
Seduc. True, sir; I was in love with my bed. I thank you, you swinged me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.
Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.
Seduc. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.
Val. Last night she enjoin'd me to write some lines to one she loves.
Seduc. And have you?
Val. I have.
Seduc. And are they not lamely writ?
Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them.—Peace! here she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Seduc. O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! Now will he interpret to her. [rows.
Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good mor.
Seduc. O! give ye good even: here's a million of manners.
Aside.
Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.
Seduc. He should give her interest, and she gives it him.
Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter Unto the secret nameless friend of yours;
Which I was much unwilling to proceed in, But for my duty to your ladyship. [Giving a paper.
Sil. I thank you, gentle servant. 'Tis very clerkly done.
Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardy off; For, being ignorant to whom it goes, I writ at random, very doubtfully. [pains?
Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much. No, madam: so it 4 stand you, I will write, Please you command, a thousand times as much. And yet,—
Sil. A pretty period. Well, I guess the sequel: And yet I will not name it;—and yet I care not;—And yet take this again;—and yet I thank you, Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.
Seduc. And yet you will; and yet, another yet.
[Aside.
Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?
Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quire writ, But since unwillingly, take them again.
Nay, take them.
[Erasing.
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. That you writ them, sir, at my request, But I will none of them: they are for you.
I would have had them write more movingly.
Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.
Sil. And, when 'tis writ, for my sake read it over; And, if it please you, so; if not, why, so.
Val. If it please me, madam; what then?
Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labor: And so good-morrow, servant.
[Exit.
Seduc. O jest! unseen, inscrutable, invisible, As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. My master aces to her, and she hath taught her tuition, He being her pupil, to become her tutor, O excellent device! was there ever heard a better, That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir! what, are you reasoning with yourself?
Seduc. Nay, I was rhyming: 'tis you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?
Seduc. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Seduc. To yourself. Why, she woos you by a figure.
Val. What figure?
Seduc. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?
Seduc. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?
Val. No, believe me.
Seduc. No believing you, indeed, sir: but did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Seduc. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Seduc. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.
Val. I would it were no worse!
Seduc. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well: For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty, Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply; Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover, Her self hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.—
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it.— Why must you, sir? 'tis dinner time.

* Whipped.— Puppet-show.
 Scholarly. — 4 Serve; profit. — "There an end," i. e., there's the conclusion.— "In print," i. e., with exactness.

24 THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. ACT II.
SCENE II.—Verona. A Room in Julia’s House.

—— Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.

Jul. I must, where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia’s sake.1

Pro. Why then, we’ll make exchange: here, take this.

[Exchange rings.

Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy;
And when that hour e’erslaps me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake,
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance
Tornent me for my love’s forgetfulness.
My father stays my coming; answer not.
The tide is now; nay, not thy tide of tears;
That tide will stay me longer than I should.

[Exit Julia.

Julia, farewell.—What! gone without a word?
Ay, so true love should do; it cannot speak;
For truth hath better deeds, than words to grace it.

Enter Panthino.

Pant. Sir Proteus, you are stay’d for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come.—

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

—— Enter Launce, leading this Dog.

Launce. Nay, ’twill be this hour ere I have done weeping:
all the kind of the Launchees have this very fault.
I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Proteus to the imperial’s court. I think Crab, my dog, be the sourest-matured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father weeping, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat weeping her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear. He is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog; a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting: why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I’ll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father:—no, this left shoe is my father:—no, no, this left shoe is my mother:—nay, that cannot be so, neither:—yes, it is so, it is so; it bath the worser sole. This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on’t! there tis; now, sir, this staff is myself; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wren; this hat is Nun, our maid: I am the dog:—no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog. O! the dog is me, and I am myself: ay, so, so.

Now come I to my father; “Father, your blessing!”
now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping:
now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on.
Now come I to my mother, (O, that she could speak now!) like a wild woman:—well, I kiss her; why there tis; here’s my mother’s breath, up and down.
Now come I to my sister; mark the moon she makes: now, the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word, but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Panthino.

Pant. Launce, away, away, aboard: thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars. What’s the matter? why weepst thou, man? Away, ass; you’ll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce. It is no matter if the tide were lost; for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

Pant. What’s the unkindest tide?

Launce. Why, he that’s tied here; Crab, my dog.

Pant. Put, man, I mean thou’lt lose the flood, and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master; and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Launce. For fear thou shoulst lose thy tongue.

Pant. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launce. In thy tale.

Pant. In thy tail!

Launce. Lose the tied, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide. Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pant. Come; come, away, man: I was sent to call thee.

Launce. Sir, call me what thou dar’st.

Pant. Wilt thou go?

Launce. Well, I will go. [Exeunt.

—— Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant.—

Val. Mistress.—

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it’s for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress, then.

Speed. Twere good you knock’d him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thu. Seem you that you are not?

Val. & Haply, I do.

Thu. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thu. Who seem I that I am not?

Val. Wise.

Thu. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, ’twill double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, sir Thurio? do you change color?

Val. Give him leave, madam: he is a kind of cameleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Val. You have said, sir.

Thu. Ay, sir, and darest you, for this time. [begin.

Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. ’Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire.

SIR Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship’s looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

1 "The tied," i. e., the dog. — 2 Serious. — 3 Perhaps. — 4 Observe; note.
Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir; you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your fellows than their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more. Here comes my father.

Enter the Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father's in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord; I know the gentleman To be of wealth, and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves The honor and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well? Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy We have conversed, and spent our hours together; And though myself have been an idle truant, Omitting the sweet benefit of time To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection Yet hath sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days: His words were younger, but his experience old; His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe; And, in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow) He is complete in feature, and in mind, With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. b Bedrew me, sir, but, if he make this good, He is as worthy for an empress' love, As meet to be an emperor's counsellor.

Well, sir, this gentleman is come to me With commendation from great potentates; And here he means to spend his time a-while: I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he. Duke. Welcome him, then, according to his worth.

Silvia. I speak to you; and you, sir Thurio— For Valentine, I need not cite him to you. I'll send him hither to you presently. [Exeunt Duke.

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship, Had come along with me, but that his mistress Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks.

Sil. Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them, Upon some other pawn for fealty. [still.

Val. Nay, sure, I think, she holds them prisoners Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind, How could he see his way to seek you out? Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes. Thu. They say, that love hath not an eye at all. Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself: Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done. Here comes the gentleman. [Exeunt Thurio. Sil. Welcome, dear Proteus;—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favor. Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither, If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from. Val. Mistress, it is. Sweet lady, entertain him To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability— Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else. Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed. Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress. Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself. Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. That you are worthless.

Thu. Madam, my lord, your father, would speak with you.

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure: come, sir Thurio, Go with me,—Once more, new servant, welcome: I'll leave you to confer of house-affairs; When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Exeunt Silvia, Thurio, and Speed. Pro. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady, and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you: I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now: I have no balance for contemplating love; Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter faws, with penitential groans, With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs; For, in revenge of my contempt of love, Love hath chas'd sleep from my enthralled eyes, And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow. O, gentle Proteus! love's a mighty lord, And hath so humbled me, as, I confess, There is no wave to his correction, Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth! Now, no discourse, except it be of love; Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep, Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye. Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Ay, but and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No, but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O! flatter me, for love delights in praises.

Pro. When I was sick you gave me bitter pills, And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her: if not divine, Yet let thy love be a princellship, Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any, Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her, too: She shall be dignified with this high honor,— To bear thy lady's truest heart the base earth Should from her vesturo chance to steal a kiss, And, of so great a favor growing proud, Disdains to root the summer-smelling flower, And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this? Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing

1"No way to." "I d I, no misery that can be compared with.

2"To his service," i. e., compared with his service.

3"Principalship," i. e., an angel of the first order.
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing.
She is alone.

Pro. Then, let her alone.

Val. Not for the world. Why, man, she is mine own; And I as rich in having such a jewel, As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl, To wot no nectar, but the rocks pure gold. Forgive me, if I do not dream on thee, Because thou seest me dote upon my love. My foolish rival, that her father likes Only for his possessions are so huge, Is gone with her along, and I must after, For love, thou know'st it, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you? [marriage hour]

Val. Ay, and if mine own estate, that may, move, our With all the cunning manner of our flight Determin'd of: how I must climb her window, The ladder made of cords, and all the means Plotted, and 'greed on for my happiness, Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber, In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel. I have no time to consult thee now, but I must unto the road, to disembark

Some necessaries that I needs must use, And then I'll presently attend on you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will. [Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels, Or as one nail by strength drives out another, So the remembrance of my former love Is by a newer object quite forgotten. Is it mine own, or Valentine's praise, Her true perfection, or my false transgression, That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus? She's fair, and so is Julia that I love:— That I did love, for now my love is thine; Which, like a waxen image in a fire, Bears no impression of the thing it was. Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold, And love that him not, as I was wont: O! but I love his lady too, too much; And that's the reason I love him so little. How shall I date on her with more advice, That thus without advice begin to love her? 'Tis but a picture I have yet beheld, And that hath dazzled so my reason's light; But when I look on her perfections, There is no reason but I shall be blind. If I can check my erring love, I will; If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honest, welcome to Milan. Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never welcome till he be hang'd; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I'll to the alehouse with you presently; where for one shot of five pence thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they proved very fairly in the quarrel.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? Shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not. My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee; I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed. [One. Launce. Why, stand-under and under-stand is all. Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog: if he say ay, it will; if he say, no, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is, then, that it will. Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how I prize thee, I'm sure; my master is become a notable lover. Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

[To be. Launce. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistak't me. Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant thy master. Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover. Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love, if thou wilt go with me to the alehouse: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn? To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn? To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn: And even that power, which gave me first my oath, Provokest me to this threefold perjury: Love bad me swear, and love bids me forswear. O sweet-suggesting love! If I have sin'd, Teach me, how, and wherefore, to repent. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service.

a "Haven."—"With more advice," i.e., on further knowledge. "Her picture," i.e., her external form. "Her perfections," i.e., the perfections of her mind.

* "How say'st thou," i.e., what say'st thou to this circumstance?—"Tempting."—Coeur.
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia, as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself
Without some treachery used to Valentine.
This night, he meaneth with a corded ladder
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window;
Myself in counsel, his e'ener competitor.
Now, presently, I'll give her father notice
Of their disguising, and pretend it flight;
Who, all curr'd, will banish Valentine,
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter;
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me:

And, e'en in kind love, I do conjure thee,
Who art the table wherein my thoughts
Are visibly character'd and engrav'd,
To 2 lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honor, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Alas! the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To traverse the kingdoms with his feeble steps,
Much less shall she, that hath love's wings to fly:
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O! know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's Pity the dearth that I have pined in, [good
By longing for that food so long a time.
Dost thou but know the inky touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns.
The current flows, that with gentle murmurs glides.
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But, when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the candel'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overthaieth in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wide ocean.
Then, let me go, and hinder not my course.
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I'll rest, as, after much turmoil,
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men.
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseech some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:
To be untasteful, may become a mark
Of greater time than I shall show to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your brooches?

Jul. That fits as well, as 4 tell me, good my lord,

* Confedrate.— 4 Intended.— 4 Teach; instruct.— 4 Trouble.
* 4 Of greater time," i.e., of more pretension.

What compass will you wear your farthingale?
Why, even what fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta.

Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favor'd.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin,
Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lovest me, let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly.
But, tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unseid a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you think so, then stay at home, and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go,
If Proteus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone.
I fear me, he will scarce be pleas'd withal.

Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear.
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Luc. All these are good words to the many deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect;
But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth;
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His fears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

Jul. Now, as thou lovest me, do him not that wrong,
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love by loving him,
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my loving journey,
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation,
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come; answer not, but to it presently:
I am impatient of thy 2 tardiance. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile;
We have some secrets to confer about.— [Exit Thurio.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal;
But, when I call to mind your gracious favors
Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that,
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.
Know, worthy prince, sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:
Myself am one made privy to the plot.
I know you have determin'd to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stol'n away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Then, by concealing it, heap on your head

"Hope Petticoat. — Delay:
A pack of sorrow, which would press you down,
Being unprevented, to your spirit's grave.
Pray, take thee for thine honest care,
Which to requite, command me while I live.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply, when they have judg'd me fast asleep.
And oftentimes have purposed to forbid
Sir Valentine her company, and my court;
But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
(A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd)
I gave him gentle looks; thereby to find
That which myself last now disclosed to me.
And, that thou may'st perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devia'd a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently,
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my lord, to do it so conveniently,
That my discovery be not aim'd at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honor, he shall never know
That I had any flight from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord: sir Valentine is coming.
[Exit.

Enter Valentine, in his cloath.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?
Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter: stay with me awhile.
I am to break with thes of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurio, to my daughter.
Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honorable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities
Becoming such a wife as your fair daughter.
Cannot your grace win her to fancy him?

Duke. No, trust me: she is peacev, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me as if I were her father:
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers
Upon advice hath draw'd my love from her;
And, where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolv'd to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in:
Then, let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady in Milane here,
Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy,
And nought esteem my aged eloquence:
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
(For long agoe I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd)

How, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye:
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometime scornd what best contents
Send her another; never give her o'er,
For scorn at first makes after-love more.
If she dorown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you:
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone,
For why, the fools are mad, if left alone.
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say;
For "get you gone," she doth not mean, "away."
Flatter, and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Though ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke. But she I mean is promis'd by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth,
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Yon then I would resolve the matter by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd, and keys kept
That no man hath recourse to her by night. [safe,
Val. What lets, but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.

Val. Why then, a ladder squarely made of cords,
To cast up, with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero's tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.

Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for more, and, that he can not be,
By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But hark thee; I will go to her alone.
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length.

Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?

Val. Ay, my long cloak.

Duke. Then, let me see thy cloak:
I'll get me one of such another length.

Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?

Val. I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me,—via?

What letter is this same? What's here?

Love.

And here an engine fit for my proceeding:

If ladder and letter fall out.

I'll be so bold to break the seal for once.
[Reads.

"My thoughts do harbor with my Silvia nightly;
And slaves they are to me, that send them flying:
O! could their master come and go as lightly,
Himself would lodge, where senseless they are lying.
My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them;
While I, their king, that thither them impart,
Do curse the grace that with such grace hath hised?
Because myself do want my sovereign fortune,
Then, I curse myself, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbor where their lord should be.
What's here?

"Silvia, this night I will enframish thee;"
"Tis so; and here's the ladder for the purpose."

Why, Phaeton, (for thou art a Merops' son)

[Hinters. Ingeniously. Instrument.—"Thou art Merops' son," i.e., "Thou art Phaeton in thy rashness, but without his pretensions; thou art a low-born wretch, the issue of Merops, and not the son of a divinity."
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,
And with thy daring folly burn the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because thy shine on thee?
Go, be intruder; ever-weening slave:
Beastly thy fawning smiles on equal mates,
And think my patience, more than thy desert,
Is privilege for thy departure hence.
Thank me for this, more than for all the favors
Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee:
But if thou linger in my territories
Longer than swiftest expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royal court,
By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thyself.
Begone; I will not hear thy vain excuse;
But, as thou livest thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit Duke.]

Val. And why not death, rather than living too
To die is to be banish'd from myself,
And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her,
Is self from self; a deadly banishment.
What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be, to think that she is by,
And feed upon the superstition of perfection.
Except I be by Silvia in the nightingale;
There is no music in the nightingale;
Unless I look on Silvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumined, cherished, kept alive.
I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom:
Tarry I here, but attend on death;
But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Proteus and Launce.

Pro. Run, boy; run, run, and seek him out.
Launc. So-ho! so-ho!
Pro. What seekest thou?
Launc. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on's head, but 'tis a Valentine.
Pro. Valentine?
Val. No.
Pro. Who then? his spirit?
Val. Neither.
Pro. What then?
Val. Nothing.
Launc. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike?
Pro. Whom wouldst thou strike?
Launc. Nothing.
Pro. Villain, forbear.
Launc. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,— Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear.—Friend Valentine, a word.
Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good
So much of bad already hath possess'd them.
Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, unmeaning, and bad.
Val. Is Silvia dead?
Pro. No. Valentine.
Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!—
Hast thou forsworn me?
Pro. No, Valentine.
Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!—
What is your news?
Launc. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are advis'd.
Pro. That thou art advis'd: O! that is the news,
From hence, from Silvia, and from me, thy friend.
Val. O! I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me surfeit.
Dost Silvia know that I am banish'd?
Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom,
(Which, unrever'd, stands in effectual force)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd,
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became
As if but now they waxed pale for woe: [them,
But not her headed knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire,
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.
Besides, her intercession char'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of killing there.
Val. No more; unless the next word that thou speak'st
Have some malignant power upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless dolor.
Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
And study help for that which thou lamentest.
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts.
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence;
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.
The time now serves not to express:
Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate,
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love affairs.
As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me.
Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate.
Val. O my dear Silvia! hapless Valentine!
[Exeunt Valentine and Proteus.]

Launc. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I have
The wit to think, my master is a kind of a knave;
But that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not now, that knows me to be in love: yet am I love; but of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milk-maid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had sopisses: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualitie than a water-spaniel, which is much in a bare Christian. Here's the cat-log [pulling out a paper] of her conditions. Imprimis, 'She can fetch and carry.'
Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore, is she better than a jade. Item, 'She can milk';
look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Srep. How now, signior Launce? what news with your master ship?

Launc. With my master's ship? why, it is at sea.

Srep. Well, your old vice still; mistake the word.

What news, then, in your paper?

Launc. The blackest news that ever thonheard'st.

* Cones.—"To fly," i.e., by flying—a Gallicism.

6 Recall.—Grief.—Women ancientsly had a pocket in the fore part of their stays, in which they carried not only love-letters and love-tokens, but even their money. —"But one knave," i.e., not a double knave.—"Gossip," talking women who attend accompaniments.
SCENE II. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Speed. Why, man, how black?
Launce. Why, as black as ink.
Speed. Let me read them. [read.
Launce. Pie on! thou head! thou canst not Speed. Thou liest, I can. [thick?
Launce. I will try thee. Tell me this: who begot
Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.
Launce. O, illiterate hither! it was the son of thy grandmother. This proves that thou canst not read.
Speed. Come, food, come: try me in thy paper.
Launce. Then and thin Nicholas his thy speed?
Speed. Imprimis, "She can milk."
Launce. Ay, that she can.
Speed. Item, "She brews good ale."
Launce. And thereof comes the proverb,—Blessing of thy heart, you brew good ale.
Speed. Item, "She can sew."
Launce. That's as much as to say, Can she so?
Speed. Item, "She can knit."
Launce. What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock?
Speed. Item, "She can wash and scour."
Launce. A special virtue; for then she need not be wash'd and scour'd.
Speed. Item, "She can spin."
Launce. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.
Speed. Item, "She hath many nameless virtues."
Launce. That's as much as to say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.
Speed. Here follow her vices.
Launce. Close at the heels of her virtues.
Speed. Item, "She is not to be kissed fastening, in respect of her breath."
Launce. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.
Speed. Item, "She hath a sweet mouth."
Launce. That makes amends for her sour breath.
Speed. Item, "She doth talk in her sleep."
Launce. That's no matter for that; so she 1 slip not in her talk.
Speed. Item, "She is slow in words."
Launce. O villain! that set this down among her vices? To be slow in words is a woman's only virtu: I pray thee, out with't, and place it for her chief virtue.
Speed. Item, "She is proud."
Launce. Withal that too: it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be taken from her.
Speed. Item, "She hath no teeth."
Launce. I care not for that neither, because I love crust.
Speed. Item, "She is curst." [bite.
Launce. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to Speed. Item, "She will often praise her liquor."
Launce. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will: for good things should be praised.
Speed. Item, "She is too liberal."
Launce. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not, for that I'll keep shut: now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well, proceed.
Speed. Item, "She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wisdom than faults."
Launce. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article.
Rehearse that once more.
Speed. Item, "She hath more hair than wit,"— Launce. More hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: she cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt: the hair, that covers the wit, is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less. What's next?
Speed. —"And more faults than hairs,"—
Launce. That's monstrous: O, that that were out!
Speed. —"And more wealth than faults," Launce. Why, that word makes the faults gracious. Well, I'll have her; and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible,— Speed. What then?
Launce. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north-gate.
Speed. For me?
Launce. For thee? ay; who art thou? he hath stay'd for a better man than thee.
Speed. And must I go to him?
Launce. Thou must run to him, for thou hast stay'd so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.
Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? pos of your love-letters. [Exit, running.
Launce. Now will he be away for reading my letter. An unmanfully slave, that will thrust himself into secrets.—I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction.
[Exit.

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight. [you,
Thu. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and mild'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her.
Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

Enter Proteus.

How now, sir Proteus! Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?
Pro. Gone, my good lord.
Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.
Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.
Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.
Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou hast shown 'sure sign of good desert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.
Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace,
Let me not live to look upon your grace.
Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect
The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.
Pro. I do, my lord.
Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes her against my will.
Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.
Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseveres so.
What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?
Pro. The best way is, to shun Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things that women highly hold in hate.
Duke. Ay, but she thinks that it is spoke in hate.
Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:
Therefore, it must, with circumstance, be spoken
By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.
Duke. Then, you must undertake to shun him.
Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:

* Graceful. — Whipped. — Curved. — With circumstance, i.e., with incident particulars.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

ACT IV.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest, between Milan and Verona.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Val. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose. A man I am cross'd with adversity: My riches are the pox of my habitments, Of which if you should here disfurnish me, You take the sum and substance that I have.

Spe. Whither travel you?

Val. To Verona.

Spe. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan.

Val. Have you long sojourn'd there? [stay'd,

Spe. Some sixteen months; and longer might have

If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

Val. What! were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was.

Spe. For what offence?

Val. For that which now tormenteth me to rehearse.

I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;

But yet I slew him manfully, in fight.

Within the false name of me, or base scribbery.

1. Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so.

But were you banish'd for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

Or else I had been often miserable.

2. Out. The hero from the scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar,

This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1. Out. We'll have him. Sirs, a word.

[They talk apart.

Speed. Master, be one of them:

It is an honorable kind of thievry.

Val. Peace, villain!

2. Out. We'll tell you this: have you any thing to take to?

Val. Nothing, but my fortune.

3. Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,

Such as the fury of ungodly youth

Thrust from the company of p'awful men:

Myself was from Verona banish'd,

For practising to steal away a lady,

An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

2. Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman, Who, in my 20, I stabb'd unto the heart.

1. Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these,

But to the purpose; for we cite our faults,

That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives:

And, partly, seeing you are beautify'd

With goodly shape; and by your own report

A linguist, and a man of such perfection,

As we do in our equality much want—

2. Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,

Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you.

Are you content to be our general?

To make a virtue of necessity,

And live, as we do, in this wilderness? [sort?

3. Out. What say'st thou? wilt thou be of our con-

Say, and be the captain of us all.

We'll do thee homage, and be rival'd by thee,

Love thee as our commander, and our king.

1. Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest

1 Comely; well-proportioned. — 8 Garments. — 8 Have you the tongues? i.e. Do you speak various languages? — 9 Fat fryer," i.e. Friar Tuck — 10 Reverend; worshipful. — 11 Anger; rage. — 12 Professions; occupation.
Scene II.—Milan. The Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine, and now I must be as unjust to Thurio. Under the color of commanding him, I have access my own love to prefer; But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy, To be corrupted with my worthless gifts. When I protest true loyalty to her, She twits me with my falsehood to my friend; When to her beauty I commend my vows, She bids me think how I have been forsworn, In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd: And, notwithstanding all her sudden quips, The least whereof would quell a lover's hope, Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love, The more it grows, and fawneth on her still. But here comes Thurio. Now must we to her window, And give some evening music to her ears.

Enter Thurio, and Musicians.

Enter Host and Julia (in boy's clothes), behind. Host. Now, my young guest; methinks you're ally-cholly: I pray you, why is it? Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry. Host. Come, we'll have you merry. I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.

Jul. That will be music. [Music plays.

Host. Hark! Hark! Jul. Is he among these? Host. Ay; but peace! let's hear 'em.

Song.

Who is Silvia? what is she, That all our sons now commend her? Holy, fair, and wise as free: The heaven such grace did lend her, That she might admired be.

Is she kind, as she is fair, For beauty lives with kindness? Love doth to her eyes repair, To help him of his blindness; And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing, That Silvia is excelling; She excels each mortal thing.

Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you sudder than you were before? How do you, man! the music likes you not. Jul. You mistake: the musician likes me not. Host. Why, my pretty youth! Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. You have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay! I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive, you delight not in music. Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so. [Music plays again. Host. Hark! what fine change is in the music. Jul. Ay, that change is the spite. Host. You would not have them always play but one thing?

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing. But, Host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on, Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what, Luaince, his man, told me, he loved her out of all nickel.
Jul. Where is Luaince?

Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Jul. Peace! stand aside: the company parts. Pro. Sir Thurio, fear you not: I will so plead, That you shall say my cunning drift excels.

Thy. Where meet we?

Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.

Thy. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above, at her window. Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen. Who is that, that spake?

Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth, You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What is your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this, That presently you bide you home to bed. Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man! Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceited, To be seduced by thy flattery, That hast deceiv'd so many with thy vows? Return, return, and make thy love amends. For me, by this pale queen of night I swear, I am so far from granting thy request, That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit, And by and by intend to chide myself, Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady; But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside.] Twere false, if I should speak it; For, I am sure, she is not buried.
Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend, Survives, to whom thyself art witness I am betroth'd; and art thou not asham'd To wrong him with thy importunity?

Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave, Assure thyself, my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me rattle it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her's thence;

*"Out of all nick," i. e., beyond all reckoning, or count. Reckonings were kept by hosts upon nicked or notched sticks or tallies.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

ACT IV.

If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your griefs,
And the most true affections that you bear;
Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd,
I give consent to go along with you;
Rocking as little what betidest me,
As much I wish all good be'tune you.
When will you go?

Sil. This evening coming.

Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At friar Patrick's cell,
Where I intend holy confession.

Egl. I will not fail your ladyship. Good morrow, gentle lady.

Sil. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter Launce with his dog.

Launce. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought me, a puppy one that I saved from drowning, when the lady of four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him as a present to mistress Silvia from my master, and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber, but he steps me to her trenched, and steals her capon's leg. O! 'tis a foul thing; when a man cannot keep himself in all companies. I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily, he had been hang'd for't; sure as I live, he had suffered for't. You shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs under the duke's table: he had not been there (bless the mark) a passing while, but all the chamber smelt him. "Out with the dog!" says one; "what cur is that?" says another; "whipping him out," says the third; "hang him up," says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: "Friend," quoth I; "do you mean to whip the dog?" he says, "marry, do I," quoth he. "You do him the more wrong," quoth I; "twas I did the thing you wot of." He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn I have set in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for geese he hath kill'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't: thou think'st not of this now. — Nay, I remember the trick you served me, when I took my leave of madam Silvia. Did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? Didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Jul. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well,
And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please: I will do what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt. — How, now, you whoreson peasant?

Whence have you been these two days lodging?

Launce. Marry, sir, I carried mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

*Gricks., Caring., Restrains., Hoop petticoat. —

*By my halidom, I, e., by my faith. —

Injunction; command. — Compassionate. —

Upon whose grave thou vouch'dst pure chastity. It was the custom in former times for widowers and widows to make vows of chastity, in honor of their deceased wives or husbands. —
Scene IV.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Pro. And what says she to my little jewel?

Launce. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and tell you, curish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiv’d my dog?

Launce. No, indeed, did she not. Here have I brought him back again.

Pro. What! didst thou offer her this 1 cur from me?

Launce. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by a hangman boy in the market-place; and then I offer’d her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go; get thee hence, and find my dog again, Or ne’er return again into my sight.

Away, I say! Stayest thou to vex me here?

A slave that still an 2 end turns me to shame.

[Exit Launce.

Sebastian, I have entertained thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For ’tis no trusting to you foolish love;
But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behavior,
Which (if my augury deceive me not)
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore, know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee:
Deliver it to madam Silvia.

She lov’d me well deliver’d it to me.

Jul. It seems, you lov’d not her, to leave her token.

She’s dead, belike?

Pro. Not so: I think she, lives.

Jul. Alas!

Pro. Why dost thou cry alas?

Jul. I cannot choose but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?

Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov’d you as well As you do to your lady Silvia.

She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;

You dote on her, that cares not for your love.

’Tis pity, love should be so contrary,

And thinking on it makes you cry alas!

Pro. Well, give to her that ring; and therewithal
This letter—that’s her chamber. Tell my lady
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.

Your message done, hee home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary.

[Exit Jul.

How many women would do such a message?

Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain’d
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.

Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him,

That with his very heart despiest me?

Because he loves her, he despises me;

Because I love him, I must pity him.

This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will,
And now am I (unhappy messenger!)
To plead for that which I would not obtain;

To carry that which I would have refus’d;

To praise his faith which I would have disprais’d.

I am my master’s true confirmed love,
But cannot be true servant to my master;

Unless I prove false traitor to myself.

Yet will I woo for him; but yet so coldly,

As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

[Enter Silvia, attended.

Silv. What would you with her, if that I be she?

Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.

* Still an end, i.e. perpetually; generally.  Requiesce; reign.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. An Abbey.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky,
And now it is about the very hour,
That Silvia at friar Patrick's cell should meet me.
She will not fail; for lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

See, where she comes.—Lady, a happy evening.

Sil. Amen, amen. Go on, good Eglamour,
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall.
I fear, I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter ThUDIO, Proteus, and JULIA.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
Pro. O, sir! I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.
Thu. What! that my leg is too long?
Pro. No, that it is too little.
Thu. I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.
Jul. But love will not be spared to what it loathes. [Aside.

Thu. What says she to my face?
Pro. She says it is a fair one.
Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies: my face is black.
Pro. But pearls are fair, and the old saying is,
Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eyes.
Jul. 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes;
For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside.
Thu. How likes she my discourse?
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any.
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O! that thou dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion too long tenanted,
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was.
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia!
Then gentle nymph, cherish thy dear swain—
What halloing, and what stir, is this to-day?

These my rude mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
They love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's there comes here?

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service having done for you,
(Though you respect not aught your servant doth)
To hazard life, and rescue you from him,
That would have forc'd your hand, and your love,
Vouchsafe me, for my need, but one fair look.
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this, I see, and hear!
Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.
Sil. O, miserable! unhappy that I am.
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.
Jul. And me, when he approacheth to thy presence.

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.
O, heaven! be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I do detest false, perjuri'd Proteus:
Therefore be gone: soliciit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look.
O! this is the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot find where 'tis belov'd.
Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd.
Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou dost two,
And that's far worse than none: better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one.
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!

Pro. In love
Who respects friend?

Sil. All men but Proteus.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arm's end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love: force you.
Sil. O heaven!

Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. 'Tis coming forward.] Raffian, let go that rude
Thou friend of an ill fashion! [uncivil touch;
Pro. Valentine! [love;
Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or (For such is a friend now) treacherous man!

*To "record" anciently signified to sing.—4 [Dear.—"Approved," i. e., confirmed by proof.

Thou hast beguil'd my hopes: nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me. Now? dared I to say,
I have one friend alive, thou wouldst disprove me.
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjuri'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deepest. O time most accurate!
'Mongst all thy foes a friend should be the worst!
Pro. My shame and a desperate guilt at once confound me.—
Forgive me, Valentine. If heartily sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender 't here: I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.
Val. Then, I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pens'd:
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd.
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Jul. O me unhappy!
Pro. Look to the boy.
Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! what's the matter? look up; speak.
Jul. O good sir! my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here, sir; this is it. [Gives a ring.
Pro. How! let me see.

This is the ring I gave to Julia.
Val. O! cry you mercy, sir; I hope mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Shows another
Pro. But, how cam'st thou by this ring? [ring.
At my depart I gave this unto Julia.
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it thither.

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root!
O Proteus! let this habit make thee blush:
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment; if shame live in a disguise of love,
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.
Pro. Than men their minds: 'tis true. O heaven!
were man
But constant, he were perfect: that one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all the Inconstancy falls off, e'er it begins.
[aims
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?
Val. Come, come, a hand from either.
Let me be blest to make this happy close:
'Twore pity two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.
Jul. And I mine.

Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thurio.

Out. A prize! a prize! a prize! [Duke,—
Val. Forswear; forswear, I say; it is my lord the
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd, Banished Valentia.

Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thur. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death.
Come not within the measure of my wrath:
4 [Her that gave aim, i. e., that was the mark.—4 "The root," i. e., of her heart.
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milano shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch.
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.
Thou, Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I.
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such a means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honor of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs, Cancel all grudge,
repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrival'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe.—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd:
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast describ'd her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me
I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake, [happy.
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

*Duke. I grant it for thine own, whate'er it be.
Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile,
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord. [thee:
Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them, and Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
Come; let us go: we will conclude all jurs
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.
Val. And as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this stripling boy, my lord?
Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him: he blushes.
Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.
Duke. What mean you by that saying, Valentine?
Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned.—
Come, Proteus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your love's discoverer:
Our day of marriage shall be yours no less;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.]

*Pageants.

SCENE, Windsor; and the Parts adjacent.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slender. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and coroner.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and cust-alorum.

Slender. Ay, and rotalorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigero; in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigero.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

— Sir was a title formerly applied to priests and curates.

* Cust-alorum, a corruption of custos rotalorum. — Armigero — esquire.

1. Done, i.e., all the Shallows have done.

Shal. All his successors, gone before him, luth don't; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white luces in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Eva. The dozen white luces do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Eva. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Shal. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Eva. It is marrying, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva. Yes, per-lady: if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures. But that is all one: if sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

* [Apassant, i.e., by the way.—The court of Star-chamber.
Eva. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of God in a riot. The council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of God, and not to hear a riot: take your \textit{viz.} vizards in that.

Shal. Ha! o’ my life, if I were young again the sword should end it.

Eva. It is fitter that friends is the sword, and end it: and there is also another device in my prain, which, peradventure, brings good discretion with it. There is Anne Page, which is daughter to master Gabriel Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slen. Mistress Anne Page! She has brown hair, and speaks \textit{b} small, like a woman.

Eva. It is that ferry person for all the ord; as just as you will desire, and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandisire, upon his death’s-bed (Got deliver to a joyful resurrection) give, when she is able to overtake seventeene years old. It was a good motion, if we leave our pribilles and prabbles, and desire a marriage between master Abraham, and mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Did her grandisire leave her seven hundred pound?

Eva. Ay, and her father is make her a petter paige.

Slen. I know the young gentlewoman: she has good gifts.

Eva. Seven hundred pounds, and \textit{possibilities}, is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page. Is Falstaff there?

Eva. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or, as I despise one that is one true not. The knight, sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for master Page. [Knocks.] What, hon! Got pless your house here!

Page. Who’s there?

Eva. Here is God’s plessing, and your friend, and justice Shallock; and here young master Slenor, that, peradventures, shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

\textit{2 Enter Page.}

Page. I am glad to see your worshipes well. I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Eva. My Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good do it your good heart. I wish’d your venison better; it was ill kill’d.—How doth good mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la; with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you,

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slenor. How does your fellow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was outrun on \textit{cotswold.}\footnote{\textit{Cotswold Hills}, in Gloucestershire.}

Page. It could not be \textit{judg’d}, sir.

Slen. You’ll not confess, you’ll not confess.

Shal. That he will not;—’tis your fault, ’tis your fault.—’Tis a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, be a good dog, and a fair dog; can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong’d me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess’d, it is not redress’d: is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong’d me; indeed, he hath—at a word, he hath;—believe me:—Robert Shallow, esquire, saith he is wrong’d.

Page. Here comes sir John.

\textit{Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.}

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you’ll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have benten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss’d your keeper’s daughter.

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Pistol. I will answer it straight:—I have done all this.—That is now answered.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. Twere better for you, if it were known in council: you’ll be laughed at.

Eva. \textit{Pauca verba}, sir John; good words.

Fal. Good \textit{words}? good cabbage.—Slenor, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Pistol. Bard. You Banbury \textit{cheese}!

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pistol. How now, \textit{Mephostophilus}?

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym, Slenor, I say! \textit{panca, panca; slice}! that’s my humour.

Slen. Where’s Simple, my man i.—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace! I pray you. Now let us understand: there is three uprises in this matter, as I understand; that is—master Page, \textit{fidelect}, master Page; and there is myself, \textit{fidelect}, myself; and the third party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter. Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Fery goot: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards ‘eck upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pistol. He hears with ears.

Fal. Thee, thee, little devil and thy tam! what phrase is this?

Fal. He hears with ear? Why, it is affections.

Pistol. Falstaff, did you pick master Slenor’s purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else) of seven groats in \textit{mill-sixpences}, and two Edward \textit{shovel-board}, that cost me two shilling and twopence a-piece of Yed Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Falstaff. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pistol. Hm, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this \textit{latten bilbo}:

Word of denial in thy \textit{labras} here;

Word of denial! froth and scum, thou liest.

Shal. By these gloves, then twas he.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humors. I will say, “merry trap,” with you, if you run the \textit{notebook}’s humor on me; that is the very note of it.

\textit{Worts} was the ancient term for all the cabbage kind.—\textit{i.e.}, Cabbage.—\textit{Shall}: An allusion to the thin carcases of Slenor.—\textit{Nine}: The name of a familiar spirit in the old story-book of Faustus.—\textit{Few words}.—\textit{Mill-sixpences} were used as covenants to cast up money.—\textit{The great shillingings of Edward the Sixth}, used in the game of shattle-board.—\textit{Latten bilbo}., i.e., brass sword-blade.—\textit{Word of denial in thy labras}, i.e., the lie in thy teeth.—\textit{If you run the notebook’s humor on me}, i.e., if you try to bring me to justice.

Page. How now, mistress Ford!
Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress.  [Kissing her.]
Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome.  [Come, we have a hot venison paste to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.  [Exit all but Shallow, Slen, and Evans.]
Slen. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of songs and sonnets here.—

 Enter Simple.

How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the book of riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?
Slen. Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz; marry, this, coz: there is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir Hugh here: do you understand me?
Slen. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable: if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

Shal. Nay, but understand me.
Slen. So I do, coz.
Eva. Give ear to his motions, master Slen. I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says, I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

eva. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.
Slen. Ay, there's the point, sir.
Eva. Marry, is it, the very point of it; to mistress Anne Page.
Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Eva. But can you affection the 'oman? Let us demand to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is 'parcel of the mouth; therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?
Shal. Cousin Abraham Slen, can you love her?
Slen. I hope, sir, I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.

1 In allusion to Bardolph's red face.—Drunk. — i. e., Ran the charge—a military phrase. — Allhallowmas (Nov. 1st) is nearly five weeks after Michaelmas (Sept. 29). This is probably an intentional blunder. — Proposal. — Part.

Eva. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies, you must speak 'p'racically, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?
Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Eva. Nay, conceal me, conceal me, sweet coz: what I do, is to please you, coz. Can you love the maid?

Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another. I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, 'merry her,' I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and absolutely.

Eva. It is a fever discretion answer; save, the fault is in the 'ort dissolutely: the 'ort, is according to our meaning, resolution.—His meaning is good.

Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.
Slen. Ay, or else I would me be hanged, la.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Shal. Here comes fair mistress Anne.—Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne!
Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.
Shal. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.

Eva. Od's pleased will! I will not be absence at the grace.  [Exit Shallow and Evans.]
Anne. Will't please your worship to come in, sir?
Slen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.
Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.
Slen. I am not a-langry, I thank you, forsooth. — Go, sirrah, you are my man, go wait upon my cousin Shallow.  [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometime may be beholding to his friend for a man. —I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead; but what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.
Anne. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit, till you come.
Slen. I'faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.

Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.
Slen. I had rather walk here, I thank you. I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a 2 master of fence, (three 'vencys for a dish of stewed prunes) and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? I be there bears! the town?

[ Dogs bark. Anne. I think, there are, sir; I heard them talked of.
Slen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?
Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.
Slen. That's meat and drink to me, now: I have seen 3 Sackerson loose, twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd: but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill- favored rough things.

Re-enter Page.

Page. Come, gentle master Slen, come; we stay for you.

Slen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.
SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Ev. Go your ways, and ask of doctor Cains' house, which is the way; and there dwells one mistress quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his h'andy washer, and his wringer.

Sim. Well, sir.

Ev. Nay, it is better yet.—Give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, be gone. I will make an end of my dinner: there's pippins and cheese to come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter!

Host. What says my bully-rook? Speak scholarly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Disceard, bully Hercules; canister: let them way; trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a-week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, c'Kesar, and Pleasur. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap; said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow.—Let me see thee 4 froth, and lime: I am at a word; follow.

[Exeunt Host and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster. Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desired. I will thrive.

[Exeunt Bardolph.

Pist. O base Gunterian wight! wilt thou the spigot wold?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: is not the humor conceived! His mind is not heroic, and there's the humor of it.

Fal. I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box; his thefts were too open; his fiching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.

Nym. The good humor is to steal at a 2 minim's rest.

Pist. Convoy, the wise it call. Steal! foh! a fico for the phrase!

Fal. Well, siris, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let & kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must coney-catch, I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pist. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lad, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

Fal. I've got now, Pistol. Indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she 2 craves, she gives the hear of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behavior, to be Englished rightly, is, "I am sir John Falstaff's."

Pist. I thank thee, sirrah, for that will, and translated her so well; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humor pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain, and "To her, boy," say I.

Nym. The humor rises; it is good: humor me the angels.

Fal. I have write me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious 2 culliards: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did she run on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humor.

Fal. O! she did so course 0'er my extremities with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorched me up like a burning glass. Here's another letter to her: she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and 6 beauty. I will be 8 cheater to them both, and they shall be cheaters to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear them this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford. We will thrive, inds, we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I sir Pandarus of Troy become, And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!

Nym. I will run no base humor: here, take the humor-letter. I will keep the behavior of reputation.

Pist. Hold, sirrah, [to Robin] bear you these letters 8 high.

Sail like my 8 pinasse to these golden shores.—
Rogues, hence! avant! vanish like hailstones go, Trudge, plod away o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack! Falstaff will learn the humor of 2 the age.

French thrift, you rogues; myself, and skirted page.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Robin.

Pist. Let volutes grip thy guts! for gourd, and 9 gourd holds, And high and low beguile the rich and poor.

Test. I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack, Base Phrygian Turk.

Nym. I have operations, which be humors of revenge.

Pist. Wilt thou revenge?

Nym. By welkin, and her 8 stars.

Pist. With wit, or steel?

Nym. With both the humors, I:

I will discuss the humor of this love to Page.

Pist. And I to Ford shall 8cke unfold, How Falstaff, varlet vile, Nym. I ken the wight," i.e., I know the fellow, — Taunts.—

"Angel" was the name of a coin formerly current in England, bearing the figure of an angel.—"Drill" was a word used to designate a large one.—"Gourd" and "llumen" were contemporary terms for false dice.—"Testor I'll have in pouch, i.e., sixpence I'll have in pocket. —Likewise.
His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch doth glide.

Nym. Your humor shall not cool: I will *incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with byewolliness, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humor.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I second thee; troop on. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Caius's House.

Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and John Rugby.

Quick. What, John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, master doctor Caius, coming: if he do, I'faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I' ll go watch. [Exit Rugby.

Quick. Go; and we' ll have a posset for' st soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.—An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house within; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no *breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something *pervious that way, but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And master Slender's your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a *Cain-colored beard.

Quick. A *softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth; but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head: he hath fought with a *warrence.

Quick. How say you?—O! I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby, running.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be s'ent. Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long.—What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my master; [Exit Rugby.] I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home:—"and down, down, down-a-us," &c. [Sings.}

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys. Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet un boiter verd; a box, a green-a box; do intend vat I speak? a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I'll fetch it you. [Aside.] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud.
Je m'en vois à la cour,—la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Caius. Oui; mette le au mon pocket; dépêche, quickly.—Vere is dat knave Rugby? Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir. [Enter Rugby.

Caius. You is John Rugby, and you is Jack Rugby: come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to do count.

Rug. 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my troth, I tarry too long.—O'd me! Qu' est-ce foudroyé? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I vill not for the vorld I shall leave behind.

Quick. [Aside.] Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad.

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—

Caius. Verefore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall the honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic. Hear the truth of it: he came of an ermand to me from parson Hugh.

Caius. Well.

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Pence-a your tongue!—Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, in; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, bailles me some paper: tarry you a petit-a while. [ Writes. ]

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so manchoy.—But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no, is the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wirng, brew, bake, scorr, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge! and to be up early and down late; but notwithstanding, to tell you in your ear, (I would have none of it,) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind; that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape, give-a dis letter to sir Hugh. By gar, it is a challenge: I'll cut his trout in de park; and I will teach a scruvy jack'nape priest to meddle or make.—You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog.

[ Exit Simple. ]

Quick. Ains! he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter for dat:—do not you tell-a me, dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine Host of de Jarrétére to measure our weapon. By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the a good year!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me.—By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door.—Follow my heels, Rugby.

[ Exeunt Caius and Rugby. ]

Quick. You shall have An fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company.—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the next court for the putting down of fat men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll not believe that: I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary. O, mistress Page! give me some counsel.

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman! if it were not for one tripping respect, I could come to such honor.

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honor. What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What?—thou liest.—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will knock; and so, thou shouldest not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light;—here, read; [Giving a letter] perceive how I might be knighted. [Mrs. Page reads]—I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: and yet he would not swear, praised women's modesty, and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together, than the hundredth psalm to the tune of "Green Sleeves." What tempest, I trow, threw this whale, with so many tunns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think, the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs.—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, nine never shall. I warrant, he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more) and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two: I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted with; for, sure, unless he know some stain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

\[Footnotes:
* Fent. [Within.] Who's within there, ho!

Quick. Who's there, I trow? Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Ford.

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou? Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne? Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you. Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale. —Good faith, it is sure, very fair; but, I verily think, as honest maid as ever broke bread:—we had an hour's talk of that wart.—I shall never laugh but in that maid's company;—but, indeed, she is given too much to "alibechly and musing. But for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will it? truth, that I will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other wooers.

Fent. Well, farewell: I am in great haste now.

[Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not, for I know Anne's mind as well as another does.—Out upon't! what have I forgot?

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter.

Mrs. Page. What! have I 'scape-dove love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see.

"Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I: go to then, there's sympathy. You are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then, there's more sympathy: you love mock, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me, Thine own true knight, By day or night, Or any kind of light, With all his might, For thee to fight. JOHN FALSTAFF." What a Herod of Jewry is this!—O wicked, wicked, world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behavior hath this Flemish drunkard

Mrs. Ford. Boarding call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him: let's appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villainy against him, that may not sully the *chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too: he's so far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pist. Hope it be a *curtail dog in some affairs; Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He woos both high and low, both rich and poor. Both young and old, one with another. Ford, he loves the *gaily-maury: Ford, 'perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Pist. With lively burning hot: prevent, or go thou, like Sir Acteon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels. O! odious is the name.

Ford. What name, sir?

Pist. The horn, I say. Farewell: [night: Take heed; have open eye, for thieves do foot by Toke heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds do Away, sir corporal Nym. —] [Sing: —

Nym. Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit Pistol.]

Ford. I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. And this is true; [to Page.] I like not the humor of lying. He hath wronged me in some humors: I should have borne the humored letter to her, but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and the long. My name is corporal Nym: I speak, and I avouch 'tis true: — my name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife. — Adieu. I love not the humor of bread and cheese. Adieu. [Exit Nym.]

Page. The humor of it, quoth 'a! here's a fellow frights English out of his wits.

Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.

Page. I never heard such a *dawdling-affecting rogue.

Ford. If I do find it, well.

Page. I will not believe such a *Catalan, though the priest o' the town commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good scambale follow: well.

Page. How now, Meg!

Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy. — Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. 'Faith, thou hast some crotchetts in thy head now. — Will you go, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you. — You'll come to dinner, George? — [Aside to Mrs. Ford.] Look, who comes yonder: she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit. Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see: we have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.]

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes; and you heard what the other told me.

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, slaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him, in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that. — Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident: I would have nothing lie on my head. I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look, where my ranting Host of the Garter comes. There is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily. — How now, mine host!

[Enter Host.]

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou'rt a gentleman. Cavalirojustice, I say.

3 Enter Shal.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow. — Good even, and twenty, good master Page. Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand. — Host. Tell him, cavaliro-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between sir Hugh, the Welsh priest, and Cains, the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine Host o' the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, my bully-rook? — [They go aside.]

Shal. Will you [to Page] go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weeps and, I think, hath appointed them contrary places; for, believe me, I hear, the parson is no jest. — Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Host thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier. — Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a *pottle of burnt sack to give me courteous to him, and tell him, my name is Brook; only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have egress and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight. — Will you *go on here?

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir! I could have told you more: in

* Four pints.
Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir—I pray, come a little nearer this ways.—I myself dwell with master doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on: Mistress Ford, you say,—

Quick. Your worship says very true:—I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears:—mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? Heaven bless them, and make them his servants!

Fal. Well: Mistress Ford,—what of her?

Quick. Why sir, she's a good creature. Lord, lord! your worship's a wanent: well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford,—come, mistress Ford,—

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it. You have brought her into such a cannyem, as 'tis wonderful: the best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canny; yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such a alligrant touch! In such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart, and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myself twenty angels given me of a morning; but I defy all angels, (in any such sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty:—

and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there have been words, say, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercury.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you a wart of: master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Abs! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealous man; she leads a very a rampold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven.—Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship: mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too;—and let me tell you in your ear, she's a fartuous a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning or evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who'er be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man: surely, I think you have charms, ha; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the atraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for it!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed!—they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed. But mistress Page would desire you to send her

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Scene II.

Your little page, of all loves; her husband has a malignant infection to the little page; and, truly, Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and, truly, she deserves it, for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so, then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a hayword, that you may know one other's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well: commend me to them both.

There's my purse; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—This news, I am sure,

[Exit Mrs. Quickly and Robin.

Fal. This 'punk is one of Cupid's carriers.—
Chap on more sail; pursue, up with your 'lights:
Give fire! She is my prize, or ocean where she all!

[Exit Piston.

Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done.
Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee; let them say, 'tis grossly done;
so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Brook below who will speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit BARDOLPH.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah!
ha! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you? go to; "Evia!"

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with FORD disguised.

Fal. Bless you, sir.

Fal. And you, sir: would you speak with me?

FORD. I make bold, to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome. What's your will?—Give us leave, drawer. [Exit BARDOLPH.

Fal. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much:
my name is Brook.

Fal. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

FORD. Good Sir John, I see for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion, for, they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

FORD. Truth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to hear it, Sir John, take 'tis, or all, for easeing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

"Of all loves," i. e., by all means.—Watchword; by word: "Watch" means the most colts hung round about the ship, to hinder the men from being seen by the enemy in the combat.—It was a custom in taverns, in Shakespeare's time, to send presents of wine from one room to another, either as a memorial of friendship, or by way of introduction to acquaintance.—"Fuit!" i. e., forward! go on!

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Fal. Speak, good master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar;—I will be brief with you,—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay upon mine own imperfection; but, good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, with you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

FORD. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doing of observance; 1 enlargeth opportunities to meet her;
feels every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her: not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given. Briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me, which hath been on the wing of all occasions; but whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, 2 need,
I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this:

Love like a shadow flies, when another love pursues;
Pursuing that flies, and flying what pursues.

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground: so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her nirth so far, that the tabled construction made of her. Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir.

Ford. Believe it, for you know it.—There is money: spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have, only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife: use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O! understand my drift. She dwells so ac-surely on the excellency of her honor, that the folly of my suit daras not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves I could drive her, then, from the a yard of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. What say you to’t, sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford’s wife.

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, sir John; you shall want none.

Fal. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook; you shall want none. I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rashly knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not.—Yet I wrong him to call him poor: they say, the jealous b wittily knave hath masses of money, for the which his wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the lady of the cuckoldly rogue’s coffer, and there’s my harvest-home.

Ford. I would you know Ford, sir, that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteoor o’er the cuckold’s horns; master Brook, thou shalt know I will dominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife.—Come to me soon at night.—Ford’s a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, master Brook, shalt know him for a knave and cuckold.

—Come to me soon at night. [Exit Falstaff.

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!—
My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who said he was this is improvis’d jealousy? my wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a false woman! my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawed at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names!—Ammonium sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbarous, well; yet they are devils’ additions, the names of winds! but cuckold! wittily cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Paget an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vitae bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself; then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o’clock the hour! I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold!—

[Exit Ford.

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir.

Caius. What is the clock, Jack?

Rug. ’Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, but he is no come: he has pray his Bible vell, that he is no come. By gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him if he came.

Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Rug. Forbear; Here’s company.

Enter Host, SHALLOW, SLENDRER, and PAGE.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor.

Shal. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Slen. Give you good-morrow, sir.

Caius. Ye be all run, one, two, three, four, come for! Host. To see thee fight, to see thee foin, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy punto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy ty montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Askulapius? my Galen? my heart of elder! ha! is he dead, bully stale? is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castilian king-Urinal: Hector of Greece, my boy.

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two, three hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the b hair of your professions. Is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great figher, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. ’Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page.—Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest-justice.—A word, Monsieur Mock-water.

Caius. Mock-vater! vat is dat?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valor, bully.

Caius. By gar, then, I have as much mock-water

1 Thrust. — Terms in fencing. — Elder has a heart of pith; hence the joke. — Bully-stale and King-Urinal are epithets alluding to the empirical water-doctors. — Castillan was used as a term of reproach after the defeat of the Spanish armada. The Host avails himself of the Doctor’s ignorance of English to cover him with ridicule. — Against the hair, i.e., against the grain. — To make one, i.e., to make one of the combatants.
as do Englishman.—Scurry jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ears.

Host. He will clappier-claw thee tightly, bully.

dais. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw ine; for, by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

dais. Me tuck you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavalier Slen'der, go you through the town to Frogmore. [Aside to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: see what humor he is in, and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest, for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die. Sheathe thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler. Go about the fields with me through Frogmore; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting, and thou shalt woo her. Curds and creams, said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tuck you for dat; by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page; said I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; y'ell said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, with a book, and Simple.

Eva. I pray you now, good master Slen'der's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physick?

Sim. Marry, sir, the pip-way, the park-way, old Windsor way, and every way, but the town way.

Eva. I most fehemently desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir. [Retiring.

Eva. Pless my soul! how full of cholers I am, and trembling of mind!—I shall be glad, if he have received me.—How melancholy I am!—I will knog his urinary about his knave's costard, when I have good opportunities for the 'ork:—pless my soul! [Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals;
There will we make our pells of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.
To shallow—

Mercy on me! I have a great disposition to cry.

[Sings.

Melodious birds sing madrigals;
When as I sat in Babylon,
And a thousand vagram posies.
To shallow—

[4]

Sim. [Coming forward.] Yonder he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Eva. He's welcome.—[Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Sim. No weapon, sir. There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogmore, over the stile, this way.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shal, and Slen'der.

Shal. How now, master parson! Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a garnerer from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh.

Eva. Please you from your mercy sake, all of you!

Shal. What! the sword and the word? do you study them both, master parson?

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatic day?

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Every well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverence gentleman, who, belike having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward, I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Eva. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hippocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears so, by his weapons.—Keep them asunder:—here comes doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and lack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let a-me speak a word vit your ear; verifye vill you not meet-a me?

Eva. Pray you, use your patience: in good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John spe.

Host. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humors; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends.—I will knog your urinals about your knave's coxcomb for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Jack Rugby,—mine Host de Jarretière, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Eva. As I am a Christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine Host of the Garter.

[Forgetful.
Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.
Host. Peace, I say! hear mine Host of the Gar-ter. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machia vel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest! my sir Hugh! no; he gives me the provosts and the novices.—Give me thy hands, celestial and terrestrial; so.—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.—Come, lay their swords to pawn.—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.
Shall. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.
Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!
[Exeunt Shallow, Slenker, Page, and Host.
Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat! have you make-a de*ot of us? ha, ha!
Eva. This is well, he has made us his cloutinostok.—I desire you, that we may be friends, and let us make our paynins together to be revenge on this same scall, erry, coggling company, the Host of the Garter.
Caius. By gar, vit all my heart. He promise to bring me vere is Anne Page: by gar, he deceive me too.
Eva. Well, I will smite his nods-d.—Pray you, follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street in Windsor.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant: you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather, lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?
Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O! you are a flattering boy: now, I see, you'll be a courtier.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page. Whither go you?
Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife: is she at home?
Ford. Ay: and as idle as she may hang together, for want of your company. I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.
Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.
Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock?
Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had of him,—What do you call your knight's name, sirrah?
Rob. Sir John Falstaff.
Ford. Sir John Falstaff!
Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name—

There is such a league between my good man and him! Is your wife at home indeed?
Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick, till I see her. [Exeunt Mrs. Page and Robin.

Ford. Hath Page any brains! hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He piece-outs his wife's inclination; he gives her false motion, and advantage; and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind:—and Falstaff's boy with her!—Good plots!—

Fool.—Floating-stock; laughing-stock.—Scold's head, a term of reproach.—Wheeling: cheating.

they are hid; and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so-seeing mistress Page, divalde Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbors shall cry 'aum. [Clock strikes ten.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Caius, and Rugby.

Page, Shal., &c. Well met, master Ford.
Ford. Trust me, a good knot. I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.
Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford.
Slen. And so must I, sir: we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.
Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.
Slen. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.
Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you: but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.
Caius. Ay, by gar; and de maid is loves-me: my nursh-a quickly tell me so much.
Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holyday, he smells April and May, he will carry,' tis in his buttons; he will carry.'t
Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Poins; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have wints on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.
Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go:—so shall you, master Page;—and you, sir Hugh.
Shal. Well, fare you well.—We shall have the flier wooting at master Page's.
[Exeunt Shallow and Slender.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.
[Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts. I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.
[Exit Host.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?
All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!
Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly. Is the buck-basket—
Mrs. Ford. I warrant.—What, Robin, I say!

*Acton was transformed by Diana into a stag; the allusion is to the animal's horns. "Cry alms," i.e., encourage; applauded. "—Spokes holyday," i.e., in holyday style.
"April and May," i.e., of April and May.—An allusion to the custom of wearing the flower called bachelor's button.
"Of no having," i.e., of no fortune, possessions; not wealthy.—"In pipe-wine," i.e., in wine from the pipe.
Enter Servants with a large Basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge: we must be hurry'd up.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggerring) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the *whistlers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddly ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called. [Exit Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my b'cyns-musket? what news with you?

Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: my master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlastings liberty, if I tell you of it, for he swears he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose.—I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so.—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee: if I do not act it, kiss me. [Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery dampness:—we'll teach him to know turds from *jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition. O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O, sweet sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead, I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John: my brows become nothing else: nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circular *farthingale. I see what thou wert, if fortune thy foe were not, nature thy b'friend: come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there's something extraordinary in thee. Come: I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklesbury in *simple-time: I cannot; but I love thee, none but thee, and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir. I fear, you love mistress Page.

Fal. Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk by the Countess, which is as hateful to me as the neck of a time-kiln.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it out.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do, or else I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [Within.] Mistress Ford! mistress Ford! here's mistress Page at the door, sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me. I will enclose me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so: she's a very tattling woman.—[Falstaff hides himself.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now!

Mrs. Page. O mistress Ford! what have you done? You're shamed, you are overthrown, you're undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion?—Out upon you! how am I mistaken in you!

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman, that, he says, is here now in the house, by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence. You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 'tis most certain your husband's coming, with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one: I come before to tell you. If you know yourself clear, why I am glad of it; but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you: defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame, so much as his peril: I had rather than a thousand pound, he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame! never stand "you had rather," and "you had rather:" your husband's here at hand; let think you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him.—O, how have you deceived me!—Look, here is a basket: if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to *bucking: or, it is whiting-time, send him by your two men to Datchet mead.

*a Bleachers of linen.
*b Young sparrow-hawk.
*c A stuffed puppet, thrown at in Lent, as cocks were at Shrove-tide.
*d Turtles from jays.
*e, e. honest women from loose ones.
*f A doublet of Venetian fashion.
*g A head-dress of Venetian fashion.
*h Nature thy friend.
*i. i. nature being thy friend.
+j Bucklersbury was a place chiefly inhabited by druggists.
+k Simple time.
+l Simple.
+m Counter.
*n Tapestry.
*o To bucking.
*p Whiting-time.
*q Bleaching-time.
Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there. What shall I do?

-Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me see't, let me see't! O, let me see't! I'll in, I'll in.—Follow your friend's counsel.—I'll in.

Mrs. Page. Why, I carry John Falstaff? Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee: help me away; let me creep in here; I'll never—

[He gets into the basket, 1 and falls over: they cover him with foul linen.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it.—How now! whither bear you this? Stern. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do with thither they bear it? you were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck? Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck, and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exit Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I'll warm it, we'll unkennel the fox.—Let me stop this way first:—so, now is uncape.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, master Page. —Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.]

Eva. This is very fantastical humors, and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de' fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen: see the issue of his search. [Exit Page, Evans, and Caius.]

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket?

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so, throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same sinrin were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think, my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here, for I never saw him so gross in his jealous till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his distempered disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

* A cowl-stuff—A staff with two handles, used for carrying a large basket.—b "How you drumbe," i.e., how sanguinely you move.—c "Uncense," i.e., let lose the game.—d Character; disposition.—e Violent.

Mrs. Page. We'll do it: let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be, the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. You use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the cellars, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment.

Caius. By gar, nor I too: dere is no bodies.

Page.ie, he, master Ford: are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your dissembler in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a sad conscience; your wife is as honest a women as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well; I promised you a dinner.—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife,—come, mistress Page! I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together: I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make a de turd.

Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine Host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A lousy knave! to have his gibes, and his mockeries.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fentos and Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore, no more turn me to him, sweet Nan. Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object, I am too great of birth, And that my state being gall'd with my expense, I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Beside these, other bars he lays before me,— My riots past, my wild societies; And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible I should love thee, but as a property. Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come! Albeit, I will confess, thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I wou'd thee, Anne: Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags; And 'tis the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.

Manner; way.—i.e., Scoffs.—Estate.
Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly, my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slender. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't. 'Slid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Slender. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him. — This is my father's choice. Oh, what a world of vile ill-favor'd faults

Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy! thou hast a father.

Slender. I had a father, mistress Anne: my uncle can tell you good jests of him. — Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slender. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slender. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better Quick. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Ah, lady! had rather be set quick 't' the earth,

And bow'd to death with turnips. [master Fenton, Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good I will not be your friend, nor enemy:

My daughter will I question how she loves you,

And as I find her, so am I affected.

'Till then, farewell, sir: she must needs go in;

Her father will be angry.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.

Fenton. Farewell, gentle mistress. — Farewell, Nan.

Quick. This is my doing, now. — Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? look on master Fenton. — This is my doing. — night

Fenton. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to—Give my sweet Nan this ring. There's for thy pains.

Quick. Now, heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her. I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but specially for master Fenton.

Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am I to 8 slack it.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say!

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't.

[Exit BARD. — Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a husband of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues slyed me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen of 'the litter; and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor, for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swallowed? I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph, with the Wine.

Bard. Here's mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold, as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Anne. Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave.—I cry you mercy: give your worship good-morrow.

4 Excuse; palliation. — Allive.— "Once," i.e., some time. — Especially.— "Neglect," i.e., Pity.
Pal. Take away these chalices. Go, brew me a pot of sack finely.

Ford. With eggs, sir?

Pal. Simple of itself; I'll no puppet-sperm in my broth. — [Exit BARD.] How now!

Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Pal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they should seek her correction.

Pal. So did I nine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yean your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding: she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine. I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

Pal. Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think, what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Pal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, indeed, sir.

Pal. Well, he may: I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir. — [Exit.

Pal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook: he sent me word to stay within. I like his money well. O! here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Pal. Now, master Brook; you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Pal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you. I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And sped you, sir?

Pal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Pal. No, master Brook; but the peaking c ornamento her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual lurum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and said farewell, spoke the prologue of our comedy, and at his heels a rabbie of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his dissembler, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What! while you were there?

Pal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Pal. You shall hear. As good lack would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and by her invention, and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Pal. By the Lord, a buck-basket: rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, soaks, fool stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Pal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffered, to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knives, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Dutchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders, met the jealous knife, their master, in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quaked for fear, lest the luscious knife would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well; on we went for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether; next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that; that am as subject to heat, as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle, to escape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horseshoe; think of that,—bisecting, —think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you suffered all this. My suit, then, is desperate; you'll undertake her no more?

Pal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting; —twixt eight and nine is the hour, master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Pal. Is it? I will then 'address me to your appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed, and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: adieu. You shall have her, master Brook; master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. — [Exit.

Ford. Hum! la! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake! awake, master Ford! there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married: this 'tis to have linen, and buck-basket.?—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the feacher; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should: he cannot creep into a half-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box; but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make me mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. — [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. PAGE, Mrs. QUICKLY, and WILLIAM.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure, he is, by this, or will be presently; but truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by: I'll but

4 "Detected with," i. e., suspected by. — "a billbo" is a Spanish sword-blade of great flexibility.— "Address me," i. e., make myself ready.— "Outrageous."
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes: 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh! no school to-day?

Eva. No; master Slender is 'get the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book: I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Eva. Come hither, William: hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah: hold up your head; answer your master, be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, od. 's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tattlings!—What is fair, William?

Will. Pulcher.

Quick. Pole-cats! there are fairer things than pole-cats, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace,—What is lapsis, William?

Will. A stone.

Quick. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Quick. Well, you are a very simple 'oman:—What is the accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hinc.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child: accusativo, hinc, hang, hog.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prattles, 'oman.—What is the locative case, William?

Will. O—locativo, O.

Eva. Remember, William; locativo is, caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace!

Eva. What is your genitive case plural, William?

Will. Genitivo case?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitivo,—horum, horum, horum.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! fie on you!—Never name her, child, if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame, 'oman!

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words.

He teaches him to kick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves; and to call horum,—fie on you!

Eva. 'Oman, art thou lunaticks! hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers 2 and the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee hold thy peace.

Eva. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is qui, qui, quod; if you forget your qui, your ques, and your quods, you must be 1 preaches. Go your ways, and play; go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar, than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance. I see, you are 6 obscureous in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, Mrs. Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a birling, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What hou! gossip Ford! what hou!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John.

[Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who's at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Page. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, I'll tell you. [Aside.] Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old 4 lunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eva's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, "Poor-out, 3 Poor-out!" that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility, and patience, to 2 this disturber he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears, he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket: protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own folly.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end: he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone! the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you!—Away with him, away with him: better shame, than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enter Falstaff 4 in fright.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i' the basket. May I not go out, ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Aha, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what 'make you here?

Fal. What shall I do?—I'll creep up into the chimney.

* Breched; i. e., flogged.

3 Quick; alert.—Surrowful.—Dumsey; frenzey.—"Poor-out!" an allusion to the sports of children, who thus call on a small to push forth his horns.—Do.
Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birthing-pieces. Creep into the klin-hole.

Petr. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: there is no hiding you in the house.

Petr. I'll go out, then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John. Unless you go out disguised,—

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day! I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Petr. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thum'd b'lut, and her cuff'muffler too,—Run up, sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John; mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we'll come dress you straight; put on the gown the while. [Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too: howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that; for I will appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight.

[Exit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old but true, "Still swine eat all the 4'draft."

[Exit.

Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him. Quickly; despatch.

[Exit.

1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.

2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of knight again.

1 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villains.—Somebody call my wife,—Youth in a basket.—O you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a f'ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed.—What, wife, I say! Come, come forth: behold what honest clothes you send forth; I have the tealings.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Ford. Why, this is lunatics: this is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir.—Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.—I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out.—Come forth, sirrah. [Pulls the Clothes out, and throws them all over the stage.

Page. This passes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Eva. 'Tis unreasonable. Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why, — Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable.—Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a thief's death. [All Clothes thrown out.

Shal. By my fulcility, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Eva. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for.

Page. No, nor no where else, but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show me a color for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, "As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's k'eman."

Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What hon! mistress Page! come you, and the old woman, down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a k'eman, an old cozening k'eman! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such a daubery as this; beyond our element: we know nothing.—Come down, you witch, you bag her you; come down I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband.—Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in Women's Clothes, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, mother Prat; come, give me your hand.

*Inventory: list.—A "thurum'd" hat was a last composed of a iufs or thums.—A "muffler" was a part of female attire which covered only the lower part of the face.

Dregs; refuse — Flimping; punplike.—Gang.
Ford. I'll prat her.—Out of my door, you witch! [beats him.] you rag, you baggage, you pococat, you istryon! Out! Out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you.

[Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Page. Are you not ashamed? I think, you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it.—'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch! Eva. By you and 'nay, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when 'a omen has a great pearled; I spy a great pearled under her 6 muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow: see but the issue of my jealousy. If I cry out thus upon no "trail," never trust me when I open again.

Page. Let's obey his humor a little farther. Come, gentlemen.

[Exeunt Ford, Page, Shallow, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed, and hang o'er the altar: it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any farther revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee simple, with fine and recovery, he will, I think, in the way of "waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unwitful fat knight shall be any farther afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed, and, methinks, there would be no "period to the jest. Should he be not publicly shamed?

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it, then shape it: I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bard. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What should that be, that comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English?

Bard. Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses, but I'll make them pay; I'll scarce them; they have had my house a work at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must 6 come off; I'll scarce them. Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. 'Tis one of the pest discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour. [wilt; Ford. Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou I rather will suspect the sun with cold, [stand, Than thee with wantonness: now doth thy honor In him that was of late a heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more. Be not as extreme in submission, As in offence;

But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight? fie, fie! he'll never come.

Eva. You see, he has been thrown into the rivers, and has been grievously peatan, as an old 'oman: methinks, there should be terrors in him, that he should not come; methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too. [he comes,

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest,

Doth all the winter time, at still midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns; And through he blasts the trees, and takes the cattle; And makes milche-kine yield blood, and shakes a chan: In a most bodes and dreadful manner.

You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know, The superstitious Idle-headed old Received, and did deliver to our age,

This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do fear In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak.

But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our devise; That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us, Disguis'd like Herne, with huge horns on his head.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come, And in this shape; when you have brought him thither, What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus.

Nan Page my daughter, and my little son,

And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress Like urchins, 1 urchins, and faeries, green and white,

With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And rallets in their hands. Upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she, and I, are newly met,

Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once

With some 2 diffused song; upon their sight,

We two in great amazement will fly:

Then, let them all encircle him about,

And, fairy-like, 4-toppin the unclean knight;

And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,

In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,

In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth,

Let the supposed fairies pinch him 6 soundly,

And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,

We'll all present ourselves, dis-horn the spirit,

And mock him home to Windsor.

1 "Takes the cattle," i.e., strikes them with disease. — Old people. — Elves ; goblins. — Obscure; strange. — Boil; pinch hard.

8 Many wretch. — Cover for the lower part of the face.

12 "Cry out upon no trull," i.e., bark upon no scent—a hunting word. — "Cry out! — "Cry out! — "Cry out! — "Cry out! — "Cry out! — i.e., by destroying our reputation. — "No period," i.e., no right period, or proper catastrophe. — "I'll scarce them," i.e., charge them at a high price. — "Come off," i.e., come down; pay down a sum of money.
Ford. The children must be practis’d well to this, or they’ll ne’er do’t.

Exit. I will teach the children their behaviors; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight with my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I’ll go buy them a vizards. Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the Fairies, and I will make the little ass a very pretty woman. [Aside.] Page. That silk will I go buy. [Aside.] Shall master Slender steal my Nan away, and marry her at Eton? To them! Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I’ll to him again in name of Brook; he’ll tell me all his purpose. Sure, he’ll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that. Go, get us b prop, and tricking for our fairies. [Exit."

Exit. Let us about it: it is an admirable pleasures, and very honest knavery.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans."

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford, send quickly to sir John to know his mind.

I’ll to the doctor: he hath my good will, and none but he, to marry with Nan Page. That Slender, though well banded, is an idiot; and ’tis my husband best of all affects: The doctor is well money’d, and his friends Potent at court: he, none but he, shall have her, though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her."

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thickskin? speak, breathe, discourse; brief, short, quick, snappish.

Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There’s his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and truckle-bed: ’tis painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new. Go, knock and call; he’ll speak like an Anthropophagian unto thee: knock, I say.

Sim. There’s an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: ’tis to be so bold as stay, sir, till she comes down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman? the knight may be robbed: I’ll call.—Bully knight! Bully sir John! speak from thy lungs military: art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesius, calls.

Fal. [Above.] How now, mine host?

Host. Here’s a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend! my chambers are honorable; lie! privacy! fie! enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was mine host, an old fat woman even now with me, but she’s gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was’t not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it? muscle-shell: what would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, my master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nyn, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man, that beguiled master Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself: I had other things to have spoken with her, too, from him.

Host. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Fal. You may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them; and thou disgorgeth. Sim. Ay, were they nothing but about mistress Anne Page; to know, if it were my master’s fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. ‘Tis, ‘tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no. Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir, fikie, who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship. I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit Simple.]

Host. Thou art a clerk, thou art clerkly, sir John.

Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one, that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it, neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses! speak well of them, ivalletto.

Bard. Run away with by the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them in a slough of mine; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Fussiers.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain. Do not say, they be fied: Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town this me, there is three cousin Germans, that has cozened all the hosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes and violent-stogs, and ’tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well.

Enter Doctor CAIUS.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarrettière?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful readiess.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tall-me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarmany: by my troth, dere is no duke, dat de count is know to come. I tell you for good vill: adieu.

[Exit.

Host. Hue and cry, villain! go.—Assist me, knight; I am undone.—Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exit Host and Bardolph.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened, and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen’s boats with me;
I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I forsook myself at *Primero. Well, if my wind were but long ¹ enough, I would pray and repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other; and so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconsistancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; ² speciously one of them: mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tells thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colors of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford: but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me in the stocks, ³ i.e., the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber; you shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good heavens! what ado here is to bring you together. Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me: my mind is heavy; I will give over all.

Pose. Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my pur- ² and, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee And a hundred pound in gold more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, master Fenton; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page; ⁴ Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection (So far forth as herself might be her chooser) Even to my wish. I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at; The which whereof so larded with my matter, That neither singly, can be manifested, Without the show of both; ⁵ wherein fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest [Showing the Letter.

I'll show you here at large. Hark, good mine Host: To-night at Herne's oak, just 'twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present the fairy queen; The purpose why, is 'here; in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eton Immediately to marry: she hath consented. Now, sir, her mother, even strong against that match, And firm for Dr. Cuius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shille her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds, And at the dearness, where a priest attends, Straight marry her: to this her mother's plot She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor.—Now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white;

² Hero, i.e., in the letter.

And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her go, She shall go with him:—her mother hath intended, The better to denote her to the doctor, (For they must all be mask'd and vizarded) That ⁶ quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd, With ribands pendant, flaring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and on that token The maid hath given consent to go with him.

Host. Which means she to deceive father or mother?

Fent. Both, my good host, to go along with me: And here it rests,—that you procure the vicar To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one, And in the height of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony.

Host. Well, husband your device! I'll to the vicar. Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.

Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee; Besides, I'll make a present recompense. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more prattling:—go!—I'll hold this is the third time; I hope, good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go. They say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death.—Away.

Quick. I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head, and 'mince. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter Ford.

How now, master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knife, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed freency. I will tell you.—He host me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliah with a weaver's beam, because I know also, life is a ⁷ shuttle. I am in haste: go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I plucked ⁴ geese, played truant, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me! I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.—Follow. Strange things in hand, master Brook: follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

---

*⁴ Fantastically.—⁵ "Hold," i.e., keep to the time.—⁶ Walk; begone.—⁷ An allusion to the Book of Job: " My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle."" Plucking live geese of their feathers was formerly a barbarous sport among boys.
Slen. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a "may-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry, "mum;" she cries, "budget," and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too; but what needs either your "mum," or her "budget"? the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the 6 devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the park: we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chace at the doctor, marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Evans?

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if lie be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such weaslers and their lechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on: to the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Eca. Trib, trib, fairies: come; and remember your parts. Be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you. Come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff disguised, with a Buck's Head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now the hot-blooded gods assist me!—remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose!—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl: think on, Jove; a foul fault. When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' the forest: send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe, with the black 4 scut?—Let the sky rain potatoes, and let it thunder to the tune of "Green Sleeves,"—ball kissing-comfits, and snow 5 eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here. [Embracing her.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. Divide me like a 'brice-buck, each a launch: I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the 6 felloe of this walk, and my horns I bequeath you your husbands. Am I a 6 woodman? ha! Speak I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

[Noise within.

Mrs. Page. Alas! what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. Mrs. Page. Away, away! [They run off.

Fal. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a Satyr; Mrs. Quick- ly, and Pistol; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with wazon tapers on their heads.

Queen. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moonshine revellers, and shades of night, You 6 pair-brothers of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your 6 quality.

Crier Hogobelin, make the fairy oyes.

Pist. Elves, list your names: silence, you airy toys! Cricket, to Windsor chimneys 2 when thou'st leapt, Wherefore thou find'st unfrakk'd, and hearths unswept, There pinch the maid's as blue as billyberry: Our radiant queen hates sluts, and sluttrey. Fal. They are fairies; be, that speaks to them, shall die: 3 To himself. I'll wink and cough. No man their works must eye. [Lies down upon his face. Ena. Where's Bead?—Go you, and where you find a maid, That, o'er she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, 4 Rouse up the organs of her 6 fancy, Sleep she in sound or careless infancy. But those 6 that sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and Queen. About, about! [shines. Search Windsor castle, elves, within and out. Strew good luck 'omphes, on every sacred room, That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit; Worthy the owner, and the owner it.

The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm, and every precious 6 flower: Each fair instalment, cont, and several crest, With loyal blazon, ever more be blent! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look, you sing, Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring: Th' expression that it bears, green let it be,

4 Tail.—"Fringo" is the popular name of the sea-holly; "kissing-comfits" were principally made of potatoes and eringoo roots, and were perfumed to sweeten the breath.— 5 A "brice-buck," i.e., a buck sent as a bribe.—Keeper. 6 A Sportsman; hunter. —For orphan Warburton reads oph en, or elfin. —Profession. —The "billyberry" is a species of wortleberry.— 7 Rouse up the organs of her fancy, i.e., arouse her mind with some delightful vision.— 8 Fairies, elves. —Articles of furniture were anciently rubbed with aromatic herbs, to drive away evil spirits.—Impression.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

More fortify-fresh than all the field to see;
And,

And, Honi soit qui mal y pense, write,
In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white;
Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood’s bending knee:
Fairies, use flowers for their character.
Away! disperse! but, till ’tis one o’clock,
Our dance of custom, round about the oak
Of Hermo the hunter, let us not forget.

Eva. 1. Lock hand in hand, yourselves in order set;
And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be,
To guide our measure round about the tree.

But, stay! I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welch fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

2 To himself.

Pist. Vile worm, thus wast o’look’d even in thy birth.

Queen. With trial-fire touch me his finger end:
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial! come.

Eva. Come, will this wood take fire?

[They burn him with their topers.]

Oh, oh, oh!

Queen. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, fairies, sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

Song, by one.

Fie on sinful fantasy!
Fie on lust and luxury!
Lust is but a bloody fire,
(Kindled with unchaste desire,
Fed in heart; whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them higher and higher.

Chorus.

Pinch him, fairies, mutually;
Pinch him for his villaining;
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and star-lights, and moon-shine be out.

During this song, the fairies pinch Falstaff: Doctor Caius comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green; Slender another way, and takes off a fairy in white; and Fenton comes, and steals away Anne Page.

A noise of hunting is made within. All the fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck’s head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford.

They lay hold of him.

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have match’d you now.

Will none but Hermo the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you come; hold up the jest no higher.—

Now, good sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who’s a cuckold now! — Master Brook, Falstaff’s a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: and, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford’s but his back-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook: his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill-luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive, that I am made an ass.
Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies! I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the toppery into a received belief; in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when ’tis upon ill employment!

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pinse you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross over-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch goat too? shall I have a cocoborn of e’erise? ‘Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Scence is not good to give puffer: your belly is all puffer.

Fal. Scence and puffer! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust, and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hog-pudding? a bag of flux?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Cold, old, withered, and of intolerable en- trails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and methcgliss, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and piddles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel.Ignorance itself is a plummet o’er me! use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we’ll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pandar: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her, master Slender shath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius’ wife.

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and methcgliss, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and piddles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel. Ignorance itself is a plummet o’er me! use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we’ll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pandar: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her, master Slender shath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius’ wife.

[Aside.

Enter Slender, crying.

Sten. Whoo, ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you despatched?

Sten. Despatched! — I’ll make the best in Gloucestershire know on’t; would I were hanged, h. e.,

Page. Of what, son?

Sten. I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress

* Folly: footloose. — Jack-a-lent was a puppet thrown at in Lent.— Fool’s cap. — Is a plummet o’er me, i. e., weighs me down.

Charactery is a writing by characters. — A man of middle earth, l. e., a mortal man.— O’crlook’d, l. e., bewitched; looked on by an evil eye. — Horns.

Sci. Trommy Trommy Trommy Trommoddum.
Anne Page, and she's a great lubbery boy: if it had not been for the church, I would have cozened him, or he should have cozened me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: if I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cried "mum," and she cried "budget," as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married an garson, a boy; un poison, by gar, a boy: it is not Anne Page; by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Caius. Ay, by gar, and 'tis a boy; by gar, I'll raise all Windsor. [Exit Caius.

Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me. Here comes master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton! [They kneel.

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon.

Page. Now, mistress; how chance you went not with master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love.

Page. Why, she and I, long since contracted, Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us. The offence is holy that she hath committed; And this deceit失去 the name of craft, Ford. Stand not amazed: here is no remedy. — In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state: Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have taken a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced. Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy. What cannot be eschewed must be embraced.

Fal. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no farther. — Master Fenton, Heaven give you many, many merry days. Good husband, let us every one go home, And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire; Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so. — Sir John, To master Brook you yet shall hold your word; For he, to-night, shall lie with mistress Ford. [Exeunt.

SCENE, Vienna.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus!
Escal. My lord.
Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me 't affect speech and discourse;
Since I am apt to know, that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: then, no more remains,
But add to your sufficiency your worth,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, y' are as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,

From which we would not have you warp.—Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.—[Exit an Attend-
What figure of us think you he will bear?
For, you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power. What think you of it?
Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honor,
It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes.
Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That, to th' observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I.

Are not thine own so proper, as to waste Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee. Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do, Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd, But to fine $issues; nor nature never lends The smallest scruple of her excellence, But take a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor, Both thanks and $use. But I do bend my speech To one that can my part in him $advertise:

Hold, therefore, Angelo: 1 Tendering his commission.
In our $remove be thou at full selfeur; 2 Mortality and mercy in Vienna Live in thy tongue and heart. Old Escalus,
Though first in question, is thy $secondary:
Take thy commission. 2 Giving it.

Ang. Now, good my lord,

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:

We have with a $heaven'd and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore, take your honors.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition,
That it prefers itself, and leaves unquestion'd
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concerns shall $importune,
How it goes with us; and do look to know,
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hoped execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honor, have to do
With any scripul: your $scope is as mine own,
So to enforce, or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand.
I'll privily away: I love the people,
But do not like to stage to my own eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and $veheement,
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Escal. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness!

Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.

Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

Escal. I'll wait upon your honor. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to $composition with the king of Hungary, why then, all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou concludest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

1 Gent. Why? 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No! a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any $proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay; why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as for example; thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet? thou art good velvet: thou art a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee. I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art $pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art talented, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes!

1 Gent. I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

2 Gent. To three thousand dollars a-year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

2 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error: I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound scintics?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one youder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

2 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that's Claudio; signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, 'tis so; I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head is to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this foolish, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

---
SCENE III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Bawd. I am too sure of it; and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be; he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away; let's go learn the truth of it. [Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallowys, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well; what has he done?

Clo. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Bawd. Gropping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Bawd. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No; but there's a woman with maid by him.

Bawd. Have you not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Bawd. What proclamation, man?

Clown. All bawdy houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pull'd down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clo. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgler put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Clo. To the ground, mistress.

Bawd. Why, here's a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Clo. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage! there will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service: you will be considered.

Bawd. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw.

Clo. Here comes signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's madam Juliet.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, and Officers.

Claudio. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition, But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claudio. Thus can the demi-god, authority, Make us pay down for our offence by weight.— The words of heaven;—on whom it will, it will; On whom it will not, 'so: yet still 'tis just.

[Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? I whence comes this restraint?

Claudio. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty: As surfeit is the father of much fast, So every escape by the immediate use Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue, Like rats that ravin down their proper bane, a "The sweat," i.e., the consequences of the curative process then in use for a certain disease. b Joller.— An allusion to a passage in St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans: "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy."—A Veraciously devour.

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke, and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thou thoughtst
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbor hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled, than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

Fri. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever lov'd the life 4remov'd;
And held in idle place to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless 6bravery keeps.
I have deliver'd to lord Angelo
(A man of 4stricture, and firm abstinance)
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;
For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,
And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir,
You will demand of me, why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most bitten laws,
(The needful bits and curbs to head-strong steeds)
Which for this fourteen years we have let sleep;
Even like an o'er-grown lion in a cage,
That goes not out to prey: now, as fond fathers,
Having bound up the threat'ning wings of birth
Only to stick it in their children's sight,
For terror, not to use, 5in time the rod's
More mock'd, than fear'd; so our just decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And liberty plucks justice by the nose;
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleased;
And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd,
Than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I fear, too dreadful:
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
When evil reasons have their permisive pass, 8[father,]
And not 6due punishment. Therefore, indeed, my
I have on Angelo impos'd the office,
Who may, in th' ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never 3in the sight,
To draw on slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,
At our more leisure shall I render you;
Only, this one:—Lord Angelo is precise;
Stands at 4guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to breed than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seeming be.

SCENE V.—A Nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no further privileges?
Fran. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more,
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within.] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fran. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him:
For I may not; you are yet unknown.
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,
But in the presence of the priestess:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

[Lucio calls.]

He calls again: I pray you, answer him.

[Exit Francisca.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be, as those choicer roses
Proclaim you are no less, can you so steal me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unlady brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask,
The rather, for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his sister. 1

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets
Not to be wary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! for what?

Lucio. For that, which if myself might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks.
He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your 9sorcer. 1[iarnel sin Lucio. 'Tis true. I would not, though 'tis my
With maid's to seem the 6apting, and to jest,
Tongue far from heart, play with all virgins so:
I hold you as a thing enky'd, andainted
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and 9truth, your brother and his 8lover have embrac'd: 9[ius:
As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time,
That from the 6seedling the bare foolows brings
To teeming fowson, even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full 8thilth and husbandry. 9[Juliet?

Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin
Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their
By vain, though apt, affection.

Lucio. She is it.

Isab. O! let him marry her.

Lucio. This is the point.

The duke, 4who's very strangely gone from hence,
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand, and hope of action; but we do learn,
By those that know the very nerves of state,
His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true-recent design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority
Governs lord Angelo; a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth reject and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He (to give fear to 9sense and liberty,
Which have for long rage by the fiscous law,
As mice by lions,) hath pick'd out an nat,
Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it,

[An old proverb reads: "The leaping crics most, farthest From her nest," i.e., tongue far from heart.—2 Fewness and truth," i.e., in few and true words.—3 Mistress.—4 Teeming fowson, breeding plenty.—5 Tilling.—6 Extrod.—7 Male doll.—8 To give fear to use, i.e., to intimidate me, on practices long countenanced by custom.

1 A complete bosom," i.e., a bosom completely arched.
2 Retired.—3 Bravery" is showy dress.—5 Strictness.—6 At a guard," i.e., on his defence.

And follows close the rigor of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo; and that's my pith
Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.
Isab. Doth he so seek his life?
Lucio. Has he counsel'd him Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.
Isab. Alas! what poor unction's in me
To do him good?
Lucio. Essay the power you have.
Isab. My power, alas! I doubt.
Lucio. Our doubts are traitors, and Make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt. Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.
Isab. I'll see what I can do.
Lucio. But speedily.
Isab. I will about it straight,
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you: Commend me to your brother; soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.
Lucio. I take my leave of you.
Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch, and not their terror.
Escal. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death. Alas! this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father.
Let but your honor know,
(Whom I believe to be most strict in virtue,) That, in the working of your own affections,
Had I, bethinking me, with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd th' effect of your own purpose,
Whether you had not, sometime in your life,
Err'd in this point, which now you censure him,
And pull'd the law upon you.
Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. I know not,
The jury, passing on a prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two [tie, Guiltier than him they try: what's open made to just-
That justice seiz'd: what know the laws, [nent,
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very preg-
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it,
Because we see it; but what we do not see
We read upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offence,
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.
Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.
Ang. Where is the provost?

Enter Provost.

Prov. Here, if it like your honor.
Ang. See that Claudio be executed by nine to-morrow morning.
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd, [vest.
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage. [Exit Prov.
Escal. Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all!
Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall!
Some enter from 2breaks of ice, and answer none,
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elb. Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a common-heel, that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.
Ang. How now, sir? What's your name, and what's the matter?
Elb. If it please your honor, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do lean upon justice, sir; and do bring in here before your good honor two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?
Elb. If it please your honor, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profimation in the world, that good Christians ought to have.

Escal. This comes off [well: here's a wise officer.
Ang. Go to: what quality are they of? Elbow is your name: why dost thou not speak, Elbow?
Clo. He cannot, sir: he's out at elbow.
Ang. What are you, sir?
Elb. He, sir, a tapster, sir; *parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman, whose house, sir, was, as they say, pull'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a [hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?
Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detain before heaven and your honor, Escal. How! thy wife!

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman.

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?
Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?
Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman curiously given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanliness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?
Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Over-done's means; but as she spit in his face, so she defied him.

Clo. Sir, if it please your honor, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honorable man; prove it.

Escal. [To Angelo.] Do you hear how he misplaces?

Clo. Sir, she came in great with child, and longing (saving your honor's reverence) for stew'd prunes: we, sir, had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence: your honors have seen such dishes: they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

* "Comes off well," I.e., is well told.—Partly bawd.—
* "Professes a hot-house," I.e., keeps a bagnio.—Protest.
Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish, sir.
Clo. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein the right; but to the point. As I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for pence, and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly:—for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three pence again.
Froth. No, indeed.
Clo. Very well; you being then, if you be remember'd, cracking the stones of the foresaid pence.
Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.
Clo. Why, very well: I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were past care of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.
Froth. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. Come; you are a tedious fool: to the purpose.—What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honor cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, say not so, sir, but you shall come to it, by your honor's leave. And, I beseech you, look unto master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year, whose father died at Hallowmas.—Was not at Hallowmas, master Froth?

Froth. All-hallowed eve.

Escal. Why, very well: I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a "lower chair," sir;— 'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for windows.

Clo. Why, very well then: I hope here be truths. Aug. This will last out a night in Russia. When nights are longest there, I'll take my leave, and leave you to the hearing of the cause, Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.
Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.
Clo. I beseech your honor, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her?

Clo. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face.—Good master Froth, look upon his honor; 'tis for a good purpose. Dost your honor mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Clo. Doth your honor see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Clo. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honor.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow, and his mistress is a respected woman.

Clos. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.
Elb. Violent, thou liest: thou liest, wicked varlet. The time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him, before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity?—Is this true?

Elb. O thou varlet! O thou varlet! O thou wicked "Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her?—If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duchess's officer.—Prove this, thou wicked "Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked varlet?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee. Now, thou varlet, thou art to continue; now, thou varlet, thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Escal. So.—What trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Clo. Mistress Over-done.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir; Over-done by the last.

Escal. Nine!—Come hither to me, master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters; they will draw you, master Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never could come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well; no more of it, master Froth: farewell. [Exit Froth. ]—Come you hither to me, master tapster. What's your name, master tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Clo. Bum, sir.

Escal. 'Trophy, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you color it in being a tapster. Are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Clo. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then. If your lordship will take order for the 4 "Justice or Iniquity?" i.e., constable or clown.—"Cannibal."—"To take order is to take measures, precautions.

Scene II. MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Ang. Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spare'd.

Prov. I crave your honor's pardon.
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?
She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Scre. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd
Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.]
See you the fornicatrice be remov'd;
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Prov. Save your honor! [Offering to go.

Ang. Stay a little while.—[To Isab.] Y'are welcome:
what's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honor,
Please but your honor hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice, that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice,
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war 'twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Lucio, I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside.] Heaven give thee moving graces!

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it!
Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done.
Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To fine the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just, but severe law!
I had a brother then.—Heaven keep your honor!

[Going.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Gi'yt not o'er so: to him again,
intent him;
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tane a tongue desire it.
To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look; what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,
If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse
As mine is to him?

Ang. Lucio. 's he sentenc'd: 'tis too late.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou art too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word,
May call it back again: Well believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace.
As mercy does. If he had been as you, and you as he, You would have alit like him; but he, like you, Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, begone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, And you were Isabel! should it then be thus? No; I would tell what ’twere to be a judge, And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, touch him; there’s the vein.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas! alas! why, all the souls that were forfeit once; And he that might the vantage best have took, Found out the remedy. How would you be, If he, which is the 1 God of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that, And mercy then will breathe within your lips, Like man new made!

Ang. Be you content, fair maid. It is the law, not I, condemns your brother: Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son, It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow? O, that’s sudden! Spare him, spare him!

He’s not prepar’d for death. Even for our kitchens We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven With less respect than we do minister To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you: Who is it that hath died for this offence? There’s many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, well said.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath Those many had not dur’d to do that evil, [sleep: If it had, it were to one, that did it edict infringing, Had answer’d for his deed: now, ’tis awake; Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet, Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils Either new, or by remissness new-contrived, And so in progress to hatch’d and born, Are now to have no successive degrees, But ere they live to end.

Isab. Yet show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all, when I show justice; For then I pity those I do not know, Which a dismissal of offence would after gall, And do him right, that, answering one foul wrong, Lives not to act another. Be satisfied: Your brother dies to-morrow: be content. [tence, Isab. So you must be the first that gives this season, And he that suffers. O! it is excellent To have a giant’s strength; but tyrannous To use it like a giant.

Lucio. [Aside.] That’s well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder As Jove himself does, Jove would ne’er be quiet, For every pet, petty officer Would rise his beast, that did thee labouring, Nothing but thunder. Merrifull heaven! Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt Split’st the unedgeable and gnarled oak, Than the soft myrtle; but man, proud man! Drest in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he most assur’d, His glassy essence, like an angry ape, Plays such fantastic tricks he knows not heaven, As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens, Would all themselves laugh as mortal.

Lucio. [To Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench! He’s coming! I perceive’t. [will relent.

Pros. Why, [Aside.] Pray heaven, he win him! Isab. Yes! You cannot weigh our brother with yourself: Great men may jest with saints: ’tis wit in them, But in the less foul profanation. [o’ that.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou’rt in the right, girl: more Isab. That in the captain’s but a cholerick word, Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Lucio. [Aside.] Art advis’d o’ that? more on’t.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me? Isab. Because authority, though it err like others, Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself, That skins the vice o’ the top. Go to your bosom; Knock there, and ask your heart, what it doth know That’s like my brother’s fault: if it confess A natural guilliness, such as is his, Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue Against my brother’s life.

Isab. [Aside.] She speaks, and tis Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. [To her.] Fare you well.

Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.

Ang. I will bethink me.—Come again to-morrow.

Isab. Huck, how I’ll brieve you. Good my lord, Ang. How! brieve me? [turn back. Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share with you.

Lucio. [Aside.] You had marr’d all else.

Isab. Not with fond rings circles of the test gold, Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor As fancy values them; but with true prayers, That shall be up at heaven, and enter there Ere sun-rise; prayers from preserved souls, From fasting maidens, whose minds are delicate To nothing temporal.

Ang. Well; come to me to-morrow.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time ’fore noon.

Isab. Save your honor! [Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and Provost. Ang. From thee; even from thy virtue!— What’s this! what’s this! is this her fault, or mine? The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Ha! Not she, nor death she tempts; but it is I, That lying by the violet in the sun, Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower, Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be, That modesty may more betray our sense enough, Than woman’s lightness! Having waste ground Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary, And pitch our floats there? O, fie, fie, fie! What does thou, or what art thou, Angelo? Dost thou desire her fouly for these things That make her good? O, let her brother live! Thieves for their robbery have authority, When judges steal themselves. What! do I love her, That I desire to hear her speak again, And feast upon her eyes? What is’t I dream on? Or cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint, With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous Is that temptation, that doth good us on To sin in loving virtue. Never could the strumpet, 1

SCENE IV.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

With all her double vigor, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite.—Even from youth till now,
When men were fond, I smil'd, and wonder'd how. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost; so I think you are.
Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflict'd spirits.
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly. [needful.
Prov. I would do more than that, if more were

Enter JULIET.

Look; here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling in the flames of her own youth,
Hath bluster'd her report. She is with child,
And he that got it, sentenc'd—a young man
More fit to do another such offence,
Than die for this.
Duke. When must he die?
Prov. [As I do think, to-morrow.—
[To JULIET.] I have provided for you: stay awhile,
And you shall be conducted.
Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?
Juli. I do, and bear the shame most patiently.
Duke. 'Tis well. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your
And try your penitence, if it be sound, [conscience,
Or hollowly put on.
Juli. I'll gladly learn.
Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Juli. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.
Duke. So then, it seems, your most officious act
Was mutually committed?
Juli. Mutually.
Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.
Juli. I do confess it, and repent it, father.
Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but least you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame;
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Shewing, we would not serve heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.
Juli. I do repent me, as it is an evil,
And take the shame with joy.
Duke. There's rest.
Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.
Grace go with you! Benedicite! [Exit.
Juli. Must die to-morrow! O, injurious love,
That compasses a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror! [conscience.
Prov. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter ANGELO.

ANG. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words,
Whilst my 'tention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name,
And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, whereon I studied,
Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown "seer and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride,
Could I, with "boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for "vain. O place! O form!
How often dost thou with thy "case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood:
Let's write good "angel on the devil's horn,
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter SERVANT.

How now! who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister,
Desires access to you.
Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit SERVANT
O heavens!
Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,
Making it both unable for itself,
And disposing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?
So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The grave, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own path, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untought love
Must needs appear offence.

Enter ISABELLA.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.
Ang. That you might know it, would much better
please me,
Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.
Isab. Even so.—Heaven keep your honor! [Going.
Ang. Yet may he live a while; and, it may be,
As long as you, or I: yet he must die.
Isab. Under your sentence?
Ang. Yea.
Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not.
Ang. Ha! Fie, these filthy vices! it were as good to pardon him, that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made,
As to put metal in restrained means,
To make a false one.
Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.
Ang. Say you so? then, I shall pozze you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life, or to redeem him
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
As she that he hath stain'd?
Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.
Ang. I talk not of your soul. Our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than for 'accompot.
Isab. How say you?
Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this:—
I, now the voice of the recorded law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:

9 Profit.—" For vain," I.e., for being vain. Outside.
10 "Let's write good angel," &c.; i.e., Though we should write good angel on the devil's horn, it will not change his nature, or give him a right to exhibit an angel for his crest.
—Crows.—" The general," i.e., the people; the multitude.—"I, e., that hath killed a man. This, a sins of compulsion are not imputed to us by Heaven as crimes.
Might there not be a charity in sin,
To save this brother's life?

Ibad. Please you to do, I'll take it as a peril to my soul:
It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Please'd you to do, at peril of your soul,
Were equal piteous of sin and charity.

Ibad. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven, let me bear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn-prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your a-answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me. Your sense pursu'd not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or else to make it up, & that is not good.

Ibad. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright,
When it doth tax itself: as these black masks
Proclaim an 'insin'dl beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could display.—But mark me:
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross.

Your brother is to die.

Ibad. So.

Ang. And his offence so, as it appears
Accountant to the law upon that a-pain.

Ibad. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the a-force of a-question) that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this a-suppos'd, or else to let him suffer,
What would you do?

Ibad. As much for my poor brother, as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
Th' impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing I've been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must
Your brother die.

Ibad. And 'twere the cheaper way.
Better it were, a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you, then, as cruel, as the sentence
That you have slander'd so?

Ibad. Ignomy in rasonm, and free pardon,
Are of two houses: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to foul redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A merriment, than a vice.

Ibad. O, pardon me, my lord! it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we Something do excuse the thing I hate, [mean.
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all frail.

Ibad. Else let your brother die,
If not a fooleary, but only he,
Owe, and succeed this a-weakness.

---

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Ibad. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.

Women!—Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by 'em. Nay, call us ten times frail,
For we are soft as our compliances are,
And credulous to false a-pruits.

Ang. I think it well:
And from this testimony of your own sex,
(Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger,
Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold:
I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, (as you well express'd
By all external warrants,) show it now,
By putting on the destit'd livery.

Ibad. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me intreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly, conceive I love you.

Ibad. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me,
That he shall die for it.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Ibad. I know, your virtue hath a licence in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on a others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honor,
My words express my purpose.

Ibad. Ha! little honor to be much believ'd,
And most pernicious purpose:—To seeming, a-seem'd
I will the fore, Angelo: lord, for [Ing!—
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an outstretch'd throat I'll tell the world
Aloud what man thou art.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsold'ne name, the austereness of my life,
May vouch against you, and my place i' the state,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stoop in your own report,
And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensal race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
By all nicety, and a-prolifickoes blushes,
That banish what they see for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will,
Or else he must not only die the death,
But the kindness shall his death draw out
To lagering suffrance. Answer me to-morrow,
Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

[Exit.

Ibad. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,
Who would believe me? O perilous mouths!
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approbation,
Bidding the law make court'sy to their will,
Hanging both right and wrong to a' appetite,
To follow as it draws. I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fallen by a prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honor,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stoop
To such abhorr'd pollution.
Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die;
More than our brother is our chastity.
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest. [Exit.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then, you hope of pardon from lord
Claud. The miserable have [Angelo?]
No other medicine, but only hope.
I have hope to live, and am prepar’d to die.
Duke. Be *absolute for death; either death, or life,
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason with life:—
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That now my heart would keep; *keep a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyly influences,
That I do this habitation, when thou *keep’st,
Hourly afflict. Merely, thou art death’s fool;
For him thou labor’st by thy flight to shun,
And yet run’st towards him still: thou art not noble;
For all th’accommodations that thou bearst,
Are nur’d by baseness: thou art by no means valiant;
For thou dost bear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm: thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok’st, yet grossly fear’st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist’st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust: happy thou art not;
For what thou hast not, still thou striiv’st to get,
And what thou hast forget’st. Thou art not certain;
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon: if thou art rich, thou’rt poor,
For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear’st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee: friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper lons,
Do curse the gout, *serpigo, and the rheum. [age,
For ending thee no sooner: thou hast nor youth, nor
But, as it were, an after-dinner’s sleep,
Dreaming of both; for all thy *boasted youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of pal’d flesh: and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What’s yet in this,
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths, yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all evil.
Claud. I humbly thank you.
To sue to live, I find, I seek to die,
And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.
Isab. [Without.] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company! [a welcome.
Prov. Who’s there? come in: the wish deserves
Enter ISABELLA.
Duke. Dear sir, ere long I’ll visit you again.
Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.
Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.
Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior; here’s
Duke. Provost, a word with you. [your sister.
Prov. As many as you please.
Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceal’d. [Exit DUKE and Provost.
Claud. Now, sister, what’s the comfort?
Isab. Why, as all
Comforts are; most good, most good, indeed.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting *liege:

Therefore, your best *appointment make with speed;
To-morrow you set on.
Claud. Is there no remedy?
Isab. None, but such remedy, as to save a head
To cleave a heart in twain.
Claud. But is there any?
Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If I will compel it, he’ll you immolate,
But fetter you till death.
Claud. Perpetual durance?
Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance: a restraint,
Though all the world’s *vastidity you had,
To a determined scope.
Claud. But in what nature?
Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to it,
Would bate your honor from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.
Claud. Let me know the point.
Isab. O! I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Last thou a feverous life *wouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect,
Than a perpetual honor. Darest thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension,
And the poor heedless, that we tread upon.
In corporal suffering finds a pang, as great
As when a giant dies.
Claud. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowerly tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms. [grave
Isab. There spake my brother: there my father’s Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:
Thou art too noble to deserve a life
In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth *the head, and follies doth enmew
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His faith within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.
The *priestly Angelo?
Isab. O, *tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned*st body to invest and cover
In *priestly garb! Dost thou think, Claudio,
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might’st be freed.
Claud. O, heavens! it cannot be.
Isab. Yes, he would give *thee from this rank
So to offend him still. This night’s the time *[offence,
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.
Claud. Thou shalt not do.
Isab. O! were it but my life,
I’d throw it down for your deliverance
As *frankly as a pin.
Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.
Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.
Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,
When he would *force it? Sure, it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.
Isab. Which is the least?
Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be *perdurably in’d? — O Isabel!
Isab. What says my brother?
Claud. Death is a fearful thing.
Isab. And shamed life a hateful.
Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit
To sink in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendulous world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and uncertain thoughts
Imagine bowling!—tis too horrible.
The weariest and most bottomed worldly life,
That rage, ache, pain, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.
Isab. Alas! alas!
Claud. Sweet sister, let me live.
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
That it becomes a virtue.
Isab. O, you beast!
O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair,
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Never issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:
Die: perish! might but my bending downward
Reprive thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.
Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.
Isab. Thy sister's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bane;
'Tis best that thou diest quickly.
Claud. [Going.] O hear me, Isabellla!
Re-enter Duke.
Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister; but one word.
Isab. What is your will?
Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure,
I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.
Isab. I have no superfluous leisure: my stay must be taken out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while.
Duke. [To Claudio.] Son, I have overheard what hath past between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to practise his judgment with the disposition of nature. She, having the truth of her honor, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore, prepare yourself to death. Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Go; to your knees, and make ready.
Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.
Re-enter Provost.
Provost, a word with you.
Prov. What's your will, father?
Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone.

Leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no less shall touch her by my company.
Prov. In good time. [Exit Provost.
Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good: the goodliness that is chief in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness: last grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?
Isab. I am now going to resolve: him. I had rather my brother lives in a common law, than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.
Duke. That shall not be much amiss; yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprightly do a poor wrong'd lady a merited benefit, redeem your brother from the angry law, do no stain to your own gracious person, and much please the absent duke, if, out of ventur'd, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business. Isab. You have me with your speech. I have to do anything that appears not feel in the truth of my spirit.
Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea?
Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.
Duke. Suppose she should this Angelo have married; he was allied to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perish'd vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love to her ever most zealous, àSingle; with them the portion of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combine husband, this well-seeming Angelo.
Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?
Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonor: in few, bestowed her on her own inamration, which she yet wears for his sake, and, as marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.
Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this can she avail?
Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonor in doing it.
Isab. Show me how, good father.
Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo: an answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree

1. "In good time," i. e., à la bonne heure; very well; so be it.
2. "Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonor: in few, bestowed her on her own inamration, which she yet wears for his sake, and, as marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not. Go you to Angelo: an answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long, that the time may have all shadow and silence in it, and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course, and now follows all: we shall advise this wronged maid to steal up to your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and here by is your brother saved, your honor untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will 1 frame, and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. Will this think of it? I am.

Isab. The image of it gives me content already, and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the mosted stage, resides this dejected Mariana: at that place call upon me, and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly. I am.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will need buys and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

Clo. 'Twas never merry world, since, of two usances, the merriest was put down, and the worser allow'd by order of law a fur'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir.—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah: a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done, That is thy means to live. Do thou but think What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back, From such a filthy vice: say to thyself, From their abominable and beastly touchings I drink, I eat, array myself, and live. Canst thou believe thy living is a life So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Clo. Indeed, it doth stick in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove it. [sin.

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for Thus wilt prove his. Take him to prison officer: Correction and instruction must both work. Ere this rude beast will profit. Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whore—master: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, From our faults, as faults from seeming, free! Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a feord, sir.

Clo. I spy comfort: I cry, bail. Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar! Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pyramus's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutched? What reply? Ha! What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd? the last rain? Ha! What say'st thou, Sir Troth? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words, or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus: still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morse, thy mistress? Procures she still? Ha!

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her mutton, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so: over your fresh whore, and your powder'd bawd: an 'unshaven'd consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?

Clo. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell. Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey, or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. What, are the prison him. If imprisonment be the dunce of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawdborn. Farewell, good Pompey: commend me to the prison, Pompey. You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Clo. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey.—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha!

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come. Clo. You will not call me then, sir?

Lucio. Then Pompey, nor now.—What news abroad, friar? What news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go; to kennel, Pompey, go.

[Exeunt Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. And now, Pompey. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say, he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Never dodo dukes it well in his absence: he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't. 1

1 i.e. His neck will be tied, like your waist, with a cord.
2 Newly made woman, I.e., now courtesan. — The method of cure for a certain disease was called the pendering-cob. — Inevitable. — Keep the house, i.e., stay at home: alluding to the etymology of husband. — Fashion.
Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred: it is well allied; but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-meal spawned him: some, his birth was between two stock-fishes; but it is certain, that when he makes water, his urine is congeal'd ice: that I know to be true; and he is a motion ingenerative, that's inflamable.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apiece.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cold-piece to take away the life of a man? Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport: he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. Once he deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish. The duke had crotchets in him: he would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an favourer of his. A shy fellow was I, sir, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I pr'ythee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,—parbleau:—tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand,—the greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaken: the very stream of his life, and the business he hath shelled, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the curios a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke returns (as our prayers be he may) let me desire you to make your answer before him: if it be honest you have spake, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O! you hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unfruitful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll forswear this again.

Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this 'ngerit'id agent will unpeople the province with continency: sparrow must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemn'd for mistrusting. Farewell, good friar; I pr'ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smells brown bread and garlic: say, that I said so. Farewell.

[Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can cease 'scape back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong, Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But well for thee, if thou art elinched way.

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go: away with her to prison!

Bawd. Good my lord, be good to me; your honor is accounted a merciful man: good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your lordship?

Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time; he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob. I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to abuse me!

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license; let him be called before us. Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Bawd and Officers.]

Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd; Claudio must die to-morrow. Let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation: if my brother 's withheld by my pitty, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you.

Escal. Of whence are you? [Now.

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is to use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the See, In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad i' the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking, there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but 'security enough to make fellowships accurs'd. Much upon SCENE I.—A Room at the moated Grange.

MARIANA discovered sitting: a Boy singing.

Song.

Take, O! take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day;
Lights that do mislead the morrow:

*But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.*

MARI. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away:

Satisfied.—Appearance.—Trained.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

Enter DUKE.

I cry thee mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My music it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

DUKE. "Tis good: though music oft hath such a charm.
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

MARI. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

[Exit DUKE.

Enter ISABELLA.

DUKE. I do constantly believe you.—The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

MARI. I am always bound to you.

[Exit DUKE. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy? ISAB. He hath a garden 4 circumjunct'd with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planchet gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key:
This other doth command a little door,
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise upon the heavy Middle of the night to call upon him.

[Exit ISAB. But shall you on your knowledge find this ISAB. I have tuition a due and wary note upon't: With whispering and most guilty diligence, In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.

DUKE. Are there no other tokens Between you 'greed, concerning her observance? ISAB. No, none, but only a repair i' the dark; And that I have 'possess'd him my most stay Can be but brief: for I have made him know, I have a servant comes with me along, That stays upon me; whose persuasion is, I come about my brother.

DUKE. 'Tis well borne up.

I have not yet made known to Marianna A word of this.—What, ho! within! come forth.

Re-enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid:
She comes to do you good.

ISAB. I do desire the like.

DUKE. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you? MARI. Good trier, I know you do, and have found it.

DUKE. Take then this your companion by the hand, Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure: but make haste; The vaporous night approaches.

MARI. Will'please you walk aside?

[Exit MARIANA and ISABELLA.

DUKE. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes Are stuck upon thee. Volumes of report Run with base, false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dreams, And rack thee in their fancies!

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome! How agreed?

Scene II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provost and Clown.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Clo. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir; leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your present servitude; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an undoubted liberty.

Clo. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fie upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally: a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.]

Clo. Prov. sir, by your good favor, (for, surely, sir, a good favor you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Clo. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clo. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Clo. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so, every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

[Since.—*Gild, or varnish over.—*Petters.—*Countenance.—*Honest.]

Clo. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd: he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow, four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade: follow.

Clo. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me very; for, truly, sir, for your kindliness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio: [Exeunt Clown and Abhorson.

Th' one has my pity; not a jot the other.

Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Duke. The best and wholesome'st spirits of the night Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late? Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Prov. No.

Duke. There will then, er'et be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so: his life is parallel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great justice. He doth with holy abstinence subdue That in himself, which he spurs on his power To qualify in others: were he meal'd with that Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous; [Knocking within.

But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come.—[Exit Provost.

This is a gentle provost: seldom, when The steedle gaoler is the friend of men. [Knocking. How now? What noise? That spirit's possessed with haste,

That wounds the resisting pannier with these strokes.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. [Speaking to one at the door.] There he must stay, until the officer

Arie to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet, But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is, You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily, You something know; yet, I believe, there comes No countermand: no such example have we. Besides, upon the very siege of justice, Lord Angelo hath to the public ear Professor'd the contrary.

[Handy; ready.—Strongly.—Temper; moderate.—Determined.—"Seldom," i.e., seldom is it; it seldom happens.—Perhaps.—Scant.
Enter a Messenger.

Duke. This is his lordship's man.

Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mrs. My lord hath sent you this note:

[giving a paper]

and by me, and this further charge, that you swear not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him.

[Exit Messenger.]

This is his pardon; purchase'd by such sin,

For which the pardoner himself is in:

Hence hath offence his quick celerity,

When it is born in high authority.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,

That for the fault of love is th' offender friend'd.

Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you! Lord Angelo, like thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwarranted putting on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads.] "Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and, in the afternoon, Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me first. I take it as it is duly sent; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."—What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nurs'd up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years' old. Duke. Whom came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliv'red him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprehises for him: and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Why did he not come himself? penitently in prison?

How seems he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come: insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison: give him leave to escape hence, he would not; drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awakened him, as if to carry him to execution, and show'd him a seeming warrant for it: he hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy; if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguil's me; but in the baldness of my cursing I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law, than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite, for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you: if my instructions may be your guide, let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the fault.

Duke. Of death's a great disquieter, and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: you know, the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the Duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the Duke avouch the justice of your dealing.

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my count, integrity, nor my persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go farther than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir; here is the hand and seal of the Duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the Duke: you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure, where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor; perchance, of the Duke's death; perchance, entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd. But not yourself into amazement and how these things should be: all difficulties are easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed, but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Same. Enter Clown.

Clo. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession; one would think, it were mistress Over-done's own house, for hero be many of her old customers. First, here's young Mr. Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds, of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Mr. Caper, at the suit of master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-color'd satin, which now reaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dicy, and young Mr. Deep-you, and Mr. Copper-saur, and Mr. Starve-lackey, the raper and dagger-man, and young

NOTE,—This passage is a great abridgment, and the author could have given us a far better picture of the messengers, than he does. He could have presented a tolerable number of them, and made the scene rich with lively and interesting incidents. As it is, there is a great deal of hurried and forced acting, and the scene is not much to be desired.
Drop-heir that kill'd Lusty Pudding, and Mr. Fortright the tilter, and brave Mr. Shoe-tie the great traveller, and wild Half-cane that stabb'd Pots, and, I think, forty more, all great doers in our trade, and are now in for the Lord's sake.

Enter Arbionso.

Abbor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.
Clo. Mr. Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, Mr. Barnardine.

Abbor. What, ho, Barnardine! Barnar. [Within.] A pox o' your throats! What makes that noise there? What are you? Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

Abbor. Tell him, he must awake, and that quickly too.

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.
Abbor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.
Clo. He is coming, sir, he is coming: I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abbor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?
Clo. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Arbionso? what's the news with you?
Abbor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night: I am not fitted for't.

Clo. O! the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abbor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

You, Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech Look forward on the journey you shall go.

Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you,--

Barnar. Not a word: if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

[Exit.

Enter Provis.

[Re-enter Arbionso and Clowns.

And, to transport him in the mind he is, Were damnable.

Provis. Here in the prison, father, There died this morning of a cruel fever One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudio's years; his beard, and head, Just of his color. What if we do omit This reprobat, till he were well inclin'd, And satisfy the deputy with the visage

* Alluding to the custom of prisoners begging "for the Lord's sake."--Spirituals. -- I, e., remove him from one world to the other.

Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides! Despatch it presently; the hour draws on, Prexid' by Angelo. See, this be done, And plant according to my command, whilsts I persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Provis. This shall be done, good father, presently. But Barnardine must die this afternoon; And how shall we continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come, If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done. -- Put them in secret holds Both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting To 'yonder generation, you shall find Your safety manifested.

Provis. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, despatch, and send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provis.

Now will I write letters to Angelo, (The provost, he shall bear them) whose contents Shall witness to him, I am near at home, And that by great injuctions I am bound To enter publickly: him I'll desire To meet me at the consecrated fount, A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced' form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provis.

Provis. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return, For I would commune with you of such things, That want no ear but yours.

Provis. I'll make all speed. [Exit Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here! Duke. The tongue of Isabell--She's come to know, If yet her brother's pardon be come hither; But I will keep her ignorant of her good, To make her heavenly comforts of despair, When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. Ho! by your leave. [Laughter.

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon? Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabell, from the world. His head is off, and sent to Angelo.

Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other. [ Catching her.

Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience. Isab. O! I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabell! 4Perjurious world! Most damned Angelo! Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot: Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven. Mark what I say to you, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verity. The day comes home to-morrow:--nay, dry your One of our convent, and his confessor, Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried Notice to Escalio and Angelo, Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, [Wisdom There to give up their power. If you can, pace your In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honor.

4Dally (from the French journalier).--I, e., the antipoetes. Information.--II, Direct. -- I, e., your heart's desire; your wish.
Enter Lucio. Good even.

Friar. Where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella! I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to't. But, they say, the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

[Going]

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee. I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

[Going]

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end. If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of bumb; I shall stick.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escalus. Every letter he hath writ hath a disvouch'd other. Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver Our authorities there?

Escalus. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we proclaim it an hour before his entering, That if any crave redress of injustice, They should exhibit their petitions In the street?

Escalus. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter,

Which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter, then, to friar Peter give; 'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:

Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours I'll peremptorily withal, and he shall bring you Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self, I am confined by a sacred vow.

And shall be absent. b Wond you with this letter.

Command these fretting waters from your eyes

With a light heart: trust not my holy order,

If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even.

Friar, where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella! I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to't. But, they say, the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

[Going]

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee. I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

[Going]

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end. If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of bumb; I shall stick.

[Exit.]

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaim'd:

Betimes 't the morn, I'll call you at your house.

Give notice to such men of sort and suit,

As are to meet him.

Escalus. I shall, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ang. Good night.

This deed unshames me quite, makes me unpregnant,

And dull to all proceedings. A deflowered maid,

And by an eminent body, that enforc'd

The law against it!—But that her tender shame

Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,

[no; How might she tongue me! Yet reason 'dares her:

For my authority bears such a credent bulk

That no particular scandal once can touch,

But it confounds the slanderer. He should have liv'd,

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge,

For so receiving a dishonor'd life

With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv'd! Alack! when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke, in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me.

[Giving 6them.] The provost knows our purpose, and our plot.
The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to your special drift,
Though sometimes you do 'blench from this to that,
As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notice Unto Valentinus, Rowland, and to Crassus,
And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;
But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well. [Exit Peter.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste.

Come, we will walk: there's other of our friends
Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath:
I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part; yet I'm advis'd to do it,
He says, to 'vauntful purpose.

Mari. Be rul'd by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side,
I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic,
That's bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would, friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come; I have found you out a stand most fit,
Where you may have such vantage on the duke,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets
The generous and grave citizens oundsoundsend Have 'chent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is ent'ring: therefore hence, away.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public Place near the City Gate.

Mariana, (voile'd,) Isabella, and Peter, at a distance. Enter at several doors, Duke, Varrius, Lords; Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Officers, and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met.—Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you. Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both. We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, For running more a requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater. Duke. Of your desert speaks loud; and I should To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, [wrong it, When it deserves with characters of brass A fortified residence against the tooth of time, And raze of oblivion. Give me your hand, And let the subject see, to make them know That outward courtesies would fail proclaim Favors that keep within.—Come, Escalus; You must walk by us on our other hand, And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward. F. Peter. Now is your time. Speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! [Vail your regard 1 Knelling. Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid! O worthy prince! dishonor not your eye By throwing it on any other object, Till you have heard me in my true complaint, And given me justice, justice, justice, justice! Duke. Relate your wrongs: in what? by whom? Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice: [Be brief. Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. Duke, O, worthy duke! 2 Rising. You bid me seek redemption of the devil, Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being believ'd, Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O, hear me, here! 3 Knelling again. Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm: She hath been a suitor to me for her brother, Cut off by course of justice.

Isab. Duke, By course of justice! 4 Rising. Ang. And she will speak most bitterly, and strangely.

Isab. 5 Most strangely, yet most truly, will I speak. That Angelo's forsown, is it not strange? That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange? That Angelo is an adulterous thief, An hypocrite, a virgin-violator, Is not strange, and strange! Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange. Isab. Duke, It is not truer he is Angelo, Than this is all as true as it is strange: Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth To th' end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her.—Poor soul! She speaks this in th' infinitness of sense. Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st There is another comfort than this world, That thou neglect me not, with that opinion

That Jilt touch'd with madness: make not impossible That which but seems unlike. 'Tis not impossible, But one, the wicked' st castiff on the ground, May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute, As Angelo; even so may Angelo, In all his dressing, characters, titles, forms, Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince: If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more, Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, as I believe no other, Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O, gracious duke! Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason For '2 incredulity; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear, where it seems hid, And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many are not mad, Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio, [say] Condemn'd upon the act of fornication To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo. I, in probation of a sisterhood, Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio As then the messenger.—

Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace. I came to her from Claudio, and desist'd her To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo, For her poor brother's pardon.

Duke. That's he, indeed. Isab. Duke, You were not bid to speak. Lucio. No, my good lord; Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then: Pray you, take note of it; and when you have A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honor. Duke. The warrant's for yourself: take heed to it. Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale. Lucio. Right. Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went To this porocious, Caitiff deputy. Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it: The phrase is to the matter. Duke. Mended again: the matter?—Now proceed. Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by, How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd, How he 'refus'd me, and how I replied, (For this was of much length) the vile conclusion I now begin with grief and shame to utter. He would not, but by gift of my chaste body To his concupiscible temperate heart, Release my brother; and, after much debate, My sisterly remorse confutes mine honor, And I did yield to him. But the next morn betimes, His purpose surfet'ing, he sends a warrant For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely. Isab. O, that it were as like, as it is true! Duke. By heaven, fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speakest.
SCENE 1.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honor,
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish: next, it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself,
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on:
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'st here to complain.

Duke. And is this all?

Then, O! you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time,
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up [woe,
In 8 countenance.—Heaven shield your grace from
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!

Duke. I know, you'd fain be gone.—An officer!
To prison with her.—Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?

Tab. One that I would were here, friar Lodowick.

Duke. A ghostly father, belike.—Who knows that Lodowick?

Lucio. My lord, I know him: 'tis a meddling friar;
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace.
In your retirement, I had 8 w'd him soundly.

Duke. Words against me? This a good friar, belike.
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute!—Let this friar be found.

Lucio. But yestreen, my lord, she and that friar
I saw them at the prison. A saucy friar,
A very scurv'y fellow.

F. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abus'd. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less.

Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?
F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurv'y, nor a temporary 7 meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my 1 truth, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, mariorp your grace.

Lucio. My lord, most villainously: believe it.
F. Peter. Well; he in time may come to clear himself.
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his 4 more request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear,
Whensoever he's convenient. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So 8 vulgarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you hear disproved to your eyes,
 Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.

[ISABELLA is carried off guarded; and MARIANA comes forward.

Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?—
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!—
Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial: be you judge
Of your own cause.—Is this the witness, friar?

First, let her show her face, and after speak.
Mari. Pardon, my lord, I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. Are you a maid?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. A widow then?
Mari. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you
Are nothing then: neither maid, widow, nor wife?
Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk: for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. [cause Duke. Silence that follow: I would, he had some
To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;
And, I confess, besides, I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows not
That ever he knew me.

Lucio. He was drunk then, my lord: it can be no better.

Duke. For the benefit of silence, 'twould thou wert so too!

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Duke. This is no witness for lord Angelo.
Mari. Now I come to't, my lord.
She that accuses him of fornication,
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband;
And charges him, my lord, with such a time,
When, I'll depose, I had him in mine arms,
With all th' effect of love.

Ang. Charges she more than me?

Mari. Not that I know.

Duke. No? you say, your husband.

Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks, he knows, that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows, he thinks, that he knows Isabella's.

Ang. This is a strange abuse.—Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me; now I will unmask.

[Unveiling.

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once, thou'swert, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine: this is the body
That took away the match from Isabella,
And did supply thee at thy 'garden-house
In her imagin'd person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Lucio. Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more.

Lucio. Enough, my lord.

Ang. My lord, I must confess, I know this woman;
And five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her, which was broke off;
Partly, for that her promised proportions
 Came short of composition; but, in chief,
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity: since which time of five years
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honor.

Mari. Noble prince, 1 [Kneeling.
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath,
As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife, as strongly
As words could make up vows: and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone, in's garden-house,
He knew me as a wife. As this is true
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,

1 Summer-house.—Her fortune, which was promised proportionate to mine, fell short of the composition, i. e., contract or bargains.
Duke. Respect to your great place! 2 then let the devil
Be sometime honor’d for his burning throne.—
Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak.
Escal. The duke’s in’s ear, and we will hear you speak:
Look!—you speak justly.
Duke. Boldly, at least.—But, O, poor souls!
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?
Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke’s unjust,
Thus to reject your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain’s mouth,
Which will no sooner come to accuse.
Lucio. This is the racial: this is he I spoke of.
Escal. Why, thou unrenervend and unhallow’d friar!
Is’t not enough, thou hast subst to these women
To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain! And then to glance from him to the Duke himself, to tax him with injustice?—
Take him hence! to the rack with him.—We’ll torture
you.
Joint by joint, but we will know your purpose.—
What! unjust?
Duke. Do not so hot; the duke dare
No more stretch this finger of mine, than he dare rack his own: his subject am I not,
Nor you; no, you; nor three, nor four.
My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o’er-run the stow: laws for all faults,
But faults so countenanced, that the strong stattons
Stand like the forrets in a barber’s shop,
As much in mock as mark.
[prison.
Escal. Shland to the state! Away with him to
Ang. What can you vouch against him, signior?
Is this the man that you did tell us of? [Lucio?
Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord.—Come hither, goodman bald-pate: do you know me?
Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.
Lucio! O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?
Duke. Most notedly, sir.
Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?
Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, are you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.
Lucio. O, thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?
Duke. I protest, I love the duke as I love myself.
Ang. Hark how the villain would 6 gloze now, after his treasonable abuses.
Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk’d withal:—
Away with him to prison.—Where is the provost?
—Away with him to prison. Lay bolls enough upon him; let him speak no more.—Away with those migglets too, and with the other confederate companion.
Duke. Stay, stir; stay a while.
Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; fo’h, sir.

Scene I.

Measure for Measure.

Why, you baid-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? show your knave’s visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang’d an hour. Will’t not off? [Pulling off the Duke’s disguise.

Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e’er made a duke.—[All start and stand.

First, provest, let me bait these gentle three.—Snack not away, sir; [To Lucio.] for the friar and Must have a word anon.—Lay hold on him. [you Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. What have you spoke, I pardon; sit you down. [To Escalus.

We’ll burn place of him:—Sir, by your leave.

[To Angelo.

Hast thou word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

Ang. O, my dread lord! I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath look’d upon my passes. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and 2 sequent death, Is all the grace I beg. Come hither, Mariana.

Say, wast thou e’er contracted to this woman? [ly.

Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.

Do you the office, friar; which consume, Remove him here again.—Go with him, provost.

[Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.

Escal. My lord, I am more amaz’d at his dishonor, Than at the strangeness of it.

Duke. Come hither, Isabel, Your friar is now your prince: as I was then Advertising and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney’d at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ’d and pain’d Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon’d, Isabel: And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother’s death, I know, sits at your heart; And though you may marvel, why I obscur’d myself, Laboring to save his life, and would not rather Make rash demonstration of my hidden power, Than let him so be lost. O, most kind maid! It was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did think with slower foot came on, [him! That 2 brain’d my purpose: but 2 all peace be with That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.

Isab. I do, my lord.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here, Whose 2 suit imagination yet hath wrong’d Your well-defended honor, you must pardon For Mariana’s sake. But, as he adjug’d your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation Of sacred chastity, and of promise-break, Thereon dependent, for your brother’s life,) The very mercy of the law cries out Most audible, even from his 2 proper tongue, “An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!”

Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure, Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure. Then, Angelo, thy fault’s thus manifested, [tage.

Which, though thou would’st deny, denies thee — We do condemn thee to the very block [haste. — Where Claudio stoop’d to death, and with like Away with him.

Mari. O, my most gracious lord! I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock’d you with a husband. Consenting to the safeguard of your honor, I thought your marriage fit; else imputation, For that he knew you, might reproach your life, And choke your good to come. For his possessions, Although by confiscation they are ours, We do instate and 2 widow you withal, To buy you a better husband.

Mari. O, my dear lord! I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never crave him: we are 2 definitive. [Kneeling.

Mari. Gentle my liege, —

Duke. You shall but lose your Provost. Away with him to death.—Now, sir, [To Lucio.] to you. [part:

Mari. O, my good lord! — Sweet Isabel, take my Lend me your knees, and all my life to come, 2’l lend you all my life to do you service. [Duke. Against all 2 sense you do importune her: Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact, Her brother’s ghost his paved bed would break, And take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me: Hold up your hands, say nothing, I’ll speak all. They say, best men are moulded out of faults, And, for the most, become much more the better For being a little bad: so may my husband, O, Isabel! will you not lead a knee? Duke. He dies for Claudio’s death.

Isab. Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling. Look, if it please you, on this man condem’d, As if my brother liv’d. I partly think, A due sincerity govern’d his deeds, Till he did look on me: since it is, Let him not die. My brother had but justice, In that he did the thing for which he died: For Angelo, His act did not o’ertake his bad intent; And must be buried but as an intent That perish’d by the way. Thoughts are no subjects, Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit’s unprofiable: stand up, I say.— [They rise.

I have bethought me of another fault. — Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?

Prov. No, my good lord: it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office: Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord: I thought it was a fault, but knew it not, Yet did repent me, after more 2 advice;

"Following," Consummated; completed. — Adventuring and holy," i.e., attentive and faithful. — Generous, i.e., pardon us, as we have pardoned you. — "Brain’d," i.e., thwarted. — Salacious; lecherous.

"Own. — i.e., "To deny which will swallow thee nothing." —

Endow. — Positive. — "Against all sense," i.e., against reason and affection. — "In mercy of this fact," i.e., bequeathing mercy for this deed, the execution of Claudio. —

"More advice," i.e., more mature reflection.
For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?

Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou had'st done so by Claudio.
Go fetch him hither: let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.

Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.

Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure;
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death mere willingly than mercy:
'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, Barnardine, Claudio (muffled), and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man.—
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no farther than this world,
And squar'st thy life according. Thou'rt condemned;
But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come.—Friar, advise him:
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's that?

Prov. This is another prisoner that I sav'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Unmuffles 3 him.

Duke. If he be like your brother, [To Isabella,] for his sake,
Claudio and Isabella embrace.

Is he pard'nd; and for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.
By this lord Angelo perceives he's safe:
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye.—
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well: [exyours.—
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth

I find an apt remission in myself,
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.—
You, sirrah, [To Lucio,] that knew me for a fool, a
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman: [coward,
Wherein have I so well reserv'd of you,
That you extol me thus?

Lucio. 'Tis, faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the 'trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.

Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after.—
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
If any woman's wronged by this lewd fellow,
(As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child) let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me with a whore! Your highness said even now I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.

Duke. Upon mine honor, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a prince deserves it.—
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.—
Joy to you, Marianna!—love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.—
Thanks, good friend Esclus, for thy much goodness:
There's more behind that is more gratuitous.
Thanks, provost, for thy care, and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:
Th' effence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.
[Exeunt all.

4 Incontinence.—Thougthless practice.—Punishments.
5 More gratuitous; I, e., more to be rejoiced in.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

DRAVATIS PERSONAE.

Solinus, Duke of Ephesus.
^Egeon, a Merchant of Syracuse.
Antipholus of Ephesus, 1 Twin Brothers, Sons to Antipholus of Syracuse, 2 ^Egeon and ^Emilia.
Dromio of Ephesus, 3 Twin Brothers, Attendants.
Dromio of Syracuse, 4 on the two Antipholuses.
Balthazar, a Merchant.
Angelo, a Goldsmith.
A Merchant, friend to Antipholus of Syracuse.
Pinch, a Schoolmaster.
^Emilia, Wife to ^Egeon.
Adriana, Wife to Antipholus of Ephesus.
Luciana, her sister.
Lucce, 5 Servant to Adriana.
A Courtezan.
Jailor, Officers, and other Attendants.
SCENE, Ephesus.

ACT II—Scene 2.

Enter Solinus, Duke of Ephesus, ^Egeon, a Merchant of Syracuse, Jailor, Officers, and other Attendants.

^Ege. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more.
I am not partial, to infringe our laws;
The cunty and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have sent'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy sedulous countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more, if any, born at Ephesus,
Be seen at^Egeon's mart and fairs;
Again, if any Syracusan born

Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies;
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore, by law thou art condemn'd to die, [done,

^Ege. Yet this my comfort; when your words are My woes end likewise with the evening sun.

Duke. Well, Syracusan; say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departest from thy native home,
And for what cause thou canst to Ephesus.

^Ege. A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than 1 to speak my griefs unspeakable;
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by 6 fortune, not by vile offence,
I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracuse was I born; and wod
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap been bad.
With her I liv'd in joy: our wealth increas'd,
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum; till my factor's death,
And the great care of goods at random left
Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old,
Before herself (almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear)
Had made provision for her following me,
And soon, and safe, arrived where I was.
There had she not been long, but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguishing but by names.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman and importune, I,
Of such a burden, made twins, both alike.
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed. Alas, too soon we came aboard!
A league from Ephialdamus had we sail'd,
Before the always-wind-obeying deep,
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscure light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which, though myself would gently have embrac'd,
Yet fear instilling the want weeping of dire news,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That mou'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
For'd me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was,—for other means were none.—
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us.
My wife, more careful for the horn-born,
Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for storms
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.
The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,
Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obelisk to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispers'd those vapors that offended us,
And by the benefit of his wish'd light
The seas was calm, and we discovered
The ships from far making amain to us.
Of Corinth that, of Epidamnum the like,
But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man; do not break off so,
For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily term'd them merciless to us!
For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter'd by a mighty rock,
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst;
So that in this unjust divorce of us
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for.
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdensome
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind,
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length another ship had seiz'd on us;
And knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave healthful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;
And would have sent the fishers of their prey,
SCENE I.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lighten my humor with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

 Merc. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. *Soon at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet you upon the mart,
And afterwards *consort you till bed-time:
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell then. I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city.

 Merc. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content, Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, *confounds himself:
So I, to find a mother, and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanack of my true *date,—
What now? How chance thou art returned so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too
The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit, *late.
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell;
My mistress made it one upon my cheek;
She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold, because you come not home;
You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But, we, that know what *tis to fast and pray,
Are *penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir. Tell me this, I pray;
Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. Of *sixpence, that I had o' Wednesday last
To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper.
The saddler had it, sir; I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humor now.
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how dar'at thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner.
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed,
For she will score your fault upon my pate.
Methinks, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come; these jests are out of season:
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir! why you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave; have done your foolishness,
And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart
Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner.
My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money,
Or I shall break that merry *dance of yours,
That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd.
Where is the thousand marks thou had'st of me?

* Soon st*; i.e., about.— * Accompany. — * Lose. — * The almanack of my true date," i.e., because he and Dromio were both born in the same hour.— * Are penitent," i.e., are doing penance.— * Head.

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate;
Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both.
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance you 'would not bear them patiently.

Ant. S. The mistress' marks! what mistress, slave, last thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner,
And prays that you will have you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou *flout me thus upon my face,
Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.

[Strikes him.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands.
Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

[Exit 2 running.

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other
The villain is *o'er-raft of all my money.
They say, this town is full of cozenage;
As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
Disguised cheats, praying mountebanks,
And many such like *libertines of sin:
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I'll to the Dromio, to go seek this slave:
I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus, and Luciana her sister.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master?
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the door he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.
A man is master of his liberty:
Time is their master; and, when they see time,
They'll go, or come: if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty thus ours be more?
Luc. Because their business still lies out of door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.
Luc. O! know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.
Luc. Why, head-strong liberty is lash'd with woe.
There's nothing situate under heaven's eye,
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their masters' subjects, and at their controls.
Men, most divine, the masters of all these.
Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,
Indulged with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then, let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.
Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.
Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway.

Luc. Erô I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

* Mock; insult.— * Overreached.— " The " Centaur" was the sign of the inn where he was entertained.— * i.e., woe is the punishment of headstrong liberty.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

ACT II.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where? Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience unmoved, no marvel though she pause;

They can be meek, that have no other cause.

A wretched soul, bruised with adversity,

We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;

But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,

As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:

So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,

With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve me;

But if thou live to see like right bereft,

This fool-begg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try,—

Here comes your man: now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand? Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? Know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay; he told his mind upon mine ear.

Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so? doubly, thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubly, that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I pr'ythee, is he coming home?

It seems, he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain!

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he is stark mad.

When I desist'd him to come home to dinner,

He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold:

'Tis dinner-time, quoth I; my gold, quoth he:

Your meat doth burn, quoth I; my gold, quoth he:

Will you come, quoth I? my gold, quoth he:

Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain? The pig, quoth I, is burnt; my gold, quoth he:

My mistress, sir, quoth I; hang up thy mistress! I know not thy mistress: cut out on thy mistress!

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

I know, quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistress.

So that my errand, due unto my tongue,

I thank him, I bear home upon my shoulders:

For in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch my master home.

Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home.

For God's sake, send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other

Between you I shall have a holy head.

(Beat. Adr. Hence, prating peasant! fetch thy master home.)

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me, That like a foot-ball you do spurn me thus?

You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither: of I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

[Exit.

Luc. Fie, how impatient lowreth in your face!

Adr. His company must do his miscreants grace,

Whilst I at home starve for a receipt, when he hath homely age th'alluring beauty took

From my poor check; then, he hath wasted it:

Are my discourses dull? barren my wit?

If voluble and sharp discourse be marred,

Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard.

Do their gay vestments his affections bate?

That's not my fault; he's master of my state.

What rains are in me, that can be found

By him not rul'd? then, is he the ground

Of my misfortunes? My decayed 8 face

A sunny look of his would soon repair;

But, too unruly dear, he breaks the pale,

And feeds from home: poor I am but his 9 stale.

Luc. Self-harming jealousy!—he! beat it hence.

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispense.

I know his eye doth homage other where,

Or else, what 8 lets it but he would be here?

Sister, you know, he promised me a chain;

Would that alone, alone he would detain,

So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!

I see, the jewel best enamelled

Will lose his beauty: yet though gold 9 hides still,

That others touch, 9 and often touching will

Wear gold; and so man, that hath a name,

But falsehood and corruption doth it shame.

Since that your beauty cannot please his eye,

I'll weep what's left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out.

By computation, and mine host's report,

I could not speak with Dromio, since at first

I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir! is your merry humor alter'd?

As you love strokes, so jest with me again.

You know no Centaur? You receive gold no?

Your mistress seat to have me home to dinner?

My house was at the Phoenix! Wast thou mad,

That thus so madly didst answer me? [word

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,

Home to the Centaur; with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou disd'nest the gold's receipt,

And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner;

For which, I hope, thou felt'st at I was displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein.

What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Ye, dost thou jest, and flout me in the teeth!

Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

[Drownings him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! now your jest

Upon what bargain do you give it me? [is earnest:

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your sauciness will jest upon my love,

And make a common of my serious hours.

When the sun shines let foolish grates make sport,

But creep in wrens within my gilded beams.

If you will jest with me, 9 know my aspect,

And fashion your demeanor to my looks,

9.a "Some other where," i.e., somewhere else. The meaning is, "If your husband start in pursuit of other women?"—b "Though she pause," i.e., though she be quiet.—c "No other cause," i.e., no cause to be otherwise.—d "Idiotic.—e "Stand under."—f "Round" is unpleasant: Dromio uses the word in a double sense, alluding to the football.

9.a "Defeats," i.e., change of features; loss of comeliness.—b "Fruitful fair,"—c "Stale," i.e., cast-off favorite.—d "Hinders," i.e., that he would keep the chain alone from me.—e "And" is used here, probably, for an.—f "I, i.e., intrude on those when you please. —g "Know my aspect," i.e., study my countenance.
Or I will beat this method in your scence.
Dro. S. Scence, call you it? so you would have battering, I had rather have it a head: as you use these blows long, I must get a 9scence for my head, and inscense it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?
Ant. S. Dost thou not know?
Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.
Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?
Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.
Ant. S. Why, first,—for flattering me; and then, wherefore,—for urging the second time to me.
Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season, [rhyme nor reason]—Whom, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither Well, sir, I thank you.
Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something, that you gave me for nothing.
Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, 'tis not for nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner time?
Dro. S. No, sir; I think, the meat wants that I love.
Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that?
Dro. S. Basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.
Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.
Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lest it make you choleric, and purchase me another dry basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: there's a time for all things.
Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.
Ant. S. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being it so plentiful an inexhaustible thing?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath scantled men in hair, he hath given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairyn men plain dealers, without wit.
Dro. S. The plain dealer, the sooner lost: yet he lost it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?
Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.
Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure one of them.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing b failing.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.
Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, e'en no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bauld, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bauld followers.
Ant. S. I knew, 'twould be a bald conclusion. But soft! who 'wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange, and frown: Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects, I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

Dro. S. Thus was the time once; when thou urm'dst wouldst vow That never words were music to thine ear, That never objects pleasing in thine eye, That never touch well welcome to thy hand, That never meat sweet-savor'd in thy taste, Unless I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or carv'd.
How comes it now, my husband, O! how comes it, That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me, That, unoblivious, incorporate, Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me; For know, my love, as easy may'st thou fall A drop of water in the breaking gulph, And take unmind'd thence that drop again, Without addition or diminishing; As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How clearly would it touch thee to the quick, Should'st thou but hear I were licentious, And that this body, consecrate to thee, By ruffling lust should be contaminate!
Would'st thou not spit at me, and spurn at me, And hurl the name of husband in my face, And tear the stain'd skin off my hard-brow, And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring, And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou can'st; and therefore, see, thou do it.
I am possess'd with an adulterate blot; My blood is mingled with the crime of lust: For, if we two be one, and thou play false, I do digest the poison of thy flesh, Being starved by thy contagion.
Keep thou thy league, and trace with thy true bed, I live unfast'n'd, thou undishonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you in Ephesus I am but two hours old, As strange unto your town, as to your talk; Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd, Want wit in all one word to understand.
You! Luc. Fri, brother! how the world is chang'd with When were you want to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.
Ant. S. By Dromio?
Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows Denied my house for his, me for his wife. [woman?
Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentle-
What is the course and drift of your compact?
Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.
Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.
Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.
Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our names, Unless it be by inspiration?
Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood!
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt;
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine;
Thou art an em, my husband, I a vixen,
Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If I might possess thee from me, it is dross,
Usurping ivy, brier, or idle moss.

What bloody hand, for want ofperforming, with intrusion
Infest thy sap, and live on thy confusion. [theme]

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she means me for her
What, was I married to her in my dream,
Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this?
What error draws our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the 2 proffer'd fulfily;
Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.

Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a sinner.
This is the fairy land: O, splice of spites!
We talk with goblins, owls, and 4 elves and sprites.
If we obey them not, this will ensue,
They'll suck our blood, or pinch us black and blue.

Luc. Why put'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dro. Now, Dro. Dromio, thou art, thou art, thou art not!

Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am I not?
Ant. S. I think thou art, in mind, and so am I.

Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.
Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.

Dro. S. No. I am no ape.

Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.

Dro. N. I put not of thee, and thou shouldest, thou shouldest not!

Luc. Thou art transformed, master, am I not?

Her sober victory, years, and modesty,

And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the doors are made against you.
Be rul'd by me: depart in patience,
And let us to the Tiger all to dinner;
And about evening come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.
If by strong hand you offer to break in,
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposed by the common route,
Against your yet ungauged estimation,
That may with foul intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead:
For slander lies upon succession,
For ever housed, where it gets possession.
Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet,
And, in despite of mish, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Pretty and witty: wild, and yet too, gentle;
There will we dine. This woman that I mean,
My wife (but, I protest, without desert.)
Hath oftentimes upbraided me within:
To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,
And fetch the chain by "this, I know: it's made:
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine;
For there's the house. That chain will I bestow
(Bo it for nothing but to spite my wife)
Upon mine hostess there. Good sir, make haste.
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.
Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.
Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Luciana, and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? Shall I unkink debate
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so 4ruinate?
Or if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth:
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness:
Let not my sister read it in thy eye:
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty:
Apparel vice like virtue's harbiager:
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint:
Be secret-false; what need she be acquainted?
What sin can thief bring of his own attain?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your trust.
And let her read it in thy looks at board:
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of 3credit, that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve,
We in your motion turn, and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again:
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.
'Tis holy sport to be a little 5vain,
When the sweet breath of cattory conquers strife.
Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, I know not,
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,)
Less in your knowledge, and your grace you show not,
Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak:
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, fierce, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth, why labor you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me now?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am I, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more, to you do I incline—
O, train me not, sweet 6mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.
Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will note:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,

[7 Part," i. e, have part.—k Bought and sold," i. e, over-

And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
And, in that glorious supposition, think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die;
Let Love, being light, be drowned if she sink!
Look! What! are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Nay, man; but 'tis none: low, I do not know.
Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight. [night.
Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on
Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Luc. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No;
It is thyself, mine own self's better part;
Mien eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;
My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.
Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life:
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife.
Give me thy hand.
Luc. O, soft, sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good-will. [Exit.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.
Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where run'st thou so fast?
Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio?
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
Dro. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.
Dro. S. I am an ass; I am a woman's man, and besides myself.
Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?
Dro. S. Merry, marry, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.
Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?
Dro. S. Merry, marry, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.
Ant. S. What is she?
Dro. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, an reverence. I have but lean luck in the match, and yet she is a wondrous fat marriage.
Ant. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage?
Dro. S. Merry, marry, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Parnes winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.
Ant. S. What complexion is she of?
Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why? she sweats; a man may to morrow show in the grime of it.
Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.
Dro. S. No, sir; 'tis in grain: Noah's flood could not do it.
Ant. S. What's her name?
Dro. S. Nell, sir; but her name is three quarters, that is, an ell; and three quarters will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?
Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.
Ant. S. What part of her body stands Ireland?
Dro. S. Merry, marry, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bags.
Ant. S. Where Scotland?
Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness, hard, in the palm of the hand.
Ant. S. Where France?
Dro. S. In her forehead; arm'd and reverted, making claim against her 14th heir.
Ant. S. Where England?
Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them: but I guess, it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.
Ant. S. Where Spain?
Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.
Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?
Dro. S. O! sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain, who sent whole armadoes of ear-racks to ballast at her nose.
Ant. S. Where stood Belicia, the Netherlands?
Dro. S. Sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; call'd me Dromio; swore, I was 'assur'd to her: told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amaz'd, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transform'd me to a cart-tail-dog, and made me turn i' the wheel.
Ant. S. Go, hie thee presently post to the road, And if the wind blow any way from shore, I will not harbor in this town to-night. If any bark put forth, come to the mart, Where I will walk till thou return to me. If every one knows us, and we know none, 'Tis time, I think, to trade, pack, and begone.
Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life, So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.
Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here, And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence.
She that doth call me husband, even my soul Dost for a wife abhor; but her fair sister, Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself:
But, lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus?
Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.
Ang. I know it well, sir. Lo! here is the chain. I thought to have ta'en you at the Forcupsing; The chain unfinish'd made me stay thus long.
Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this? Ang. What please yourself, sir: I have made it for you.
Ant. S. Made it for me, sir? I bespoke it not.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importun’d you;
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Persia, and want gliders for my voyage:
Therefore, make present satisfaction,
Or I’ll attach you by this officer.

Ant. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholus;
And, in the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain: at five o’clock,
I shall receive the money for the same.

Ang. Please you, that I walk with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus, 1 from the Courtezean’s.

Off. That labor may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith’s house, go
And buy a rope’s end, that I will bestow [thou
Among my wife and 2 these confederates,
For locking me out of my doors by day.—
But soft, I see the goldsmith.—Get thee gone;
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a-year? I buy a rope? [Exit.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you:
I promis’d 4 me your presence, and the chain,
But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me.
Belike, you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chain’d together, and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humor, here’s the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost 5 carat,
The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion,
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand debted to this gentleman:
I pray you, see him presently discharg’d,
For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish’d with the present money;
Besides, I have some business in the town.
Good signior, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take this chain, and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof:
Perchance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then, you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.
ACT IV.

Dro. S. To Adriana? that is where we din'd,
Where Dowseshel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look'd he or red, or pale if you could, or merry?
What observation madest thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteor's tilted in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him no right.
Adr. He meant, he did me none: the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.
Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he
Luc. Then pleaded I for you.
Adr. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.
Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.
Adr. Did'st speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still:
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and bare,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind,
*Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous, then, of such a one?
No evil lost is wall'd when it is gone.
Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others' eyes were worse.
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk! the purse! swift, now make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?

Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell:
A devil in everlasting garment hath him fell,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel;
*Who knows no touch of mercy, cannot feel;
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;
A wolf, nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;
*And at the back, a shoulder-clapper, one that counter—
The passages and alleys, creeks and narrow lands:
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws the dry-foot well;
*And to do well.
One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to
Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? [the case.

Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is 'rested on Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.

Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well;

But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him, that can I tell.
Will you send him, mistress, redemption? the money in his desk!

Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at;

[Exit Luciana.
That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:—
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?

Adr. What, the chain? [gone;

Dro. S. No, no, the bell. Tie time that I were
It was not, then him, and now the clock strikes one.
Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O yea; if any hour meet a sergeant, 'a turns back for very fear.
*Reason!

Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou
Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth, to season.
Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back 8 any hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio: there's the money, bear it straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.—
Come, sister; I am press'd down with conceit,
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, wearing the chain.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth saluteme,
As if I were their well acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
And show'd me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Laphant sorcerers inhabiting here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for.
What, have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd?

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dest thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but
That Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf-skin that was kill'd for the prodigal: he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.

Dro. S. No! why, 'tis a plain case: he that went,
Like a base-viol, in a case of leather: the man, sir,
That, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob,
And 'rests them: he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance: he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a 'morris-pike.

Ant. S. What, thou mean'st an officer?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band;
One that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, "God give you good rest!"

1 Band, "Conceit," i.e. fanciful conception. — 2 To set up one's rest, signified to be firmly resolved to do a thing. — 3 A "morris-pike" is a Moorish pike, used in the 16th century.

a An allusion to the northern lights, which have the appearance of armies meeting in the sky. — Dry; withered.
* Stigmatical," i.e. stigmatized or marked by nature with deformity. — The lapwing is said to draw pursuers from her nest by crying in other places. See Measure for Measure, Act I. Scene S. — The buff or leather jerkin of the sergeant is called an everlasting garment, because it was so durable. — To run counter, in sportman's phrase, signifies that the hounds, mistaking the course of the game, run backward; to draw dry-foot was to follow the scent or track of the game. There is a quibble upon the word counter, which points at a well-known prison in London, so called. — "Hill" was the cant term for a priory.
Scene IV.
The Comedy of Errors.

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the serjeant to tarry for the hoy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I, And here we wander in illusions.

Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now: Is that the chain, you promis'd me to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoids! I charge thee, tempt me not.

Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?

Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench: and thereof comes that the wenches say, "God damn me," that's as much as to say, "God make me a light wench." It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? we'll merr'd our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, be-speak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil. [supping] Ant. S. Avoid, thou fiend! what tell'st thou me of Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress: I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or for my diamond the chain you promised, And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you. [sail, Dro. E. Fly, Dromio, says the peasant, mistress, thus you know.

[Exeunt Ant. and Dro.

Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself. A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promis'd me a chain: Both one and other he denis me now. The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doors against his way. My way is now, to his house to his, And tell his wife, that being lunatic, He rush'd into my house, and took perforce My ring away. This course I fittest choose, For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.

Scene IV.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and a Jailer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away: I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money, To warrant thee, as I am restor'd for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day, And will not lightly trust the messenger: That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's-end. Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.— How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee lie thee home? Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you. [Beating him.

Jail. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Jail. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain! Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir; that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed: you may prove it by my long ears. I have serv'd him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating; when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am walk'd with it, when I sleep; mis'd with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar's widow her brat; and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along: my wife is coming yonder.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and a schoolmaster called Pinch.

Ant. E. Mistress, respite factum, respect your end, or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, "beware the rope's end." Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad? A'dr. His incivility confirms no less.

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer; Establish him in his true sense again, And I will give you what you were demand.

Luc. Alas, how fery and how sharp he looks! Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear. Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hou'd within this man, To yield possession to my holy prayers, And to thy state of darkness his three straight: I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace! I am not mad.

A'dr. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul! Ant. E. You minion, you; are these your customers? Did this companion with the saffron face Revell and present it at my house today, Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut, And I denied to enter in my house? [home; A'dr. O, husband, God doth know, you din'd at

* Long from frequent pulling.—b "Wont," i. e., is wont, accustomed to. This tremor was scantily thought to be a sure indication of demonic possession.—c "Customers," i. e., familiars; intimates.—o "Companion," a word of contempt, anciently used as we now use fellow.
Where 'would you had remin'd until this time,
Free from these slanders, and this open shame!
Ant. E. Din'd at home! Thou, villain, what say'st thou!
Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.
Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd, and I shut out?
Dro. E. *Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.
Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?
Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.
Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rile, taunt, and scorn me?
Dro. E. *Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn'd
And did not in rage depart from thence!
Dro. E. In verity, you did:—my bones bear witness,
That since have felt the rigor of his rage.
Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?
Pinch. It is no shame: the fellow finds his vein,
And, yielding to him, humors well his frenzy.
[Inc.
Ant. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest
Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you,
By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.
Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you
But, surely, master, not a rag of money.
[might!
Ant. E. Went'st not thus to her for a purse of ducats?
Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.
Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.
Dro. E. God and the rope-maker! now bear me
That I was sent for nothing but a rope!
[woman,
Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possessed:
I know it by their pale and deadly looks.
They must have bound, and laid in some dark room.
Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth
And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?
To-day?
Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.
Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;
But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.
[both.
Adr. Dissembling villain! thou speak'st false in Ant. E. Dissembling harlot! thou art false in all,
And art confederate with a dammed pack.
To make a leathern, alibi scorn of me;
But with these nails I'll pluck out 3 those false eyes,
That would behold in me this shameful sport.
Enter three or four, and bind Antipholus and Dromio.
Adr. O bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.
[him.
Pinch. More company!—the fiend is strong within
Luc. Ah me! poor man, how pale and wan he looks.
Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou jiloth,
I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them
To make a rescue?
Jail. Masters, let him go:
He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.
Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.
Adr. What wilt thou do, thou 4 peevish officer?
Hast thou delight to see a wretched man
Do outrage and displacery to himself?
Jail. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,
The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.
Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee.
Bear me forthwith unto his creditor,
And, knowing how the debt 5 grows, I will pay it.
Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd
Home to my house.—O, most unhappy day!
Ant. E. O, most unhappy trumpet!
Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before an Abbey.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.
Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?
Ang. Of very reverence reputation, sir,
Of infinite, highly belov'd,
Second to none that lives here in the city:
His word might bear my wealth at any time.
Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.
Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck,
Which he foresaw most monstrously to have.
Good sir, draw near! with me, I'll speak to him.
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths so to deny
This chain, which now you wear so openly:
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend;
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
5 Becomes,—Baggage.
SCENE I.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

99

Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day.
This chain, you had of me: can you deny it?

Ant. S. I think, I had: I never did deny it.

Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?

Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear
Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou liv'st [thee].
To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impiate me thus.
I'll prove mine honor and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand. [draw.

Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They Enter ADRIANA, LUCIANA, Courtezen, and Others.

Adr. Hold! hurt him not, for God's sake! he is mad.—
Some get within him; take his sword away.
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a
This is some priory;—in, or we are spoil'd. [harp.

[Exeunt ANTIPHOLUS and DROMIO to the Abbey.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore thron'g you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.

Mer. I am sorry now, that I did not draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad;
And much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.

Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adr. To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Adr. Why, so I did.
Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.

Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.
Abb. Happly, in private.

Adr. And in assemblies too.
Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Adr. It was the copy of our conference.
In bed, he slept not for my urging it;
At board, he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company, I often glanc'd at it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.
Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad:
The venom clamos of a jealous woman
Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems, his sleep's were kind'd by thy railing,
And thereof comes it, that his head is light.
Thou say'st, his meat was suè'd with thy upbraiding:-
Unquiet meals make ill digestions;
Thereof the raging fire of fever bred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st, his sports were hinder'd by thy bravails:
Sweet recreation bar'd, what doth cause,
But the body already dull melancholy?
Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair,
And at her heels a huge infectious troop

Of pale diastematures, and foes to life?
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast.
The consequence is, then, thy jealous fits
Have scar'd th' husband from the use of wits.
Luc. She never reproach'd him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly,—
Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Adr. She did betray me to my own reproof.—
Good people, enter, and lay hold on him.
Abb. No; not a creature enters in my house.

Adr. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.
Abb. Neither: he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labor in essaying it.

Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Dit' his sickness; for it is my office,
And will have no usurper but myself,
And therefore let me have him home with me.
Abb. Be patient; for I will not let him stir,
Till I have us'd the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again.
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Adr. I will not hence, and leave my husband here;
And ill doth beseech your holiness
To separate the husband and the wife.
Abb. Be quiet, and depart: thou shalt not have him.

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Adr. Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise, until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the abbess.

Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I'm sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale,
The place of death and solemn execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.

Ang. Upon what cause?

Mer. To see a reverend Syracuse merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Behended publicly for his offence. [death.

Ang. See, where they come: we will behold it.

Luc. Guide to the duke before he pass the abbey.

Enter DUKE attended; ENEON bare-headed; with the Headman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady:
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

Adr. May it please your grace, Antipholus, my Whom I made lord of me, and all I had, [husband,
To your important letters, this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him,
That desperately he hurried through the street,
(With him his bondman, all as mad as he)
Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.

4 Substitute.—I. e., to bring him back to his senses.—H. Importunate.—3 To take order; i. e., to take measures.
Anon, I 2 was not by what 'strange escape, He broke from those that had the guard of him, And with his mad attendant and himself, Each one with fierce passion, with drawn swords, Met us again, and, madly bent on us, Chas'd us away; till, raising of more aid, We came again to bind them. Then they fled Into this abbey, whither we pursued them; And here the abbess shuts the gates on us, And will not suffer us to fetch him hither. Nor sent him forth, that we may bear him hence. Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command, Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for help. Duke. Long since thy husband serv'd me in my And to thee engag'd a prince's word, fars, When thou didst make him master of thy bed, To do him all the grace and good I could.— Go, some of you, knock at the abbey gate, And bid the lady abbess come to me. I will determine this, before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O mistress, mistress! shift and save yourself. My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the maid's a-row, and bound the doctor, Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire; And ever as it blazed they throw on him Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. My master preaches patience to himself, and the while His man with scurvy's nicks him like a fool; And, sure, unless you send some present help, Between them they will kill the conjurer.

Adr. Peace, fool! thy master and his man are here: And that is false, thou dost report to us.

Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true; I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it. He cri'd for thee, and vows, if he can take you, To search your face, and to disfigure you. [Cryethis.

Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone.

Duke. Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds!

Adr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you, That he is borne about invisible:

Even now he hou'd him in the abbey here, And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke! O! grant Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I besw'rd thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice, Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote, I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio! [there! Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife, That hath abused and dishonor'd me, Even in the strength and height of injury. Beyond imagination is the wrong, That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just. Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me, While she with harlot's festness in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou so?

Adr. No, my good lord: myself, he, and my sister, To-day did dine together. So befal my soul, As this is false he burdens me withal.

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, or sleep on night, But she tells to your highness justly simple truth.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advis'd what I say; Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine, Nor heady-rash provok'd with raging ire, Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman look'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not 5 pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who partook with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porcupine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him: in the street I met him, And in his company, that gentleman, There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down, That this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not; for the which, He did arrest me with an officer. I did obey, and sent my peasant home For certain ducats: he with none return'd. Then fairly I bespeak'd the officer, To bring a person with me to his house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confederates: along with them They brought one Pynch, a hungry lean-face'd villain, A mere anatomy, a mountebank, A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller, A newly-shaven'd, sharp-looking wretch, A living dead man. This pernicious slave, Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer, And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 'twere, out-facing me, Cries out, I was possess'd. Then, altogether They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence, And in a dark and dankish vault at home They left me and my man, both bound together; Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder, I gain'd my freedom, and immediately Ran hither to your grace, whom I beseech To give me ample satisfaction For these deep shames, and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him, That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out With that man had he such a chain of thee, or no? Ang. He had, my lord; and when he ran in here, These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine Heard you confess you had the chain of him, After you first foresaw it on the mart, And, thereupon, I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here, From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls, Nor ever did't thou draw thy sword on me. I never saw the chain, so help me heaven! And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an innate [impeach is this! I think, you all have drank of Circe's cup. If here you house him, here he would have been; If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:— You say, he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying.—Sirrah, what say you? [pine.

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her, there, at the Porcu-Cour. He did, and from my finger snatch'd that ring.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?
Cour. As sure as my life, as I do see your grace.
Duke. Why, this is strange.—Go call the abbes.
I think you are all 3 mated, or stark mad. [Exit an Attendant.]

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a Heply, I see a friend will save my life, [word.
And pay the sum that may deliver me.
Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus,
And is not that your bondman Dromio?
Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir;
But he, I thank him, gaw'd in two my cords:
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.
Æge. I am sure you both of you remember me.
Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you;
For lately we were bound, as you are now.
You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir? [well.
Æge. Why look you strange on me? you know me
Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.
Æge. O! grief hath charm'd me, since you saw me last;
And careful hours, with time's 6 deformed hand,
Have written strange 6 defiances in my face:
But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?
Ant. E. Neither.
Æge. Dromio, nor thou?
Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.
Æge. I am sure thou dost.
Dro. E. Ay, sir; but I am sure I do not;
And whensoever a man denieth, you are now 6 bound to believe him.
Æge. Not know my voice? O, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd 1 my voice, split my poor tongue
In seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untum'd 6 cares?
Though now this 7 grained face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's dizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory,
My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left,
My dull, deaf ears a little use to hear:
All these old witnesses (I cannot err)
Tell me thou art my son Antipholus.
Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.
Æge. But seven years since, in Syracuse, boy,
Thou know'st we parted. But, perhaps, my son,
Thou shams't to acknowledge me in misery.
Ant. E. The duke, and all that know me in the city,
Can witness with me that it is not so,
I ne'er saw Syracuse in my life.
Duke. I tell thee, Syracuse, twenty years
Have I been patron to Antipholus,
During which time he ne'er saw Syracuse.
I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter Abbess, with Antipholus of Syracuse
And Dromio of Syracuse.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much
Adm. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me!
Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other;
And so of these: which is the natural man,
And which the spirit? Who decipher them?
Dro. S. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.
Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio: pray let me stay.
Ant. S. Ægeon, art thou not? or else his ghost?

Dro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?
Abb. Whoever bound him, I will bind his bonds,
And gain a husband by his liberty.—
Speak, old Ægeon, if thou be'st the man
That had a wife once call'd Amelius,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons.
Of these! If thou be'st the same Ægeon, speak,
And speak unto the same Amelius!—
Æge. If I dream not, thou art Amelius.
If thou art she, tell me, where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft?
Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;
But, by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth
By force took Dromio and my son from them,
And me they left with those of Epidamnum.
What then became of them, I cannot tell;
I, to this fortune that you see in me.
Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right
These two Antipholus', these two so like,
And these two Dromios, one in semblance,— Besides 8 his urging of this one's wreck at sea;—
These are the parents to these children,
Which accidentally are met together,
Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first.
Ant. S. No, sir, not I: I came from Syracuse.
Duke. Stay, stand apart: I know not which is which.
Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.
Dro. E. And I with him.
Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.
Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?
Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.
Adr. And are not you my husband?
Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.
Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so;
And this my gentlewoman, her sister here,
Did call me brother.—What I told you then,
I hope, I shall have leisure to make good,
If this be not a dream I see, and hear.
Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.
Ant. S. I think it be, sir: I deny it not.
Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.
Ang. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.
Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,
By Dromio; but I think, he brought it not.
Dro. E. No, none by me.
Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you,
And Dromio, my man, did bring them me.
I see, we still did meet each other's man,
And I was taken for him, and he for me,
And therupon these errors 9 all arose.
Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.
Duke. It shall not need: thy father hath his life.
Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.
Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.
Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains
To go with us into the abbey here.
And hear at large, how you have discovered all our fortunes;
And all that are assembled in this place,
That by this sympathized one day's Error
Have suffered wrong, go, keep us company,
And we shall make full satisfaction.
Twenty-five years have I been gone in travail
Of you, my son; and at this present hour
My heavy burdens are delivered:—
The duke, my husband, and my children both,
And you the 6 calendars of their nativity,

4 The morning story is the story that Ægeon tells the Duke in the first scene of the play.—I. e., the two Dromios.
Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me:
After so long grief such nativity!

_Duke._ With all my heart: I'll gossip at this feast.

_[Exeunt Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtezan, Merchant, Angelio, and Attendants._

_Dro. S._ Master, shall I fetch your stuff from ship board?

_[Burked._

_Ant. E._ Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou em-

_Dro. S._ Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

_[Dromio._

_Ant. S._ He speaks to me.—I am your master,
Come, go with us; we'll look to that anon.
Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him.

_[Exeunt Ant. S. and E., Adr., and Luc._

_Dro. S._ There is a fat friend at your master's house,
That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:
She now shall be my sister, not my wife. _[brother:_
_Dro. E._ Methinks, you are my glass, and not my I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?
_Dro. S._ Not I, sir; you are my elder.
_Dro. E._ That's a question: how shall we try it?
_Dro. S._ We'll draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.
_Dro. E._ Nay, then thus:
We came into the world, like brother and brother;
And now, let's go hand in hand, not one before another _[Exeunt._

SCENE, Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s House.
Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Gentleman.

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Gent. He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Gent. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honor on a young Flor--centine, called Claudio.

Gent. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: he hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle, here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Gent. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Gent. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness. There are no faces truer than those that are so washed: how much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Gent. I know none of that name, lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

¹ "In great measure," i.e., in abundance. ² Montanto was one of the ancient terms of the fencing-school; a title humorously given to one whom she would represent as a bravado. ³ Rank.
Gent. O! he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messinia, and challenged Cupid at the flight; and my uncle's foot, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt.—I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Gent. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had mostly victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man; he hath an excellent stomach.

Gent. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady; but what is he to a man?

Gent. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honorable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man; but for the stuffing,—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left to be known a reasonable creature. —Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Gent. Is't possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.

Gent. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Beat. No; an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Gent. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the tale bears presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cured.

Gent. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Gent. Don Pedro is approached.

Enter Don Pedro, John, Claudio, Benedick, Balthazar, and others.

D. Pedro. Good signior Leonato, are you come to meet your trouble? the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain, but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man.—Truly, the lady fathers herself.—Be happy, lady, for you are like an honorable father.

Leon. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have her shoulders for all Messinia, as like him as she is.

Bene. I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedick: no body marks you.

Bene. What, my dear lady Disdain! are you yet living?

Bene. Is it possible disgrace should die, while she hath such a meet food to feed it, as signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disgrace, if you come in her presence.

Leon. Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women: they would else be more concerned with a pernicious sailor.

Gent. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humor for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a prodestinate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuator. But keep your way o' God's name; I have done.

Bene. You always end with a joke's trick: I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all.—Leonato,—signior Claudio, and signior Benedick,—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month, and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn.—Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace, lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato: we will go together. [Exeunt all but Benedick and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No; I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, if faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her; that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. 105

Claud. Thou think'st, I am in sport: | I pray thee, tell me truly how thou lik'st her.
Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?
Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow, or do you play the floating Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Volcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.
Bene. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, as she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.
Bene. Is't come to this, 't faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion! Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, 't faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look; Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don PEDRO.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?
Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.
Bene. You hear, count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance,— He is in love. With whom?—now that is your grace's part.—Mark, how short the answer is:— with Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor was not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.
D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.
Claud. And in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.
Bene. And by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.
D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.
Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me: I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.
Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks; but that I will have a reckone winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldric, all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for which the I may go the fonder) I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.
Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker's pen, and hang me on the beam of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.
Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that first hits me, let him be chapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

"In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke."

Bene. The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's horns, and set them in my forehead; and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write, "Here is good horse to hire," let them signify under my sign,—"Here you may see Benedick the married man."

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou would'st be born-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.
Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours.
In the mean time, good signior Benedick, repair to Leonato's: commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you—

Claud. To the tuition of God: from my house, if I had it.

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: your loving friend, Benedick.
Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly based on neither: ere you float old ends any farther, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick.

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but
And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn
Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?
D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she's his only heir. Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O! my lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye, That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand, Than to drive liking to the name of love; But now I am return'd, and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying, I lik'd her ere I went to wars—

*"To go," l. e., to join.—"Wear his cap with suspicion," l. e., to affect the head to the disquiet of jealousy.—"A reckone" is a huntsman's blast of the horn, to call off the dogs.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently, and tire the hearer with a book of words. If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it, and I will break with her, and with her father, and thou shalt have her. Wast not to this end, that thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love, that know love's grief by his complexion! But let no liking might to too sudden acme, I would have sal'd it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the fairest ground is the necessity. [The flood? Look, what will serve is fit: 'tis once, thou lovest, and I will fit thee with the remedy. I know we shall have revellng to-night: I will assume the part in some disguise, and tell fair Hero I am Claudio; and in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart, and take her hearing prisoner with the force, and strong encounter of my amorous tale: Then, after, to her father will I break; and, the conclusion is, she shall be thine. In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dream not of.

Leon. Are they good?

Ant. As the event stamps them; but they have a good cover; they show well outward. The prince and count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece, your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?

Ant. A good sharp fellow: I will send for him, and question him yourself.

Leon. No, no: we will hold it as a dream, till it appear itself; but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if perchance this be true. Go you, and tell her of it. [Several persons cross the stage.] Cousins, you know what you have to do. —O! I cry mercy, friend: go you with me, and I will use your skill. —Good cousin, have a care this busy time. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter John and Conrade.

Con. What the good year, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it, therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient sufferance.

John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou sayst thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a mortal medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stom-

Beat. How tardy that gentleman looks: I never can see him, but I am heart-burned an hour after. Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then, half signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, or half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face.

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if a' could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she's too curst.

Beat. Too curst is more than curst: I shall lessen God's sending that way, for it is said, "God sends a curst cow short horns;" but to a cow too curst he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curst, God will send you no horns?

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man; and he that is more than a youth is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: therefore, I will even take sixpence in earnest of the "bearward," and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell?

Beat. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, "Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maid!" so, deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens: he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please you!" but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please me."

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be overmastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clog of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember, what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wo'd in good time: if the prince be too important, tell him, there is 'measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer: for, hear me, Hero; wooling, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first syllable is hot and lisy, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical: the wedding, mannerly, modest, as a measure, full of state and ancietnity; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink 1a-pace into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle: I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother. Make good room!

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthazar; John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and messengers.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favor; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[They enter, Hero and Leon.]

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Bene. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough: you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come: do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the "Hundred merry Tales."—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jestor: a very droll fool, only his gift is in devising impossible slanders:

4 Lover.—I. e, God forbid that your face should be as homely as your mask.—Alluding to the fable of Hecules and Philemon in Ovid.—The name of a jest-book in Shakespeare's time.—4 Incredible.

A A bearward is a keeper of bears.—Important.—A measure, formerly, besides its ordinary meanings, signified also a dance.
none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany, for he both pleases men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him. I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had broke me!

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two of men, which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partidge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Dance. Then, except all but John, Borachio, and Claudio.

John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her, but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

John. Are not you signior Benedick?

Claud. You know me well: I am he.

John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamored on Hero. I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bora. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt John and Borachio.

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick, But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio. 'Tis certain so:—the prince woos for himself. Friendship is constant in all other things, Save in the office and affairs of love: Therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues; Let every eye negotiate for itself, And trust no agent, for beauty is a witch, Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. This is an accident of hourly proof, Which I mistrusted not. Farewell, then, Hero! Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio!

Claud. Peace, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Why not?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, county. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an amurer's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. I pray you, leave me. [Angrily. Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man: turn the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit.

Bene. Alas, poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into sedges.—But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool!—Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry.—Yea; but so I am apt to do myself wrong:

44 Giving me out," I, o., represents me.—The goddess of discord.
SCENE II. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile; and I gave him *use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? Sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil, count, civil as an orange, and something of *1 treason a complexion.

D. Pedro. I'faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won; I have broke with her father, and, his good will will obtained, name the day of marriage. God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it.

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your *2 cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I was but little happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Ye, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care.—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good lord! for alliance thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sunburned: I may sit in a corner, and cry, heigh ho! for a husband.

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your father's getting. Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days: your grace is too costly to wear every day.—But, I beseech you, grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth, and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born.—Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle.—By your grace's pardon.

[Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord: she is never sad, but when she sleeps; and not ever sad then, for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness, and walked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She can not endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O! by no means, she mocks all her wooers out of suit.

D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O lord! my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. County Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claud. To-morrow, my lord. Time goes oncrutch-

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief, too, to have all things answer our mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go duly by us. I will, in the interim, undertake one of Horace's labors, which is, to bring signior Benedick and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other. I would fain have it a match; and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watching.

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefulluest husband that I know. This far can I praise him: he is of a noble *5 strain, of approved valor, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humor your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his *6 uneasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer: his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter JOHN and BORACHIO.

John. It is so: the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yes, my lord; but I can cross it.

John. Any how, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes atwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favor of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

John. I remember.

Bora. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber-window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince, your brother: spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honor in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated estate, such a one as Hero.

*1 A mountain," i. e., a great deal.—Linen.-*2 Squamish; facetious.—*3 An abandoned woman.
John. What proof shall I make of that?
Bona. Proof enough to mislead the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?
John. Only to despite them I will endeavor any thing.
Bona. Go then; find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone; tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; 9 intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio (as in love of your brother’s honor, who hath made this match, and his friend’s reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid) that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances, which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window, hear me call Margaret Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding: for in the mean time I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appear such seeming proofs of Hero’s disposedness, that jealousy shall be called assurance, and all the preparations overthrown.
John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.
Bona. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.
John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

SCENE III.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Benedick, a Boy following.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it either to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.
Bene. I know that; [Exit Boy.] but I would have thee hence, and here again. I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviors to love, will, after he hath laugh’d at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love: and now a man has fallen in love. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife: and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known, when he would have walked ten mile afoot to see a good armor; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain, and to the purpose, like an honest man, and a soldier; and now is turn’d orthographical: his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes! I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I’ll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well: another is wise, yet I am well: another is virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that’s certain; wise, or I’ll none; virtuous, or I’ll never cheapen her; fair, or I’ll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of that color it please God. Ha! the prince and monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbor.

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music? [As. Claud. Yea, my good lord. How still the evening As hush’d on purpose to grace harmony! [self?]

D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself. Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended, We’ll fit the 4-hid-fox with a penny-worth.

Enter Balthazar, with 3 Musicians.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthazar, we’ll hear that song again.
Balth. O! good my lord, tax not so bad a voice To slander music any more than once. D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency, To put a strange face on his own perfection.— I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.
Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing; Since many a woover doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy; yet he wooes, Yet will he swear, he loves.
D. Pedro. Nay, pray thee, come: Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes; There’s not a note of mine that’s worth the notion. D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchetts that he speaks! Note notes, foregoth, and nothing! [Musick. Bene. [Behind.] Now, divine air! now is his soul ravish’d!—Is it not strange, that sheeps’ guts should hale souls out of men’s bodies?—Well, a horn for my money, when all’s done.

THE SONG.

Balth. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more, Men were acheivers ever; One foot in sea, and one on shore, To one thing constant never. Then sigh not so, But let them go, And be you kisthe and bonny, Converting all your sounds of woe Into, Hey nonny, nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo. Or dumbs so dull and heavy; The 3 friends of men were ever so, Since summer first was heary. Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my truth, a good song. Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.
D. Pedro. Ha! no, no: faith, thou singest well enough for a shift.

Bene. [Behind.] An he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hang’d him; and, I pray God, his bad voice bore no mischief! I had as lief have heard the 3-night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yes, marry; dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero’s chamber-window.
Balth. I will do the best I can, my lord.
D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt Balthazar and Musicians.] Come hither, Leonato: what was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?
Claud. [Aside to Pedro.] O! say:—stalk on, stalk on; the fowl sits. [Aloud.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither: but most wonderful, that
SCENE III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviors seemed ever to abhor.

Benc. [Behind.] Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it, but that she loves him with an enraged affection: it is past the infinite of *thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. [Aside.] Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit? There was never counterfeit of passion so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she? [Aside.] Bait the hook well: this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit with you,—you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Benc. [Behind.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow spoaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. [Aside.] He hath ta'en the infection: hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No, and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says:"Shall I," says she, "that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?"

Leon. This says she, now, when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper 3 full.—My daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O!—when she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the 4 sheets?—

Claud. That.

Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand 5 half-peices; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would not flout her:"I measure him," says she, "by my own spirit; for I should flout him, if he writ to me; yea, though I love him, I should."

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobbs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, *cries;—"O, sweet Benedick! God give me patience!"

Leon. She doth indeed: my daughter says so; and the ecstasy hath so much overborne her, that my daughter is sometimes afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself. It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. As he should, it were an *alms-deed to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady, and out of all suspicion she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O! my lord, wisdom and *blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that *blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would, she had bestowed this *dotage on me; I would have *daff'd all other respects, and made half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what 'twill say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die; for she says, she will die if he love her not, and she will die ere she make her love known, and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will *bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well; if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very probable she'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a *contemptible spirit.

Claud. He is a very *proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath, indeed, a good outward *happiness.

Claud. Before God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like Benedick.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear farther of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. [Aside.] If he do not dote upon her on this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. [Aside.] Let there be the same net spread for her; and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's *dotage, and no such matter: that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Exit Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

Benc. [Advancing from the Arbor.] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly *borne.—They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems, her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am cenured: they say, I will hear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her: they say, too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection.—I did never think to marry,—I must not seem proud.—Happy are they that hear their detractors, and can put them to mending. They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can hear them witness: and virtuous; 'tis so, I cannot *reprove it:—

* Fondness.—Daff'd; put aside. — Contemptuous; scornful. — Alms-deed. — Dote. — Elegance; grace. — Contemptible. — Sad- ly borne. — Lord, seriously carried on; — Disprove; refuse.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlor; There shall thou find my cousin Beatrice

*Proposing with the prince and Claudio:
Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula
Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse
Is all of her: say, that thou overheard’st us; And bid her steal into the bower we set up, Where honey-suckles, ripen’d by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like favorites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it.—There will she hide
To listen our purpose. This is thy office; (Her,
Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. I’ll make her come, I warrant you, presently.

[Exit.

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick: When I do name him, let it be thy part
To praise him more than ever man did merit. My talk to thee must be, how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice: of this matter
Is little Cupid’s crafty arrow made,
That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin;

Enter Beatrice, stealing in behind.

For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference. Urs. The pleasantst angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden ears the silver stream,

Conversing.— Platted; interwoven.

And greedily devour the treacherous bait:
So angle we for Beatrice; who even now
Is couched in the woodbine coverture.

Fear you not my part of the dialogue.

Hero. Then go we near her, that here we lose nothing
Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.—
No, truly, Ursula, she is too disadvised; *A loud.
I know, her spirits are as coy and wild
As baggers of the rock.

Urs. But are you sure

That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?

Hero. So says the prince, and my new-crowned lord.

Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it; madam?

Hero. They did intreat me to acquaint her of it; But I persuaded them, if they lov’d Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection;
And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Urs. Why did you so? Doth not the gentleman
Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve
As much as may be yielded to a man;
But nature never fram’d a woman’s heart
Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice:
Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprising what they look on; and her wit
Values itself so highly, that to her
All men else seem weak. She cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-encumbered.

Urs. Sure, I think so; And therefore, certainly, it were not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man, How wise, how noble, young, how purely featured, But she would spell him backward; if fair-fac’d, She’d swear the gentleman should be her sister: If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick, Made a foul blot: if tall, a lance ill-headed:
If low, an agate very vilely cut:
If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds:
If silent, why, a block moved with none.
So turns she every man the wrong side out, And never gives to true truth and virtue That Which simplicity and merit purchase.

Urs. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

Hero. No; not to be so odd, and from all fashions As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable. But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She would mock me into air: Oh! she would laugh me Out of myself, presume to death with wit. Therefore let Benedick, like cover’d fire, Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly: It were a better death than die with mocks, Which is as bad as die with tickling.

Urs. Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say.

Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick, And counsel him to fight against his passion: And only, I’ll devise some honest stouter To stain my cousin with. One doth not know, How much an ill word may empoison liking.

Urs. O! do not do your cousin such a wrong. She cannot be so much without true judgment, (Having so swift and excellent a wit, As is pity’d to have) as to refuse So rare a gentleman as sigior Benedick.

Hero. He is the only man of Italy, Always excepted my dear Claudio.

Urs. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy: sigior Benedick,
SCENE II. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

For shape, for bearing, argument, and valor, Goes foremost in report through Italy.

*Her*o. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name.

Urs. His excellence did earn it ere he had it.— What are you married, madam? —

*Her*o. Why, 's I a day;—to-morrow. Come, go in: I'll show thee some attires, and have thy counsel, Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

[Urs. [Aside.] She's a him'd, I warrant you: we have caught her, madam.]

[Exeunt Hero and Ursula.][Beat. [Advancing.] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu! No glory lives but in the lack of such.

And Benedick, love on: I will requite thee, Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand. If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee To bind our loves up in a holy band; For others say thou dost deserve, and I Believe it better than reporting. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Ped. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vonchaufme me.

D. Ped. Nay; that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirith: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper: for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Benc. Gallants, I am not as I have been. Leon. So say I: methinks, you are sadder.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Ped. Hang him, truant! there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love. If he be sad he wants money.

Benc. I have the tooth-ache.

D. Ped. Draw it.

Benc. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

D. Ped. What! sigh for the tooth-ache?

Leon. Where is but a humor, or a worm?

Benc. Well, everyone one can master a grief, but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. Ped. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, or in the shape of two countries at once; as a German from the waist downward, all slips, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doubt. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o' mornings; what should that bode?

D. Ped. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Ped. Nay, a' rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love.

D. Ped. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he went to wash his face?

D. Ped. Yea, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lustrestring, and now governed by stops.

D. Ped. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him.

Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Ped. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and in despite of all dies for him.

D. Ped. She shall be buried with her face upwards.

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ache.

Old signior, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.][D. Ped. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter John.

John. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. Ped. Good den, brother.

John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Ped. In private?

John. If it please you; yet count Claudio may hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Ped. What's the matter?

John. [To Claudio.] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

D. Ped. You know, he does.

John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.

Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

John. You may think, I love you not: let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think, he holds you well, and is a dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage; surely, suit ill spent, and labor ill bestowed!

D. Ped. Why, what's the matter?

John. I came hither to tell you; and, circumstances shortened, (for she has been too long a talking of) the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who is it? Hero?

John. Even she: Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?
John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness: I could say, she were worse; think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till farther warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, tomorrow we'll her; but it would better fit your honor to change your mind.

Cloud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know. If you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Cloud. If I see anything tonight, why I should not marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where
I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I wroufed for thee to obtain her,
I will join with thee to disguise her.

John. I will disparage her no further, till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day unfortвроrately turned!

Cloud. O mischief strangely thwarting!

John. O plague right well prevented! So will you say, when you have seen the sequel. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Ye, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dog. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbor
Dogberry.

Dog. First, who think you the most desertful man to be constable?

1 Watch. Hugh Oatcake, sir, or George Seacoal, for they can write and read.

Dog. Come hither, neighbor Seacoal. God hath blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favored man is the gift of fortune, but to write and read comes by the hand of God.

2 Watch. Both whicht, master constable.

Dog. You have: I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favor, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore, bear you the lantern. This is your charge. You shall comprehend all vagrom men: you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

2 Watch. How, if n' will not stand?

Dog. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go: and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is hidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk is most tolerable, and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dog. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend; only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How, if they will not?

Dog. Why then, let them alone till they are sober: if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dog. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. We know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dog. Truly, by your office you may; but, I think, you that touch pinch will be defiled. The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, master.

Dog. Dogberry. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will;
much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

2 Watch. How, if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear us?

Dog. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ease that will not hear her lamb when it bates, will never answer a call when he bleats.

Verg. 'Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person: if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay by'r lady, that, I think, a' cannot.

Dog. Five shillings to one on't, with any man who knows the statutes, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By'r lady, I think, he be so.

Dog. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night:
an honest man is but a matter of weight chances, call up me. Keep your follow's counsels and your own, and good night. Come, neighboring.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neighbors. I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great cold to-night. Alidius, be vigilant, I beseech you.

Verg. [Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade!

Watch. [Behind and aside.] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man: I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched: I thought, there would be a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

---

a Dogberry is the name of a shrub very common in England; Verges is the provincial pronunciation of sorjuice.

b "Billy" were a species of axe carried by watchmen.

c "This charge is doubtless a satire upon the police regulations of London, entitled "Statutes of the Streets."—D. Buste;
"Thus, in the true drunkard." Borachio quibbles upon his own name, which in Spanish signifies a drunkard.
SCENE IV.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou should'lt rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed. Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a coat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say, the fool's the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside.] I know that Deformed; a has been a vile thief this seven year: a goes up and down like a gentleman. I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No: 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? I mean, didst thou not hear about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the 6reechy painting; sometime, like god Bel's priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the 'smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as maesy as his chaps.

Con. All this I see, and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither; but know, that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero: she leans me out at her mistress' chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night.—I tell this tale viley:—I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil, my master, knew she was Margaret, and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; aware he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. [Coming forward.] We charge you in the prince's name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here received all the dangerous piece of lechery, that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him, a wears a lock.

Con. Masters, masters!

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

1 Watch. Never speak: we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bora. We are like to prove a godly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit Ursula.

Marg. Troth, I think, your other 'mbato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another. I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new 'tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, i' faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.

Hero. O! that exceedeth, they say.

Marg. By my troth, it's but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o' gold, and cuts, and laced with silver, set with pearls down the sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts round, under-borne with a bluish tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten oun'.

Hero. Go, give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honorably? Is not marriage honorable in a beggar? Is not your lord honorable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence, a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend no body. Is there any harm in the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: ask my lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.

Hero. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap us into—"Light o' love!" that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

Beat. Yes, "Light o' love," with your heels! then, if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg. O, illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill.

—Heigh ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

---

*"Unconfirmed," i. e., unpractised in the ways of the world.—"Roochary," i. e., rooky; discolored by smoke.—Sailed.

4 A quibble upon the word bills, which was sometimes used in the sense of bond.—"" In question," i. e., on examination or trial.—"Barns," a kind of ruff,—"Broom-dress," i. e., "Side sleeves" were long or full sleeves.—Nasty pretty.—*"Light o' love" was the name of an old dance-tune.—*A quibble between barns and bairns (children).
Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.
Morg. Well, an you be not turned Turk, there’s no more salting by the star.
Beat. What means the fool, trow ?
Morg. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart’s desire!

Hero. These gloves the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.
Beat. I am stufed, cousin; I cannot smell.
Morg. A maid, and stufed! there’s goodly catching of cold.
Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you profess’d apprehension?
Morg. Ever since you left it. Doth not my wit become me rarely?
Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap.—By my troth, I am sick.
Morg. Get you some of this distilled carduus benedictus, and lay it to your heart: it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prick’st her with a thistle.
Beat. Benedicts! why benedicts? you have some moral in this benedictus.
Morg. Moral! no, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy-thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love: nay, by’r lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list; nor I list not to think what I can; nor, indeed, I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love. Yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man: he swore he would never marry; and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging: and how you may be converted, I know not, but, methinks, you look with your eyes, as other women do.
Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?
Morg. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw: the prince, the count, signor Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbors?
Dobg. Marry, sir; I would have some confidence with you, that decency you near you.
Leon. Brief, I pray you; for, you see, it is a busy time with me.
Dobg. Marry, this it is, sir.
Leon. Yes, in truth it is, sir.
Dobg. What is it, my good friends?
Dobg. Goodman Verges, sir, thanks a little off the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.
Leon. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living; that is an old man, and no honeeter than I.

Dogb. Comparisons are odorous: plobaras, neighbors.
Leon. Neighbors, you are tedious.

---

Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke’s officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me! ha!

Dogb. Yea, an ‘t Vive a thousand pound more than ‘tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, of any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship’s presence, have ta’en a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Dogb. A good old man, sir; he will be talking: as they say, when the age is in, the wit is out. God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, i’faith, neighbor Verges:—well, God’s a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind.—An honest soul, i’faith, sir: by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but, God is to be worshipped: all men are not alike; alas, good neighbor!

Leon. Indeed, neighbor, he comes too short of you.

Dogb. Gifts, that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogb. One word, sir. Our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two auspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogb. It shall be sufficiency.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go. Fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I’ll wait upon them: I am ready.

Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogb. Go, good partner, go; get you to Francis Seacon: bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail: we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogb. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here’s that shall drive some of them to a now core; only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the jail.

Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, John, Leonato, Friar, Claudio, Benedick, Hero, Beatrice, &c.

Leon. Come, friar Francis, be brief: only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impedi-

---
Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.
Hero. Is it not Hero! Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?
Claud. Marry, that can Hero:
Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.
Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.
D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maid—.Leonato,
I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honor,
Myself, my brother, and this grieved count,
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window;
Who hath, indeed, most like a libelvn villain,
Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.
John. Fie, fie! they are not to be nam'd, my lord,
Not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. 'Thou pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
Claud. O Hero! what a Hero haddst thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been plac'd
About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!
But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou pure simplicity, and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eye-lids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.
Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?
[Hero swoons.
Beat. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?
[light.
John. Come, let us go. These things, come thus to Smother her spirits up.
[Exeunt Don PEDRO, JOHN, and CLAUDIO.
Bene. How doth the lady?
Beat. Dead, I think:—help, uncle!—
Hero! why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedick!—
I am friar!
Leon. O fate! take not away thy heavy hand:
Death is the fairest cover for her shame,
That may be wish'd for.
Beat. How now, cousin Hero?
Friar. Have comfort, lady.
Leon. Dost thou look up?
Friar. Yea; wherefore should she not?
Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
That story that is printed in her blood?—
Do not live, Hero; do not one thine eyes;
For did I think thou wouldest not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shame,
Myself would, on the hazard of reproaches,
Strike at thy life. Griev'd I, I, had but one Child I for that at frugal nature's down?
O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates;
Who so smirched thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have said, "No part of it is mine,
This shame derives itself from unknown lords?"
But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,
And mine that I was proud on; mine so much,
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her; why, she—O! she is fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again,

* A quotation from the "Accidence." —Lascivious. —Licentious. —So wide,‖ i.e., so remotely from the business in hand. —Prostitute. —Natural.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT IV.

And salt too little, which may season give
To her soul-tainted flesh!

Bene. Sir, sir, be patient.

For my part, I am so attir'd in wonder,
I know not what to say.

Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied!

Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Beat. No, truly, not; although, until last night,
I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow. [made Leu. Confirm'd, confirm'd? O, that is stronger
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron
Would the two princes lie? and Claudio lie,
Who lov'd her so, that, speaking of her foulness,
Wash'd it with tears? Hence! from her; let her die.

Friar. Hear me a little;
For I have only been silent so long,
And given way unto this 2 crosses of fortune,
By noting of the lady: I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames,
In angel whiteness, beat away those blusses;
And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire,
To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth.—Call me a fool; Trust not my reading, nor my observation,
Which with experimental sooth doth warrant
The tenor of my book; trust not my age,
My reverend calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some blighting error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be.

Thou seest, that all the grace that she hath left,
Is, that she will not add to her damnation
A sin of perjury: she does not deny it.
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness?

Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?

Hero. They know, that do accuse me: I know none.

If I know more of any man alive,
Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,
Let all my sins lack mercy—I, O, my father!
Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death. [princes.

Friar. There is some strange misprision in the Bene. These of them have the very bent of honor;
And if their wisdoms be misled in this,
The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in fraud and villanies.

Leon. I know not. If they speak but truth of her,
These hands shall bear her: if they wrong her honor,
The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life reft me so much of friends,
But they shall find, awak'd in such a cause,
Both strength of limb, and policy of mind,
Ability in means, and choice of friends,
To quit me of them thoroughly.

Friar. Pause a while,
And let my counsel sway you in this case.
Your daughter, here, the princes left for dead;
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed:
Maintain a mourning ostentation;
And on your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

Let us What of this? What will this Friar. Marry, this, well carried, shall on her behalf Change slander to remorse; that is some good:
But not for that dream I on this strange course,
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Upon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lumented, pitied and excused
Of every hearer; for it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
While we enjoy it, but being lost and lack'd,
Why, then we crack the value; then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us,
Whiles it was ours.—So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination,
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
More moving, delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she liv'd indeed:—then shall he mourn
(If ever love had interest in his liver)
And wish he had not so accuses her;
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let him be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event that in better hope,
Than I can lay it down in likeliness.
But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some exclusive and religious life.
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though you know, my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honor, I will deal in this
As secretly and justly, as your soul
Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. 'Tis well consented: presently away,
For to strange sorely strangely they strain the Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, [cure."
Perhaps, is but prolong'd: have patience, and endure. [Exeunt Friar, Hero, and Leonato.
Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?
Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
Bene. I will not desire that.
Beat. You have no reason; I do it freely.
Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is Wronged.
Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me
That would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?
Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.
Bene. May a man do it?
Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.
Bene. I love nothing in the world so well as you.
Is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It
Were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you; but believe me not, and yet I lie not: I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing.—I am sorry for my cousin.
Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.
Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.
Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.

* "Rock," i. e., raise to the utmost.—* "Upon," i. e., by; upon the occasion of.—* "The litter was actually supposed to be the seat of love.—* "I. e., than I can make it appear probable,—* intimacy.
Scene II. Much Ado About Nothing.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest, I love thee.
Beat. Why then, God forgive me!
Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?
Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest, I loved you.
Bene. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.
Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.
Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.
Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here: there is no love in you. — Nay, I pray you, let me go.
Bene. Beatrice.
Beat. In faith, I will go.
Bene. We'll be friends first.
Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.
Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?
Beat. He is not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, scornd, dishonored my kinswoman? — O, that I were a man! — What! bear her in chaste? that I come to take hands, and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmigliated rancor, — O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.
Bene. Hear me, Beatrice—
Beat. Talk with a man out at a window! — a proper saying.
Bene. Nay, but Beatrice—
Beat. Sweet Hero! — she is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.
Bene. Beat—
Beat. Princes, and 4 counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, count confess; a sweet gallant, surely! O, that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into courtesy, valor into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and ftrimes too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it. — I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.
Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.
Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.
Bene. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?
Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.
Bene. Enough! I am engaged, I will challenge him. I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say she is dead; and so, farewell. [Exeunt.]

Scene II. A Prison.
Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.
Dogb. Is our whole discompos'd appeared?
Verg. O! a stool and a cushion for the sexton.
Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Dogb. Mary, that am I and my partner.
Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.
Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.
Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before me. —
What is your name, friend?
Bora. Borachio.
Dogb. Pray write down Borachio. — Yours, sirrah?
Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.
Dogb. Write down master gentleman Conrade.— Masters, do you serve God?
Con. Boras. Yen, sir, we hope.
Dogb. Write down— that they hope they serve God: — and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains! — Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?
Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.
Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him. — Come you hither, sirrah: a word in your ear, sir: I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.
Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.
Dogb. Well, stand aside. — Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?
Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.
Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the best way. — Let the watch come forth. — Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.
1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.
Dogb. Write down— prince John a villain. — Why, this is that purgery, to call a prince's brother villain.
Bora. Master constable,—
Dogb. Pray thee, fellow, peace: I do not like thy look, I promise thee.
Sexton. What heard you him say else?
2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.
Dogb. Flat burgurgy as ever was committed.
Verg. Yea, by the mass, that it is.
Sexton. What else, follow?
1 Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.
Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.
Sexton. What else?
2 Watch. This is all.
Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away: Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and, upon the grief of this, suddenly died. Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's: I will go before, and show him their examination. [Exeunt.]
Dogb. Come, let them be opinioned.
Verg. Let them be bound.
3 Bora. Hands off, coxcomb!
Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down the prince's officer, coxcomb. — Come, bind them. — Thou naughty varlet!

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before LEONATO’s House.

Enter LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And ’tis not wisdom thus to second grief
Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Give no more counsel;
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear.
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine:
Bring me a father that so lov’d his child,
Whose joy of her is overthrow’d like mine,
And bid him speak to me of patience;
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard;
Call sorrow joy; cry hem, when he should groan;
Patch grief with powders; make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters; bring him to you to me,
And I of him will gather patience.
But there is no such man; for, brother, men
Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage,
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm nee with air, and agony with words.
No, no; ’tis all men’s office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow,
But no man’s virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral when he shall endure
The like himself. Therefore give me no counsel:
My grief’s cry louder than a advertisement.

Ant. Thence do men from children nothing differ.

Leon. I pray thee, peace! I will be flesh and blood;
For there was never yet philosopher
That could endure the tooth-ache patiently.
However they have writ the style of gods,
And made a push at chance and sufficiency.

Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself;
Make those that do offend you suffer too. [so.

Leon. There thou speak’st reason: say, I will do
My soul doth tell me Hero is belied.
And that shall Claudio know: so shall the prince,
And all of them, that thus dishonor her.

Enter DON PEDRO and CLAUDIO.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio hastily.

D. Pedro. Good day, good day.

Claud. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords,—

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord,—well, fare you well, your lord.

Ant. Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one. [man.

D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,
Some of us would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him?—

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou, dissembl

Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword,
I fear thee not.

Claud. Marry, beshrew my hand,
If it should give your age such cause of fear.
In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Tush, tush, man! never fleer and jest at me:
I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool;
As, under privilege of age, to brag
What I have done being young, or what would do,
Were I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong’d mine innocent child, and me,
That I am forc’d to lay my reverence by,
And with grey hairs, and bruise of many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast belie’d mine innocent child:
Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,
And she lies buried with her ancestors,
O! in a tomb where never scandal slept.
Save this of her’s, framed by thy villainy.

Claud. My villainy?

Leon. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. Nay.

Ant. First, I say you are not right, old man.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Ant. Of my lord, my lord,
I’ll prove it on his body, if he dare.
Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lustyhood.

Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so buff me? Thou hast kill’d my
If thou kill’dst me, boy, thou shalt kill a man. [child:
Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:
But that’s no matter; let him kill one first:
Win me and wear me,—let him answer me,—[me.
Come, follow me, boy! come, sir boy, come, follow
Sir boy, I’ll whip you from your joining fence;
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother,—

Ant. Come, you yourself. God knows, I lov’d my
And she is dead: slander’d to death by villains,
That dare as well answer a man, indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue.
Boys, apes, baggards, Jacks, milk-supas!—

Leon. Brother Antony—

Ant. Hold you content. What, man! I know them;
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:
Scurrying, out-facing, fashion-mong’ring boys,
That lie, and e’er, and flout, deprave and slander,
Go antickly, and show an outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst,
And this is all!

Leon. But, brother Antony—

Ant. Come, ’tis no matter:
Do not you meddle, let me deal in this. [patience.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not awake your
My heart is sorry for your daughter’s death;

4 Good day—"ill bide," —"Active practice," i. e., skill in fencing, etc.
"Do as I do," i. e., put me off,—"Thieving,—Shuffling,—Fluttering,—"Wak’d," i. e., rouse; stir up; convert your patience into anger by longer reasoning.
Much Ado About Nothing

But, on my honor, she was charg'd with nothing

But what was true, and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord!—

D. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Leon. No!

Come, brother, away.—I will be heard.—

Ant. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

[Exit Leonato and Antonio.

Enter Benedick.

D. Pedro. See, see! here comes the man we went to seek.

Claud. Now, signior, what news?

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valor. I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten out. Wilt thou use thy wit? Bene. It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit.—I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw to please us.

D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.

—Art thou sick, or angry?

Bene. What! courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me.—I pray you, choose another subject.

Claud. Nay then, give him another staff: this last was broke into a cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more. I think he be angry indeed.

Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his ‘girdle.

Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Claud. God bless me from a challenge!

Bene. You are a villain.—I jest not:—I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare.—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast?

Claud. I'faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf’s head and 1 eapers, the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife’s naught.—Shall I not find a woodcock too?

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well: it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I’ll tell thee how Beatrice praises thy wit the other day. I said, thou hadst a fine wit: “True,” said she, “a fine little one;” “No,” said I, “a great wit;” “Right,” says she, “a great gross one;” “Nay,” said I, “a good wit;” “Just,” said she, “it hurts nobody;” “Nay,” said I, “the gentleman is wise;” “Certain,” said she, “a wise gentleman;” “Nay,” said I, “he hath the tongue;” “That I believe,” said she, “for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning: there’s a double tongue; there’s two tongues.” Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she went heartily, and said she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly. The old man’s daughter told us all.

Claud. All, all; and moreover, God saw him when he was left in the garden.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull’s horns on the sensible Benedick’s head?

Claud. Yea, and text underneath, “Here dwells Benedick the married man!”

Bene. Fare you well, boy: you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossip-like humor: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, you never do.—My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you: I must discontinue your company. Your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my lord Lack-beard, there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.

[Exit Benedick.

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Claud. In most profound earnest; and, I’ll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?

Claud. Most sincerely.

D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!

Claud. He is then a giant to an ape; but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

D. Pedro. But, soft you; let me be: pluck up, my heart, and be sad. Did he not say, my brother was fled?

[Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Dogb. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall no worse weigh more reasons in her balance.

Nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be looked to.

D. Pedro. How now! two of my brother’s men bound! is it so?

Claud. Hearken after their offence, my lord.

D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are sadders; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things; and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done? thirdly, I ask thee, what’s their offence? sixth and lastly, why are they committed? and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge?

Claud. Highly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there’s one meaning well suited.

D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood. What’s your offence?

Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer: do you hear me, and let this court kill me.

---

1. "Draw, as we do the minstrels," I.e., as we bid the minstrels draw the bows of their fiddles.
2. "The allusion is to tilting.
3. "The woodcock was supposed to have no brain, and was therefore easily caught in a trap; the allusion is to the plot against Benedick.
4. "Wise gentleman" is used ironically, as we say a wise-axe.
5. "Pluck up, my heart, and be sad," I.e., rise thee, my heart, and be serious.---"Well suited," I.e., put into many different dances.
I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother, *in*consed me to slander the lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her. My villainy they have upon record, which I had rather seal with my death, than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain. [your blood?]

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through Claud. I have drunk poison whiles he utter'd it.

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this? Bora. Yes; and paid me richly for the practice of it. [ere.—

D. Pedro. He is compos'd and fram'd of treach-

And fled he is upon this villainy.

Claud. Sweet Hero! now thine image doth appear

In the rare semblance that I loved it first.

Dogb. Come; bring away the plaintiffs: by this time our sexton hath reformed signior Leonato of the matter. And masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

Verg. Here, here comes master signior Leonato and the sexton too.

Re-enter Leonato, Antonio, and the Sexton. Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes, That when I note another male like him, I may avoid him. Which of these is he?

Bora. If you would know your wrangler, look on me. [kill'd

Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast Mine innocent child?

Bora. Yes, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; thou beliest thyself:

Here stand a pair of honorable men, A third is fled, that had a hand in it.— I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death:

Record it with your high and worthy deeds. Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge yourself;

b Impose me to what penance your invention

Can lay upon my sin: yet sim'ld I not,

But in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I;

And yet, to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any heavy weight That he'll enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you cause my daughter live;

That were impossible; but, I pray you both,

c Possess the people in Messina, here,

How innocent she died: and, if your love

Can labor aught in such invention, Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,

And sing it to her bones: sing it to-night.—

To-morrow, bringing come you to my house,

And since you could not be my son-in-law,

Be yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter, Almost the copy of my child's that's dead,

And she alone is heir to both of us:

Give her the right you should have given her cousin,

And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O noble sir!

Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me.

I do embrace your offer, and dispose

For henceforth of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow, then, I will expect your coming:

To-night I take my leave.—This naughty man

Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,

Who, I believe, was 'pact in all this wrong, Hid'rd to it by your brother.

Bora. No, by my soul, she was not;

Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me;

But always hath been just and virtuous,

In any thing that I do know by her.

Dogb. Moreover, sir, which, indeed, is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the officer, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake. Pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dogb. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dogb. God save the foundation!

Leon. Go: I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and

I thank thee.

Dogb. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself for the example of others. God keep your worship; I wish your worship well: God restore you to health; I humbly give you leave to depart, and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it.—Come, neighbor.

[Exeunt Dogberry, Verges, and Watch.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farrowell, my lords: we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail.

Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

[Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudio.

Leon. Bring you these fellows on. We'll talk with Margaret,

How her acquaintance grew with this 5fellow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, desire well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you, then, write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou dost excel it.

Marg. To have no man come over me? why shall

I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth.

Marg. And your's as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman: and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice.

I give thee the bucklers.

Marg. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put

"Past," i. e., a party to the past; an accomplice.—"God save the foundation!" a phrase used by those who received alms at the gates of religious houses.—"Knave."—"I give thee the bucklers," i. e., I yield.
in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for widows.

Marc. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs.

[Exit MARGARET.

Bene. And therefore will come.

The god of love,

That sits above,

And knows me, and knows me,

How pitiful I deserve,—

I mean, in singing; but in loving, Leonor the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over, as my poor self, in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to "lady" but "baby," an innocent rhyme; for "scorn," "horn," a hard rhyme; for "school," "fool," a babbling rhyme—very ominous endings. No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.——

Enter BEATRICE.

Sweet Beatrice, would'st thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior; and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O! sing but till then.

Beat. "Then" is spoken; fare you well now:—

and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for; which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words but is foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkissed.

Bene. Thou hast frightened the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts didst you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithet. I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think. Alas, poor heart! If you spite it for my sake, I will spite it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty who will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbors; If a man do not erect, in this age, his own tomb ore he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. 4Question—why an hour in clamor, and a quarter in rhyme: therefore is it most expedient for the wise, (if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praises.

* "Festival terms," i. e., holiday phrase.
* "Undergoes my challenge," i. e., is under challenge.
* "Question," i. e., that is the question.

---

ing myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy. And now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter URSULA.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter DON PEDRO, CLAUDIO, and ATTENDANTS, WITH MUSIC AND TAPERS.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Att. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads.]

EPITAPH.

Done to death by slanderous tongues

WAS the Hero that here lies;

Death, in 'garden of her wrongs,

Gives her fame which never dies.

So the life, that died with shame,

Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb,

Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night,

Those that slew thy virgin bright;

For the which, with songs of woe,

Round about her tomb we go.

Midnight, assist our noon;

Help us to sigh and groan,

Heavily, heavily:

Graces, yawn, and yield your dead,

Till death be uttered, heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night!

Yearly will I do this rite. [out.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters: put your torches

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle

Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about

Day, Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his way can not tell.

[Exeunt Torch-bearers.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other

And then to Leonato's we will go.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, BENEDICK, BEATRICE, URSULA, FRIAR, and HERO.

FRIAR. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

LEON. So are the prince and Claudio, who accus'd her

Upon the error that you heard debated:

But Margaret was in some fault for this,

14 "Old coil," i. e., great confusion.—RCompenes.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT V.

Although against her will, as it appears
In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enuio'd
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlemens all,
With draw into a chamber by yourselves,
And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour
To visit me.—You know your office, brother;
You must be father to your brother's daughter,
And give her to young Claudio. [Exeunt Ladies.

And, as I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think,
Frier. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them.—
Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior,
Your niece regards me with an eye of favor.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true.

Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.

Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me,
From Claudio, and the prince. But what's your will?

Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:—
But, for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conj'in'd
In the state of honorable marriage:—
In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking.
Frier. And my help.

Here come the prince, and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Clau.
We here attend you. Are you yet determin'd [Do:
To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?
Claud. I'll hold my mind was she an Ethiop.
Leon. Call her forth, brother: here's the friar ready.

[Exit Antonio.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what's
That you have such a February face, [the matter,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?

Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull.—
Tush! fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee,
As once Europa did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.
Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable brow;
And some such strange bull lep'd your father's cow,
And got a calf in that some noble fear;
Much like to you, for you have just his blee.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Claud. For this I owe you: here come other mask
Which is the lady I must seize upon? [enings.
Leon. This same is she, and I do give you her.
Claud. Why, then she's mine.—Sweet, let me see your face.
Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand
Before this friar, and swear to marry her.
Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar:
I am your husband, if you like of me.
Her. And when I liv'd, I was your other wife:

I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:
Mean time, let wonder seem familiar.
And to the chapel let us presently.

Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?

Beat. I answer to that name, [Unmasking.] What Bene. Do not you love me! [is your will?]

Beat. 3Why, no more than reason.
Bene. Why, then, your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio,
Have been deceived, for they swore you did.

Beat. Do not you love me?

Bene. 3Troth, no more than reason.
Beat. Why, then, my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula,
Are much deceived; for they 'sware, you did. [me.
Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

Bene. It is no matter.—Then, you do not love me?

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the Gentleman.

Claud. And I'll be sworn upon't, that he loves her;
For here's a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice.

Her. And here's another,
Writ in my cousin's hand, stol'n from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts.—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light,
I take thee for pity.

Beat. I would not dey you;—but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion, and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consump-

Bene. Peace! I will stop your mouth.

D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick, the married man?

Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit rackers cannot flout me out of my humor. Dost thou think, I care for a satire, or an epigram? No:
if a man will be beaten with brains, a' shall wear nothing handsomest about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never fear but at me for what I have said against it, for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—
For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee;
but, in a thou art like to be my kinsman,
live unbruised, and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have de-died Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends.—Let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heela.

Leon. We'll have dancing afterward.

Bene. First, of my word; therefore, play, music!—
Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife; there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow: I'll devise thee brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers.

[ Dance of all the Actors.

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

Act III.—Scene I.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Ferdinand, King of Navarre.
Biron, Lords, attending on the King.
Longaville, Lords, attending on the Princess.
Dumaine, Fellow-scholars, a Schoolmaster.
Boyet, Mercade, of France.
Don Adrian de Armado, a Spaniard.
Sir Nathaniel, a Curate.
Costard, a Clown.
Moth, Page to Armado.
A Forester.
Princess of France.
Rosaline, Ladies, attending on the Princess.
Katharine, Jaquenetta, a country wench.
Officers and others, attendants on the King and Princess.

ACT I.

Scene I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death;
When, spite of corromant devouring time,
'Tis endeavor of this present breath may buoy
That honor, which shall bathe his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are,
That war against your own affections,
And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force.
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world;
Our court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.
You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes, [it.
That are recorded in this schedule here: 4[Showing

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honor down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.
If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do,
Subscribe to your deep 3 oaths, and keep them too.

Long. I am resolvd: 'tis but a three years' fast.
The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits.

Dum. My loving lord, Dumaine is mortified.
The grosser manner of this world's delights
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves:
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die,
With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over;
So much, dear liege, I have already sworn,
That is, to live and study here three years,
But there are other strict observances;
As, not to see a woman in that term,
Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:
And, one day in a week to touch no food,
And but one meal on every day beside,
The which, I hope, is not enrolled there:
And then, to sleep but three hours in the night,
And not be seen to wink of all the day,
When I was wont to think no harm all night,
And make a dark night, too, of half the day,
Which, I hope well, is not enclosed there.
O! these are barren tasks, too hard to keep,
Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep.

King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.
Biron. Let me say no, my liege, as if you please.
I only swore to study with your grace,
And stay here in your court for three years' space.

Long. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.
Biron. By yea, and may, sir, then I swore in jest.
What is the end of study, let me know? [know.
King. Why, that to know which else we should not Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense?

King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.

Biron. Come on, then: I will swear to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know;
As thus,—to study where I well may dine,
When I to feast expressly am forbid;
Or study where to meet some mistress fine,
Which the mistresses from common sense are hid;
Or, having sworn too hard—keeping oath,
Study to break it, and not break my troth.
If study's gain be this, and this be so,
Study knows that which yet it doth not know.
Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no.

King. These be the stops that hinder study quite,
And train our intellects to vain delight.

Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most
Which, with pain purchase'd, doth inherit pain:
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light, seeking light, doth light of light beguile.
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairey ear;
Who dazzles so, that eye shall be his heed,
And give him light that it was blin'ded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks:
Small have continual plunders ever won,
Some have been author'd with other men's.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profit of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and yet not what they are.

Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against read-

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!

Long. He weeds the corn, and still let's grow the weedings.

Biron. The spring is near, when green geese are a

Dum. How follows that?

Biron. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

King. Something, then, in rhyme.

Biron. Like an envious snipping frost,
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

Biron. Well, say I am: why should proud summer boast,
Before the birds have any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in any abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shows;
But like of every thing that in season grows.

So you, by study now it is too late,
Climb o'er the house-top to unlock the gate.

King. Well, set you out: go home, Biron, adieu!

Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:
And, though I have for barbarism spoke more,
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I'll keep to what I swore,
And hide the penance of each three years' day.

Give me the paper: let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.

King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!

Biron. [Reads.] Item, "That no woman shall come within a mile of my court."—Hath this been proclaimed?

Long. Four days ago.

Biron. Let's see the penalty. [Reads.] "On pain of losing her tongue." Who devis'd this penalty?

Long. Marry, that did I.

Biron. Sweet lord, and why?

Long. To fright them hence with that dread penalty.

Biron. A dangerous law against 5 garrulity!

[Reads.] Item, "If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise."

This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For, well you know, here comes in embassy
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak,—
A maid of grace, and complete majesty,—
About surrender up of Aquitain
To her decrèpit, sick, and bed-ridden father:
Therefore, this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes th' admired princess 6 rather.

King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite Biron. So study overmore is overshot: [forgot.
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the thing it should;
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

King. We must of force dispence with this decree:
She must lie here on mere necessity.

Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak;
For every man with his affects is born,
Not by might master'd, but by special grace.
If I break faith, this word shall plead for me,
I am forewarned on mere necessity.—
So to the laws at large I write my name; [Subscribes.
And he, that breaks them in the least degree,
Stands in attainder of eternal shame.

Suggestions are to others, as to me;
But, I believe, although I seem so loath,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quick recreation granted?

King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is
With a refined traveller of Spain; [haunted
A man in all the world-new fashions flaunted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain:
One, whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony;
A man of 9 complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy, that Armado 9 hight,
For interim to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I,
6 Reside,—Affections —7 Temptations —8 Lively — sprightly, — Accomplishments.— 9 Armado hight; 1. o. is called Armado.
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie,
And will I use him for my minute's play.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wise patron,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.
Long. Costard, the swain, and he shall be our sport;
And so to study three years is but short.

Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.

Dull. Which is the duke's own person?
Biron. This, fellow. What would'st?
Dull. I myself apprehend his own person, for I am his grace's chamber-bearer; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.
Dull. Signior Arm — Arm—commends you. There's villainy abroad: this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, the contents thereof are as touching me.
King. A letter from the magnificient Armado.
Biron. How low sewer the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low-sounding God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear, or forbear hearing?
Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to scheme in in the manner.
Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.
Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is, in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman; for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right!
King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.
King. [Reads.] "Great deputy, the wellkin's viscount, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron, —"
Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.
King. "So it is, —"
Cost. It may be so; but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so,— King. Peace!
Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight.
King. No words.
Cost. —of other men's secrets, I beseech you.
King. "So it is, besieged with sable-colored melanchooly, I did commend the black-oppressing humor to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time when? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is ycleped thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebom-colored ink, which here thou viewest, behold'st, surveyest, or seest. But to the place, where?—it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base & minnow of thy mirth, —"
Cost. Me.
King. "—that unletter'd small-knowing soul,"
Cost. Me.
King. "—that shallow vessel,"
Cost. Still me.
King. "—which, as I remember, bight Costard,"
Cost. Of me.
King. "—sorted and consorted, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canons, with — with— with — with this I 'passion' to say wherewith."
Cost. With a wench.
King. "—with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (as my ever-esteem'd duty pricks me on) have sent to thee, to receive the need of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Antony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, hearing, and estimation."
Dull. Me, an't shall please you: I am Antony Dull.
King. "For Jaquenetta, (so is the weaker vessel called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain, I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all complements of devoted and heart burning heat of duty, —"
"DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO."
Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.
King. Ay, the best for the worst.—But, sirrah, what say you to this?
Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.
King. Did you hear the proclamation?
Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.
King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment to be taken with a wench.
Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.
King. Well, it was proclaimed damsel.
Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir: she was a virgin.
King. It is so varied, too, for it was proclaimed virgin.
Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity: I was taken with a maid.
King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.
Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.
King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.
Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.
King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.—My lord Biron, see him deliv'rd o'er: —
And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumaine.
Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat, These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Dull. Sirrah, come on.
Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and, therefore, welcome the sour cup of pros-

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

ACT I.

SCENE II.—ARMADO'S House in the Park.

Enter Armado and Moth, his page.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit loves melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why? sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.

Moth. No, no; O lord! sir, no.

Arm. How can thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my touch senior.

Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epithet appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Arm. Pretty, and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt; or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little.

Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?

Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. In thy condign praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Arm. What, that an eel is ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say, thou art quick in answers. Thou hearest my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. [Aside.] He speaks the mere contrary: crosses love not him?

Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thiree told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning: it fitteth the spirit of a tapaster.

Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.

Arm. I confess both: they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.

Arm. True.

Arm. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?

Now, here is three studied ere you'll thriće wink;

And how easy it is to put years to the word three,

And study three years in two words, the dancing d'horse will tell you.

Arm. A most fine figure!

Moth. [Aside.] To prove you a cypher.

Arm. I will hereupon confess I am in love; and, as it be base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the honour of affection would deliver me from the reprobe thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to my French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh: methinks, I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me, boy. What great men have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.

Arm. Most sweet Hercules!—More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Moth. Samson, master: he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates on his back, like a porter, and he was in love.

Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier, as much as thou dist me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?

Moth. A woman, master.

Arm. Of what complexion?

Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or one of the four.

Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.

Arm. Is that one of the four complexities?

Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them too.

Arm. Green, indeed, is the color of lovers; but to have a love of that color, methinks, Samson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.

Moth. It was so, sir, for she had a green wit.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Moth. Most immaculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colors.

Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.

Moth. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me!

Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty, and poetic!

Moth. If she be made of white and red,

Her faults will ne'er be known;

For blushing checks by faults are bred,

And fears by pale white shown:

Then, if she fear, or be to blame,

By this you shall not know;

For still her cheeks possess the same,

Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?

Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since, but, I think, now 'tis not to be found; or if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.

Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl, that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard: she deserves well.

Moth. [Aside.] To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master.

Arm. Sing, boy: my spirit grows heavy in love.

Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.

Arm. I say, sing.

Moth. Forbear, till this company bepast.

Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, nor no penance; but a must fast three days a week.

*boy.—Youth.—The "crosses" alluded to were pieces of money stamped with a cross.—This allusion is to a celebrated horse, remarkable for his sagacity, belonging to one Baskets.

"The allusion, probably, is to the willow. —Impure. —"Which native she doth owe," I. e. of which she is naturally possessed. —See Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. —Transgression. —Poor.
For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the 2 day-woman. Fare you well.

Arm. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.

Jaq. Man.

Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's b hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!

Arm. I will tell thee wonders.

Jaq. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say.

Arm. And so farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you.

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away. [Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.]

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain: shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave: away!

Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir: I will fast, being loose.

Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see—

Moth. What shall some see?

Cost. Nay, nothing, master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words; and therefore I will say nothing: I think God I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet.

[Exeunt Moth and Costard.]

Arm. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is baser, guided by her foot, which is basest, doth trend. I shall be forsworn, (which is a great argument of falsehood) if I love; and how can that be true love, which is falsely attempted! Love is a familiar; love is a devil: there is no evil angel but love. Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so seduced, and he had a very good wit. Cupid's butt- shaft is too hard for Hercules' club, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the c passado he respects not, the d duello he regards not: his disgrace is to be called boy, but his glory is, to subdue men. Adieu, valor! rust, rapier! be still, drum! for your armiger is in love; yea, he loves. Assist me some extemporal god of rhyme, for, I am sure, I shall turn 2 sonnet-maker. Devise wit, write pen, for I am for whole volumes in folio. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Park. A Pavilion and Tents at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your 2 clearest Consider whom the king your father sends, [spirits.

To whom he sends, and what's his embassy: Yourself held precious in the world's esteem, To parley with the sole inheritor Of all perfections that a man may owe, Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight Than Aquitain, a dowry for a queen. Be now as prodigal of all dear grace, As nature was in making graces dear, When she did starve the general world beside, And prodigiously gave them all to you.

Prin. Good lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean, Needs not the painted flourish of your praisem Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye, Not utter'd by base sale of chapsen's tongues. I am less proud to hear you tell my worth, Than you much willing to be counted wise In spending your wit in the praise of mine. But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet, You are not ignorant, all-telling fame Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow, Till painful study shall out-wear three years, No woman may approach his silent court: Therefore to us seem' th it a needful course, Before we enter his forbidden gates, To know his pleasure, and in that behalf, Bold of your worthiness, we single you As our best moving fair solicitor. Tell him, the daughter of the king of France, On serious business, craving quick despatch, Importune personal conference with his grace. Haste, signify so much; while we attend, Like humble-visag'd suitors, his high will. Boyet. Proud of your employment, willingly I go. [Exit.

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so.— Who are the votaries, my loving lords, That are vow-follows with this virtuous duke? 1 Lord. Longaville is one.

Prin. Know you the man?

Mar. I know him, madam: at a marriage feast, Between lord Perigot and the humeours heir Of Jacques Falcolride, solemnized In Normandy, saw I this Longaville. A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd; Well fitted in the arts; glorious in arms: Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well. The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss, If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil, Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt will; Whose edge he has power to cut, whose wills will Should none spare that come within his power.

Prin. Some poor mocking lord, belike; i' sot so?

Mar. They say so most that most his humors know.

Prin. Such short-div'd wits do wither as they grow.

Who are the rest?

Kath. The young Domaine, a well-accomplished. Of all that virtue love for virtue lov'd: Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill, For he hath wit to make an ill shape good, And shape to win grace though he had no wit. I saw him at the duke Alençon's once; And much too little of that little I saw Is my report to his great worthiness.

Ros. Another of these students at that time Was there with him: if I have heard a truth, Biron they call him; but a merrier man, Within the limit of becoming nieth, I never spent an hour's talk withal. His eye begets occasion for his wit;

For every object that the one doth catch, The others turn to a mirth-moving jest, Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor) —— — Confident.—Qualified.

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravished,
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.
Prin. God bless my ladies! are they all in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?
Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord?
Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt,
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

Enter King, Longaville, Du Maine, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.
Prin. Fair boy, I give you back again; and welcome
I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours,
And welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.
King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.
Prin. I will be welcome then. Conduct me thither.
King. Hear me, dear lady: I have sworn an oath.
Prin. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn.
King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.
Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing.
King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is. [Exit.
Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear, your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
'Tis deathly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.
But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold;
To teach a teacher ill beconceemeth me.
Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit. [Gives a paper.
King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may. ['Reads.
Prin. You will the sooner that I were away,
For you'll prove myne'd, if you make me stay.
Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Biron. I know you did.
Ros. How needless was it, then,
To ask the question?
Biron. You must not be so quick.
Ros. Tis't long of you, that spur me with such questions. [tire.
Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, twill
Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.
Biron. What time o' day?
Ros. The hour that fools should ask.
Biron. Now fair befall thy mask!
Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!
Biron. And send you many lovers!
Ros. Amen, so you be none.
Biron. Nay, then will I begone.
King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one half of an entire sum,
Disbursed by his father in his wars.
But say, that he, or we, (as neither have)
Receive'd that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
* Considerates.— Prepared.— Whorone.
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If, then, the king your father will restore
But that one half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitin,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid
An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Which we much rather had depart withal,
And have the money by our father lent,
Than Aquitain, so gelded as it is.
Dear princes, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding, 'gainst some reason in my breast,
And go well satisfied to France again.
Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeming confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
King. I do protest, I never heard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.
Prin. We 'llarest your word.
Boyet, you can produce acquittances
For such a sum from special officers
Of Charles his father.
King. Satisfy me so.
Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound:
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.
King. It shall suffice me: at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honor, without breach of honor, may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness.
You may not come, fair princess, within my gates;
But here without you shall be so receiv'd,
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Though so denied, free harbor in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:
To-morrow shall we visit you again.
Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your grace!
King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!
[Exeunt King and his train.
Biron. Lady, I will commend you to mine own heart.
Ros. Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.
Biron. I would, you heard it groan.
Ros. Is the fool sick?
Biron. Sick at the heart.
Ros. Alack! let it blood.
Biron. Would that it do good?
Ros. My physic says, ay.
Biron. Will you prick't with your eye?
Ros. No point, with my knife.
Biron. Now, God save thy life.
Ros. And yours from long living.
Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving. [Stands back.
Dum. Where I pray you, a word. What lady that is here? [Coming forward.
Boyet. The heir of Alençon, Rosaline her name.
Dum. A gallant lady. Monsieur, fare you well.
[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word. What is she in the white? [Coming forward.

4 Part with—"seem unseeming," i. e., not seeming; seeming not—"We arrest your word," i. e., we take you at your word.—"No point," (Fr.) no.
SCENE I.

LOVE’S LABOR’S LOST.

Biron. A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light. [name.

Long. Perchance, light in the light. I desire her

Biron. She hath but one for herself; to desire that, were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?

Biron. Her mother’s, I have heard.

Long. God’s blessing on your beard!

Biron. Good sir, be not offended.

She is an heir of Fal聘用.gh. [Exit Biron. — Ladies unmask.

Long. Nay, my choler is ended. She is a most sweet lady.

Biron. Not unlike, sir: that may be. [Exit Long. Biron. What’s her name, in the cap? [board.

Biron. Katherine, by good hap.

Biron. Is she wedded, or no? [board.

Biron. To her will, sir, or so.

Biron. O! you are welcome, sir. Adieu.

Biron. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you.

[Exit Biron. — Ladies unmask.

Mar. That last is Biron, the merry mad-cap lord:

Not a word with him but a jest.

Biron. And every jest but a word. [board.

Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Biron. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to

Mar. Two hot sheeps, merry!

Biron. And wherefore not ships?

Mar. No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.

Biron. You sheep, and I pasture: shall that finish

Biron. So you grant pasture for me, [the jest?

[Offering to kiss her.

Mar. Not so, gentle beast.

My lips are no common, though several they be.

Biron. Belonging to whom? [board.

Mar. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be jangling; but, gentlemen, agree.

This civil war of wits were much better used

On Navarre and his book-men, for hero ’tis abused.

Biron. If my observation, (which very seldom lies,) By the heart’s still rhetoric, disclosed with eyes, Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected.

Prin. With what?

Biron. With that which we lovers entitle, affected.

Prin. Your reason?

Biron. Why, all his behaviors did make their retire To the court of his eye, peeping a thorough desire; His heart, like an agate, with your print impressed, Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed: His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see, Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be; All senses to that sense did make their repair, To feel only looking on fairest of fair.

Methought, all his senses were lock’d in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who, tending their own worth, from where they were glass’d,

Did point you to buy them, along as you pass’d.

His face’s own margin did quote such amazes, That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes. I’ll give you Aquitaine, and all that is his, An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss. [board.

Prin. Come to our pavilion: Biron is disposed— Biron. But to speak that in words, which his eye and heart disclos’d.

I only have made a mouth of his eye, By adding a tongue, which I know will not lie.

Ros. Thou art an old love-monger, and speak’st skilfully. [of him.

Mar. He is Cupid’s grandfather, and learns news Ros. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.

Biron. Do you hear, my mad wenches? [board.

Mar. No.

Biron. What, then, do you see? Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.

Biron. You are too hard for me. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Armado and Mirth.

2 Song. See, my love.

Arm. Warble, child: make passionate my senses of hearing.

Moth. 3 Concinelli.—3 (Amato bene.) [Singing, Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderess of yours: take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him e festively hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love. [French brawl!

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a Arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master; but to pig off a tune at the tongue’s end, • carnary to it with your feet, humor it with turning up your eye- lids; sigh a note; and sing a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose, as if you sniffed up love by smelling love; with your hat penthouse-like, o’er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly’s doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away. These are complements, these are humors; these betray nice wenchens, that would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these. Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my 4 pain of observation.

Arm. But O,—Moth. The hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callst thou my love hobby-horse? Mith. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart. Arm. By heart, and in heart, boy. [will prove.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live: and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain: he must carry me a letter.

4 • Concinelli” is probably the beginning of some Italian song.— 5 Hastily.— 6 Brad, from the French braud; was a kind of dance.— 7 , ‘Casmary’ was a dance accompanied by the castanets.— 8 The ‘hobby-horse’ is a shed projecting from the main wall.— 9 Accomplishments. — The ‘hobby-horse’ was a character in the old May-games.
Moth. A messenger well sympathiz'd: a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited: but I go, Arm. The way is but short. Away!

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. Thy meaning, pretty ingenious? Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

Moth. Minim, honest master; or rather, master, no.

Arm. I say, lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift sir, to say so:

Is that lead slow which is fir'd from a gun?

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric.

He reproves me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he:

I shoot thee at the swain.

Moth. Thump then, and I fce. [Exit. Arm. A most acute juvenile; voluble and faire of grace!

By thy favor, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy face:

Mote-eyed melancholy, valour gives thee place.

My herald is return'd.

Re-enter Moth with Costard.

Arm. By virtue, thou enforc'st laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate take salve for L'envoy, and the word L'envoy for a salve?

Moth. Do the wise think them other? is not L'envoy a salve? [Make plain Arm. No page: it is an epilogue, or discourse, to some obscure proceedings that hath before been said, I will exemplify it:

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral: now the L'envoy.

Moth. I will add the L'envoy. Say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by making four.

Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my L'envoy.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Arm. Until the goose came out of door,
Saying the odds by making four.

L'envoy. A good L'envoy.

Moth. Ending in the goose: would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose, that's flat.

Sir, your pennyworth is good, an your goose be fat.

To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose:

Let me see, a fat L'envoy; ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.

Then call'd you for the L'envoy. [Argument in; Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus came your

Then the boy's fat L'envoy, the goose that you bought,

And he ended the market.

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth: I will speak that L'envoy.

I, Costard, running out, that was safely within,

Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, 'marr)' I will enfranchise the Cost. O! marry me to one Frances?—I smell some L'envoy, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfree'ndomg thy person: thou wert immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true; and now you will be my purga-

Arm. Let me be loose.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee free from duration; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant [Giving a letter.] to the country maid Jaquenetta. There is remuneration; for the best ward of mine honor is rewarding my dependants. Moth, follow. [Exit. Moth. Like the sequel, 1.—Signior Costard, adieu.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my Titus Jew!—

Now will I look to his remuneration. Remunera-

Arm. O! that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings, remuneration.—What's the price of this binkle? A penny.—No, I will give you a remuneration? why, it carries it.—Remuneration? why, it is a fairer name than French Crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Biron.

Biron, O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Cost. I thank your worship. God be wi' you. Biron, Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:—

The princess comes to hunt here in the park,

And in her train there is a gentle lady; [name.

When tongues speak sweetly, then she name her.

And then they call her: ask for her,

And to her white hand see thou do commend

This seal'd-up counsel. There's thy guerdon; go.

[Give him money.

Cost. Guerdon.—O, sweet guerdon! better than remuneration; eleven-pence farthing better. Most sweet guerdons!—I will do it, sir, in print.——Guer-

"Inprint," i.e., artless; unlearned.—"Tepe.—Reward, — "In print," i.e., with the utmost neaty, LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurr'd his horse so Against the steep uprising of the hill? [Hard Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was not he.

Prin. Who'er 'a was, 'a show'd a mounting mind. Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch; On Saturday we will return to France.—

Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush, That we must stand and give the prince our hear! To pray for?—Go to; it is a plague That Cupid will impose for my neglect Of his Almighty dreadful little might. Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan: Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Prin. See, see! my beauty will be saved by merit. O herey in 2 faith, fit for these days! A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.— But come, the bow;—now mercy goes to kill, And shooting well is then accounted ill. Thus will I play it fair in this the shot: Not wounding, pity would not let me do'; If wounding, then it was to show my skill, That more for praise than purpose meant to kill. And, out of question, so it is sometimes: Glory grows guilty of detested crimes, When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part, We bend to that the working of the heart; As I for praise alone now seek to spill The poor dear's blood, that my heart means no ill. Boyet. Do not 4 cruist wives hold that self-sover-Only for praise' sake, when they strive to be [eigny Lords o'er their lords? Prin. Only for praise; and praise we may afford To any lady that subdues a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the commonwealth. Cost. God! dig-you-don all. Pray you, which is the head lady? Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest That have no heads. Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest? Prin. The thickest, and the tallest. [is truth. Cost. The thickest, and the tallest? it is so; truth An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit. One o' these maid's girdles for your waist should be fit. [Here. Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will? Cost. I have a letter, from monsieur Biron to one lady Rosaline. [Giving it. Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter! he's a good friend of mine. Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve; Break up this capon. [Handing it to him. Boyet. I am bound to serve.—

This letter is mistook; it importeth none here: It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear. Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear. Boyet. [Reads.] “By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infinite; it is true, that thou art beauteous; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fair than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have commissary on thy heroic and valiant! The magnificent and most illustrious Cophetua set eye upon the pernicious and indubitable beggar Poulet; and he it was that might rightly say, vati, ebre, ete; which to anoint in the vulgar, (O base and obscure vulgar!) valedict, he came, saw, and over- came: he came, one; saw, two; overcame, three. Who came? the king; Why did he come? to see; Why did he come? to overcome: To whom came he? to the beggar; What saw he? the beggar; Whom overcame he? the beggar. The conclusion is victory: on whose side? the king's: the captive is enriched: on whose side? the beggar's. The catastrophe is triumph: on whose side? the king's? —no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king, for so stands the comparison; thou the beggar, for so witnesseth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I enforce thy love? I could. Shall I entertain thy love? I will. What shalt thou exchange for rags? robes; for titles? Shrewish,—[Dig-you-den] 6, I e, give you good even.— The French word for a capon or chicken, poulet, signifies also a love-letter.—Illustrious.
"Thine, in the dearest design of industry,
"Don Adriano de Armado."

"Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar.
'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey;
Submit full his princely feet before,
And he from forage will incline to play:
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den."

Prin. What plume of feathers is he that indited this letter? [Better?]
What vain? what weather-cock? did you ever hear Boyet. I am much deco'vd, I know the style.
while.
Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o' er it ere-Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court.
A phantasm, a 'Monarcho, and one that makes sport
To the prince, and his book-mates.
Prin. Thou, fellow, a word.

Who gave thee this letter?
Cost. I told you; my lord.
Prin. To whom shouldst thou give it?
Cost. From my lord to my lady.
Prin. From which lord, to which lady?
Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine,
To a lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline.
Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. —Come, lords, away.

Here, sweet, put up this: 'twill be thine other day.
[Exeunt Princess and Train.
Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the 'suitor'?
Rosaline. Shall I touch you to know?
Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.
Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.
Finely put off! [marry,
Boyet. My lady goes to kill horns; but if thou Hang me by the neck, if horns that your miscurry
Finely put on;
Boyet. Well then, I am the shooter.
Ros. And who is your deer?
Cost. If we choose by the horns, yourself: come Finely put on, indeed! — [not near.
Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow. [her now?
Boyet. But she herself is hit lower! Have I hit Rosaline. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when King Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?
Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.
Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it;
Thou canst not hit it, my good man.
Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,
An I, cannot, another can.
[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it! [did hit it.
Mar. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both Beyot. A mark! O! mark but that mark: a mark, says my lady.
Let the mark have a prick in't, to mete at, if it

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis,—in blood; right as the homoswer, who now haugeth like a jewell in the ear of caro,—the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and moon falletti like a crab, on the face of terra,—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: but, sir,
I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hand credo.
Dull. Twas not a hand credo, 'twas a bricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intuition! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in vis, in way of explication;
facere, as it were, replication, or, rather, exactutere, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his un-dressed, unpolished, uncultivated, unpruned, untrimmed, or rather unlettered, or, ratherever, unconfirmed fashion,—to insert again my hand credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a hand credo: 'twas a bricket.

Hol. 'Twice sod simplicity, his coetus!— [look!

SCENE II.

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST. 135

Hol. 1 Doctissimel, good man Dull; 2 Dictyuna, good man Dull.

Dull. What is Dictyuna?

Nath. A title to Thriebe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more; 3 fiestrescore.

And brought not to five weeks, when he came to The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed: the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange, for the moon is never but a month old; and I say beside, that 'twas a pricket that the princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epitaph on the death of the deer? and, to humor the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd, a pricket.

Nath. Perge, good master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate scruality.

Hol. I will something 4 affect the letter, for it argues facility.

[Reads.]

The preful princess pier'd and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket.

[with shooting.]

Sow'd, but not a sore; but now made sore.

The dogs did yell; put to sore, then 5 sore jumps from thicket;

Or pricket sore, or else sore; the people fall a-howl,
If sore be then, to sore makes fifty sores; 6 o sore! 7

Of one sore I an hundred make, by adding but one.

Dull. A rare talent.

Hol. If a Talman be a claw, how look he clawes him with a talent. 8 Aside.

Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple; a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions: these are begot in the vitreous of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.

Hol. M 현재! If their sons be ingenious, they shall want no instruction: if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them; but, sir sapit, qui poena loquitur. A soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jaq. God give you good morrow, master 9 person.

Hol. Master person,—quasi person. And if one should be pierced, which is the one?

Cost. Marry, master schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hog'shead.

Hol. Of piercing a hog'shead! a good lustre of conceit in a tuff of earth: fire enough for a flat, pearl enough for a swine: 'tis pretty; 'tis well.

Jaq. Good master parson, be so good as read me this letter: it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it. [embrá.

Hol. Fauste, precor gelida quando pecus omne sub Raminis,—and so forth. Ah, good old 10 Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice:

—Venegia, Venegia, Chie de rile, non te prege.

Old Mantuan! old Mantuan! Who understandeth thee not, loves thee not.—Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.—

Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or, rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanzu, a verse: tege, domine.

Nath. If love make me foreswear, how shall I swear to love? 11

Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vouch'd! Thought to myself foreswear, to thee I'll faithfully prove; Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bowed.

Study his bias leaves, and makes his look thin eyes,
Where all those pleasures live, that art would comprehend:

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice.

Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend;

All ignorant that soul, that sees thee without wonder:

Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.

Thy eye Joe's lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder,

Which, not an anger bent, is music, and sweet fire.

Celestial, as thou art; O! pardon, love, this wrong.

That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!

Hol. You find not the apostrophes, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified: but, for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, caret. Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? 12 Imitating is nothing: so dath the bound his master, the ape his keeper, the trained horse his rider. But damosella, virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur 13 Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.

Hol. I will overfraise the superscript. "To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline." I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party written unto: "Your ladyship's, in all desired employment, Biron." Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by the way of progress, hath miscarried.—Trip and go, my sweet: deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much. Stay not thy compliment; I forgive thy duty: adieu.

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me.—Sir, God save your life!

Cost. Have with thee, my lord.

[Nazent Cost. and Jaq.]

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father saith, to you, Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father; I do fear colorable 14 colors. But, to return to the verses: did they please you, sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if before repeat it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very uncarned, neither savoring of poetry, wit, or invention. I beseech your society.

Noth. And thank you too; for society (saith the text) is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, senses the next most infallibly concludes it.—Sir, [To Dull.] I do invite you too: you shall not say me nay: panaceo verba. Away! the gentiles are at their game, and we will to our recreation. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am courscing myself: they have pitch'd a teetl; I am tolling in a pitch—pitch that defiles. Defile! a foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for so, they say, the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, wit! By the lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep. Well proved again o' my side! I will not love; if I do, hang me! 'faith, I will not. O! but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her: yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do lie. This book taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my sonnets already: the clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper: God give him grace to groan! [Gits up into a tree.]

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ay me!

Biron. [Aside.] Shot, by heaven!—Proceed, sweet Cupid: thou hast thump'd him with thy bird-bolt under the left pap. In faith, secrets!—

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose, [not
As thine eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The dew of night that on my cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light;
That is my true tear and true weep:
No drop but as a coach doth carry thee;
So ridest thou triumphing in my woe.
Do but behold the tears that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.
O queen of queens, how far thou dost exceed,
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell
How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper.
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here? [Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville! and reading? listen, ear. [Steps aside.

Biron. [Aside in the tree.] Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Long. Ay me! I am forsworn. [wearing papers.]

Biron. [Aside.] Why, he comes in like a perjure.

King. [Aside.] In love, I hope. Sweet fellowship—ship in shame! [the name.

Biron. [Aside.] One drunkard loves another of Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so? [certainly; in truth—a tolling in a pitch, alluding to the dark complexion of Rosaline.—Part of the punishment of a perjur'd was to wear on his breast a paper expressing his crime.

Biron. [Aside.]* I could put thee in comfort: not by two that I know.

Thou mak'st the 'triumvirry, the corner-cap of society, The shaped box of Tyburn, that hang on up simplicity.

Long. I long these stubborn lines luck power to

O sweet Maria, empress of my love! [move.]

These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

Biron. [Aside.] O! rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose:

Disgu不曾 his trob.

Long. This same shall go on.—[He reads the sonnet.

Dull. Not the heavenly rhetoric of this eye,

Quid in titum, quos illud truthful argument,

Persuade my heart to this false perjury?

Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,

Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;

Thy grace, being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.

Vows are but breath, and breath a vapor is:

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,

Expel'd at this vapor-zoe; in thee it is:

If broken, then, it is no fault of mine.

If by me broke, what foul is not so wise,

To lose an oath, to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside.] This is the silver vein, which Makes flesh a deity;

A green goose, a goddess! pure, pure idolatry.

God amen us! God amen *us! we are much out

' o' the way.

Enter Dumaine, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay.

[Steps aside.

Biron. [Aside.] All hid, all hid; an old infant
Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky, [play.

And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sucks to the mill! O heavens! I have my wish:

Dumaine transform'd! four woodcocks in a dish.

Dum. O most divine Kate! [Enter Biron.]

Biron. [Aside.] O most profane coxcomb!

Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye!

Biron. [Aside.] By earth, she is most corporal; there you lie.

Dum. Her amber hairs for foul have amber'd quoted.

Biron. [Aside.] An amber-color'd raven was well dressed. As upright as the cedar. [noted.

Dum. [Aside.] Stoops, I say:

her shoulder is with child.

Dum. As fair as day.

Biron. [Aside.] Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.

Dum. O, that I had my wish!

Long. [Aside.] And I had mine!

King. [Aside.] And I mine too, good lord.

Biron. [Aside.] Amen, so I had mine. Is not that a good word?

Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.

Biron. [Aside.] A fever in your blood? why, then incision

Would let her out in sauces: sweet misprision!

Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

Biron. [Aside.] Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.

4 Triomvirry, and the shape of love's Tyburn, allude to the galloway of the time, which was occasionally triangles.

Thro' it in every tear that I do dish the hems or borders of a garment.—4 Steps were wide-kneed breeches, in fashion in Shakespeare's time.—In reference to the supposition that the tear was that of a deity.—A woodcock means a foolish fol-

ow, that bird being supposed to have no brains.—I.e., "Her amber hairs have shown real amber to be foul in comparison with them."

Who sees the heavy- That, like a rude and savage man of Inde, At the first opening of the gorgeous east, Bows not his vassal head; and, strictest blind, Kisses the base ground with obedient breast? What peremptory, eagle-sighted eye Daves love upon the heaven of her brow, That is not blinded by her majesty? King. What zeal, what fury hath inspir'd thee now? My love, her mistress, is a gracious maid. She attending star, scarce seen a light. Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron. O! but for my love, day would turn to night. Of all complexions the cu'd sovereignty Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek; Where several worthies make one dignity, Where nothing wants that want itself doth seek. Love. I wash'd and flourished of all gentle tongues.— Fie, painted rhetoric! O! she needs it not: To things of sale a seller's praise belongs; She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot. A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn, Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye: Beauty doth vanish age, as if new-born, At the first opening of the gorgeous east. O! 'tis the sun, that maketh all things shine! King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony. Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine! A wife of such wood were felicity. O! who can give an oath? where is a book? That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack, If that she learn not of her eye to look: No sun, but fair, and he is but not black. King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell, The hue of dunces, and the shade of night; And beauty's best becomes the heavens well. Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of O! if in black my lady's brow be deck'd, light. It mourns, that painting, and usurping  hair, Should ravish doters with a false aspect; And therefore is she born to make black fair. Her favor turns the fashion of these days; For native blood is counted painting now, And therefore red, that would avoid disparage, Paints itself black, to imitate her now. Dun. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black. Long. And since her time are colliers counted crack. King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion Dun. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light. Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain, For fear their colors should be wash'd away. King. 'Twerce good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day. plain, Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here. King. No, sir, she fright thee as she doth she. Dun. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear. Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see. Biron. O! if the streets were paved with thine eyes, Her feet were much too dainty for such tread. Dun. O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies And see not how she should be wash'd over head. King. But what of this? Are we not all in love? Biron. O! nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn. [prove King. Then leave this chat: and, good Biron, now Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn. *Quibbles; sophistries. — *Our books," i.e., our true books, the eyes of women, from which we derive most information.

*Here, as throughout the play, the name of Biron is accentuated on the second syllable. — An allusion to the false hair, or periwigs, worn by ladies in Shakespeare's time.
Then, fools you were these women to forswear,
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love,
Or for love's sake, a word that 1 loves all men,
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women,
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men,
Let us once lose our oaths, to find ourselves,
Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths.
It is religion to be thus forsworn;
For charity itself fulfils the law,
And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!
Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords!

Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advis'd,
In conflict that you get the 3 sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing: lay these 5 glozes by.
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too: therefore, let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then, honeward, every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shew;
For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.
[* corn;
Biron. Allons! allons! — Sow'd cockle reap'd no And justice always win in equal measure;
Light wheels may prove plagues to men forsworn
If so, our copper buys no better treasure.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Holofener, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.
Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without savourity, witty without affection, 4 audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this week with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adrianino de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tanguam te: his humor is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue fad'd, his eye ambitious, his gait majestical, and his general behavior vain, ridiculous, and 4 Vernon: He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrihite, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epitaph.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasms, such insociable and 6 point-device companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak doubts, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce, debit—d, e, h, t, not d, e, t: he clefteth a calf, cauf: half, haut; neighbor vocatur nebor; neihe abbreviated me. This is abominable, (which he would call abominable,) it inmuteth 4 one of insania: ne intelligis domine? to make frantic, lunatic.

Nath. Live! or bone intellige.
Hol. Bone?—bone for bone: Priscian a little scratch'd; 'twill serve.

Enter Armado, Mooth, and Costard.

Nath. Violence quis venit?
Hol. Vide re, et pandeo.
Arm. Chirrah!

[To Mooth.
Hol. Quare Chirrah, non sirrah?
Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd.
Hol. Most military sir, salutation.
Mooth. They have been at a great feast of lam guages, and stolen the scraps.
Cost. O! they have lived long on the alma-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatis: thou art easier swallowed than a 7 flap-dragon.
Mooth. Peace! the peal begins.
Arm. Monsieur, [To Hol.] Are you not better'd?
Mooth. Yes, yes; he comes.
Vol. Four to the man, the hand-book.
What is a, b, c, d, e, f, g, backward with the horn on his
Hol. Ba, puertilla, with a horn added.
[head?
Mooth. Ba! most silly sheep, with a horn.—You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant?
Mooth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i.

Mooth. The sheep: the other two concludes it;

o, u.
Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranea, a sweet touch, a quick *vene of wit! snip, snap, quick and home: it rejoiceth my intellect; true wit!
Mooth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is *wit-old.
Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?
Mooth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.
Mooth. Lead me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infancy circim circit. A gig of a cuckold's head!
Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-penny purse of wit, thou pigon-egg of discretion. O! an the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father would'st thou make me. Go to; thou hast it ad dungiil, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O! I smell false Latin; dunghill for wagum.
Arm. Arts-man, praecambula: we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the large house on the top of the mountains?

Hol. Or mens, the hill.
Arm. At your sweet pleasure for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

* "That loves all men," i. e., that is pleasing to all men.

Scene II.—Another part of the Same. Before the Princess’s Pavillon.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria, 2 with presents.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, if farings come thus plentifully in: A lady will’d about with diamonds!—

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this; yea, as much love in rhyme, as would be cramm’d up in a sheet of paper, wrote on both sides the leaf, margin and all, That he was fain to seal on Oupid’s name.

Ros. You’ll ne’er be friends with him: a’ kill’d your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy; And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a very nimble, stirring spirit, She might a’ been a grandam ere she died; And so may you, for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What’s your dark meaning, ‘moue, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You’ll mar the light by taking it in a snuff; Therefore, I’ll darkly end the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it stiff i’ the dark.

Kath. So do not you, for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not!—O! that’s you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for, past cure is still past care.

Prin. Well banded both; a’ set of wit well play’d.

But, Rosaline, you have a favor too: Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew: An if my face were but as fair as your’s, My favor were as great: be witness this. Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron. The numbers true; and, were the num’ring too, I were the fairest goddess on the ground. I am compar’d to twenty thousand fairs. O! he hath draw’d my picture in his letter.

Prin. Any thing like?

Kath. Fair as a text ‘tis in a copy-book. [Debtor, Ros. Ware my pencils! How! let me not die your rod domine’d, my golden letter: O, that your face were not so full of ‘O’s! Prin. A pox of that jest! and I besw ear all ’shovrs! But, Katharine, what was sent to you from fair Duma in’s?

Kath. Madam, this glove.

Prin. Did he not send you twain?

Kath. Yes, madam; and, moreover, Some thousand verses of a faithful lover: A huge translation of hypocrisy, Vilely compil’d, profound simplicity.

ACT V.

Arm. Sir, it is the king’s most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable, for the afternoon: the word is well call’d, chosen; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir; I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my friend, I do assure you, my very good friend.—

For what I think between us, let it pass—I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy— I beseech thee, apparel thy head:—and among other important and most serious designs,—and of great import indeed, too,—but let that pass;—for I must tell thee, it will please his grace (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger, thus daily with my 2 excrement, with my mustachio:— but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honors it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass. —The very all of all is,—but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet sweet, with some delightful or show, or pageant, or antic, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine Worthies: Sir Nathiel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king’s command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman,—before the princess, I say, none so fit as to present the nine Worthies.

Kath. Where will you find men worthy enough to please them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself, myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabees; this swain, (because of his great limb or joint,) shall pass 4 for Pompey the great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that worthy’s thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? be he present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry, “Well done, Hercules! now thou crushest the snake;” that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies.—

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman.

Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this 4 fudge not, an antick, I beseech you, to follow.

Hol. A fide! Goodman Dull, thou hast spoken word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Alas! we will employ thee.

Dull. I’ll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the hay.

Scene II.

Love's Labor's Lost.

141

Mar. This, and these pearls to me sent Longaville: This will make that miss my hag is short; a half a mile is.

Prin. I think not least. Dost thou not wish in heart,
The chain were longer, and the letter short?

Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.

Prin. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.

Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mockings so.

Thou said Biron I'll torture ere I go,
O! that I knew he were in by this a week!
How would I make him fawn, and beg, and seek,
And wait the season, and observe the times,
And spend his prodigal wits in bootless rhymes,
And shape his service wholly to my behests,
And make him proud to make me proud that 8 jests!
So I potently would I oversway his state,
That he should be my fool, and I his fate. [catch'd.
Prin. None are so sure caught, when they are
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school,
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.

Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess,
As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. Folly in folies bears not so strong a note,
As foolish in the wise, when with the dote;
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To prove by wit worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boy. Of! I am stabb'd with laughter. Where's Prin. Thy news, Boyet? (ther grace?

Boy. Prepare, madam, prepare!

Arms, wenchers, arms! 2 encounters mounted are Against your peace. Love doth approach disguis'd,
Armed in arguments: you'll be surpris'd.
Mow, mows! or they stand in your own defence,
Or hide your heads like cowardly, and fly hence.

Prin. Saint Dennis to saint Cupid! What are they,
That charge 8 the breach against us? say, scout, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore,
I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour,
When, lo! to interrupt my purpose's rest,
Toward that shade I might behold 8 address
The king and his companions: narrowly
I stole into a neighbor thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That by and by disguis'd they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath conn'd as his embassage Action, and accent, did they teach him there;
"Thy must thou speak, and thus thy bowe bear!"
And ever and anon they made a doubt
Presence majestical would put him out;
For, "quoth the king, "an angel shalt thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously."
The boy reply'd, "an angel is not evil;
I should have feared her, had she been a devil."
With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder,
Making a bold wag by their praises honor.
"Oil, oil! his elbow thus, and 3 fleec'd and aware
A better speech was never spoke before:
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd 4 Vit! we do'll, come what will come?
The third he caper'd, and cried, "All goes well;
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zelous laughter, and profound,
That in this 8 spleen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's 8 sudden tears.

I. C. E., for a certainty. I would make him proud to fatter me, who mock at his flatteries. Ready; prepared. - Grimmed. - "Vit!" I. E., Come on! 8 This spleen ridiculous. 8, I. E., this ridiculous fit of laughter.

4 To parler, I. E., to converse; to talk.
5 Exchanges. - I. E., the tiffanux marks they wore.
Biron. Therefore meet. [They converse apart.
Dum. Will you vouchsafe to me to change a word?
Mar. Name it.
Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord,—
Take that for your fair lady.
Dum. Please it you, as much in private, and I'll bid adieu.
[They converse apart.
Kath. What, was your visor made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.
Kath. O, for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your mask, and would afford my speechless visor half. [call? Kath. 'Seal, quoth the Dutchman.—Is not veal a Long. A calf, fair lady?
Mar. No, a fair lord calf.
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No; I'll not be your half.
Take all, and wean it: it may prove an ox. [mocks. Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow. Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Bleat softly then: the butcher hears you cry. [They converse apart.
Biron. The tongues of mocking wenchers are as keen As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense, so sensible
Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things. [break off. Ros. Not one word more, my maid's: break off, Biron. By heaven, all your sweet heats with pure scots? Kath. Farewell, mad wenches: you have simple [Music plays. wits.
[Enter Kiva, Lords, Morn, Music, and Attendants.
Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?
Biron. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out, [fat. Ros. 'Well-likeing wits they have: gross, gross, fat,
Prin. O, poverty in wit, 1 'kill'd by pure flout!
Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night,
Or ever, but in visors, show their faces?
This part Biron was out of countenance quite.
Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.
Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.
Mar. Dumaine was at my service, and his sword:
No 'point, quoth I: my servant straight was mute,
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you, what he call'd me?
Prin. Quidam, perhaps.
Kath. Yes, in good faith.
Prin. Go, sickness as thou art! [leaps. Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute.
But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.
Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Mar. Dumaine is mine, as sure as bark on tree.
Biron. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear.
Immediately they will again be here
In their own shapes; for it can never be,
They will digest this harsh indignity.
Prin. Will they return?

Biron. Thous thou grieve'st my gall.

*a slow and solemn dance. — Eyes. — Cheat; lie.

They will, they will, God knows;
And lea for joy, though they are lame with blows;
Therefore, change s favors; and, when they repair,
Blow like sweet roses in this summer air. [stood.
Prin. How blow? how blow? speak to be under-Boyet. Fair ladies, mask’d, are roses in their bud;
Dismask’d, their damask sweet compound show,
Are angels veiling b clouds, or roses blown.
Prin. Avant, perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?
Ros. Good madam, if by me you’ll be advis’d,
Let’s mock them still, as well known, as disguis’d.
Let us complain to them what faults were here,
Disguis’d like Muscovites, in a shapeless gear;
And wonder, what they were, and to what end
Their shallow shows, and prologue vilely pound’d,
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our tent to us.
Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.
Prin. Whip to our tents, as roses run over land.
[Exeunt Princess, Ros, Kath, and Maria.

Enter the King, Biron, Longavile, and Dumas,
in their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God save you! Where is the princess?
Boyet. Gone to her tent: please it your majesty,
Command me any service to her thither?
King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.
Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.

[Exit. Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peck.
And utters it again when God doth please.
He is with peck, and renits his wares.
At wakes, and b wasails, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
This gallant pins the wrenches on his sleeve:
Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve.
A’ can carve too, and lipt: why, this is he,
That kiss’d his hand away in courtesy:
This is the apo of form, monsieur the nice.
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honorable terms: nay, he can sing
A c mean most mealy; and, in ushering,
Mend him who can: the ladies call him, sweet;
The stairs, as he trods on them, kiss his feet.
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whales’ bone; And conveinces, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.
King. A bluster on his sweet tongue, with my heart,
That put Armado’s page out of his part!

Enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet; Rosaline,
Maria, Katharine, and Attendants.
Biron. See where the comes — Behavior, what wert thou,
Till this man show’d thee? and what art thou now?
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
Prin. Fair, in all hail, is foul, as I conceive.
King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.
Prin. Then wish me better: I will give you leave.
King. We come to visit you, and purpose now
To lead you to our court: vouchsafe it then.
Prin. This field shall hold me, and so hold your

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

ACT V.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet years, and honest kersey hoes:
And, to begin,—wench, so God help me, la!
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.
Ros. Sans b sans, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rage:—bear with me, I am sick;
I'll leave it by degrees. Soft! let us see:—
Write "Lord have mercy on us" on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes:
These lords are visited; you are not free,
For the lord's tokens on you do I see.
Prin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.
Biron. Our states are forfeit: seek not to undo us.
Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forfeit, being those that do sue?
Biron. Peace! for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves: my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude trans.
Some fair excuse. [gression
Prin. The fairest is confession.
Were you not here, but even now, diagnosis'd?
King. Madam, I was.
Prin. And were you well advis'd?
King. I was, fair madam.
Prin. When you then were here,
What did you whisper in your lady's ear? [her.
King. That more than all the world I did respect
Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will reject
King. Upon mine honor, [her.
Prin. Peace! peace! forbear;
Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.
King. Despise me, when I break this oath of mine.
Prin. I will; and therefore keep it.—Rosaline,
What did the Russian whisper in your ear?
Ros. Madam, he swore, that he did hold me dear
As precious eye-sight, and did value me
Above this world; adding thereto, moreover,
That he would weep me, or else die my lover.
Prin. God give thee joy of him: the noble lord
Most honorably doth uphold his word. [truth,
King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my
I never swore this lady such an oath.
Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain,
You gave me this: but take it, sir, again.
King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give:
I know her by this jewel on her sleeve.
Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;
And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear.
What! will you have me, or your pearl again?
Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain.—
I see the trick on't:—here was a consent,
Knowing aforesaid of our merchant,
To dash it like a Christmas comedy.
[ivaz, Some e carry-tale, some b please-man, some slight
Some k mumble-news, some treacher-knight, some Dick,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd,
Told our intents before; which once disclos'd,
The ladies did change favors, and then we,
Follow'd the signs, would but be sign of her.
Now, to our perjury to add more terror,

We are again forewarn'd—in will, and error.
Much upon this it is:—and might not you [To Boyet.
Forestall our sport, to make us thus untrue?
Do not you know my lady's foot by the a square,
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jesting mercy.
You, up our page out: go, you are allow'd;
Die when you will, a smock shall be your shroud.
You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye,
Wounds like a leaden sword.
Boyet. Full merrily
Hath this brave manage, this career, been run. [done.
Biron. Lo! he is tilting straight. Peace! I have

Enter Costard.
Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,
Whether the three Worthies shall come or, in. Biron. What, are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is vane wise,
For every one pursents three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir, I hope, it is not so. [know what we know:
You cannot b beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we hope, sir, three times thrice, sir.—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.
Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord! sir, it were pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord! sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amount:
for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to perform one man,—o'en one poor man—Pompiion the great,
sir.

Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies?
Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompiion the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worth, but I am to stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir: we will take some care. [Exit Costard.
King. Biron, they will shame us; let them not approach.
Costard. We are shame-proof, my lord; and,'tis some
To have one show worse than the king's and his King. I say, they shall not come. [company.
Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you now.
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Die in the zeal of them which it presents,
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;
When great things laboring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.
Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words. [Armado converses with the King, and delivers a paper to him.
Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?
Prin. A speaks not like a man of God's making.
Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch; for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal compelement! [Exit Armado.

King. Here is like to be a good present for Wor- thies. He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pom- pey the great; the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Maccabees. And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive, These four will change habits, and present the other Biron. There is five in the first show. [five. King. You are deceived; 'tis not so. Biron. The pedant, the braggart, the hogge-priest, the fool, and the boy:—

Abate throw at a novum, and the whole world again Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein. King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again. Enter Costard armed, for Pompey.

Cost. "I Pompey am, Pompey surman'd the big,—"

Dum. The great. [great; Cost. It is great, sir,—"Pompey surman'd the That oft with targe and shield, did make my foot to sweat: [chance, And travelling along this coast I here am come by And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France." Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter Sir Nathaniel armed, for Alexander.

Nath. "When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander; [might: By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering My 'scutcheon plain declareth, that I am Alexander." Biron. Your nose says no, you are not; for it stands too 'right. [smelling knight. Biron. Your nose smells, no, in this, most tender Priu. The conqueror is dismay'd.—Proceed, good Alexander. Biron. For the ass to the Jude? give it him: — Judas, away. Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble. Biron. A light for monsieur Judas! it grows dark, he may stumble. [baised! Priu. Alas, poor Maccabees, how hath he been Enter Armado armed, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry. King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this. Biron. But is this Hector? King. I think Hector was not so clean-timber'd. Long. His leg is too big for Hector's. Dum. More call, certain. Biron. No; he is best indued in the small. Biron. This cannot be Hector. Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces. Arm. Biron. A lemon.
Long. Stuck with cloves.
Dum. No, cloven.
Arm. Peace!

Dum. That mint.

Long. That cumbine.
Arm. Sweet lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.
Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.
Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.
Arm. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten: sweet chuck's, beat not the bones of the buried:
when he breathed, he was a man.—But I will forward with my device. Sweet royally, bestow on me the sense of hearing.

Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.
Biron. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.
Boyet. Loves her by the foot.
Dum. He may not by the yard.
Arm. "This Hector far surmounted Hannibal,"—

Re-enter COSTARD, in haste, unarmed.

Cost. The party is gone: fellow Hector, she is gone;
she is two months on her way.
Arm. What meanest thou?
Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wonch is cast away: she's quick; the child brings in her belly already: 'tis yours.
Arm. Dost thou informaze me among potenates?
Thou shalt die.
Cost. Then shall Hector be chipp'd for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him.
Dum. Most rare Pompey!
Biron. Renowned Pompey!
Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the huge!
Dum. Hector trembles.
Biron. Pompey is moved.—More Ates, more
* Ares! stir them on! stir them on!
Arm. Hector will challenge him.
Biron. Ay, if a have no more man's blood in's belly than will sup a flea.

Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.
Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: 'tll slash; 'tll do it by the sword.—I pray you, let me borrow my arms again.

Dum. Room for the incensed Worthies!
Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.
Dum. Most resolve Pompey!
Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower.
Do you not see, Pompey is uncazing for the combat?
What mean you? you will lose your reputation.
Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.
Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Biron. What reason have you for't?
Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt. I go 5 woolward for penance.

Boyet. True, and it enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he wore none, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, and that a wears next his heart for a favor.

Enter Monsieur MERCEA, a Messenger.
Mer. God save you, madam.
Prin. Welcome, Mercade, but that thou interrupt'st our merriment.
Mer. I am sorry, madam, for the news I bring
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—

Prin. Dead, for my life!
Mer. Even so; my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away! The scene begins to cloud.
Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath.
I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.

King. How fares your majesty?
Prin. Boyet, prepare: I will away to-night.
King. Madam, not so: I do beseech you, stay.
Prin. Prepare, I say.—I thank you, gracious lords,
For all your fair endeavors; and entreat,
Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe
In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide,
The 4 liberal opposition of our spirits:
If over-boldly we have borne ourselves In the converse of breath, your gentleness Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord! A heavy heart bears not a nimble tongue.
Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks For so great a suit so easily obtained
King. The extreme 6 parting time expressly forms All causes to the purpose of his speed;
And often, at his very 6 loose, decides
That which long process could not arbitrate:
And though the mourning brow of progeny
Forbid the smiling courtesy of love
The holy suit which faiz it would 4 convince;
Yet, as the love's argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it From what it purpos'd; since, to wail friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not: my griefs are 6 dull.
Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of And by these bulges understand the king. [griefs;
For your rich sake have we neglected time,
Play'd fowl play with our oaths: your beauty, ladies,
Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our horrors Even to the opposed end of our intents;
And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—
As love is full of uncutting 4 strangeness;
All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain;
Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Varying in subjects, as the eye doth roll
To every varied object in his glance:
Which party-costed presence of loose love
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
Have misbecome our oaths and gravities,
Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,
Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false,
By being once false for ever to be true
To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you;
And even that falsehood, in itself 6 so base,
Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.

Prin. We have receiv'd your letters full of love;
Your favors, the ambassadors of love;

"More Ates," i. e., more instigation: Ate was the goddess of Discord.—"Northern man," i. e., a clown.—"Woodward," i. e., so as to leave the woollen clothes next the skin.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

And, in our maiden council, rated them
At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bombast, and as tiring to the time.
But more devout than this, in our respects
Have we not been; and therefore met your loves
In their own fashion, like a Merriment. [Jest.
Dum. Our letters, madam, show'd much more than Long. So did our looks.
Ros. We did not 8 quote them so.
King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,
Grant to your loves:
Prin. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in.
No, no, my lord, your grace is presum'd much,
Full of dear gultiness; and therefore this.—
If for my love (as there is no such cause)
You will do ought, this shall you do for me:
Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
If this sustere insociable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin 4 weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of this age;
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge me, 1 challenge by these deserts,
And by this virgin palm, now kissing thine,
I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut
My wotul self up in a mourning house,
Raising the tears of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my father's death.
If this thou do deny, let our hands part,
Neither entitled in the other's heart.
King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flutter up these powers of mine with rest,
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye.
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.
Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to me?
Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank:
You are attaint with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you my favor mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.
Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?
Kath. A wife — a fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.
Dum. O! shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?
Kath. Not so, my lord. A twelvemonth and a day
I'll mark no words that smooth-fac'd wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.
Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.
Kath. Yet swear not; lest you be forsworn again.
Long. What says Maria?
Mcr. At the twelvemonth's end,
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.
Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long.
Mar. The liker you: few taller are so young.
Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me:
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there?
Impose some service on me for thy love.
Ros. Oft 2 had I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you, and the world's great tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding floats,
Which you on all estates will 8 exercise,
That lie within the mercy of your wit:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And, threeswellth, to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won.
You shall this twelvemonth term, from day to day,
Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavor of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.
Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible:
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.
Ros. Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shall laugh hearing givers give to fools.
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Dread with the choirs of their own 4 dire groans,
Will hear your idle scorns, continue 6 them,
And I will have you, and that fault withal;
But, if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.
Biron. A twelvemonth! well, beful what will befal,
I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.
Prin. Ay, sweet, my lord; and so I take my leave.
[To the King.
King. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.
Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.
King. Come, sir, it wants twelvemonth and a day,
And then 'twill end.
Biron. That's too long for a play.
Enter Armado.
Arm. Sweet majesty, vouche safe me.—
Prin. Was not that Hector?
Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.
Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave.
I am a votary: I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.
King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.
Arm. Holla! approach.
Enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Mofl, Costard, and others.
This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring;
the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

SONG.

Spring. When daisies pried, and violet blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Doves paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he:
Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

II.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

ACT V.

The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he;
Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

III.
Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit, tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.
When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw;
When roasted "crabs kiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-who,
Tu-whit, tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way: we, this way. [Exeunt.

* Crab-apples.—b To keel the pot is to skim it.

SCENE; Athens, and a Wood not far from it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.
Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace: four happy days bring in Another moon; but, oh, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue. [lights;
Hie. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals,
The pale companion is not for our pomp.—— [Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelry.
Enter Egeus, with his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!
The. Thanks, good Egeus: what's the news with thee?
Ege. Full of vexation come I; with complaint

* A triumph was a public show.
Against my child, my daughter Hermia,—
Stand forth, Demetrius.—My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her.
Stand forth, Lysander; and, my gracious duke,
This hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:
Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,
And interchang'd love-tokens with my child:
Thou hast by moon-light at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
And stol'n the impression of her fancy
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, *gawds, conceits, Knacks, trifles, nose-gays, sweet-meat (messengers
Of strong prevall'd in unharden'd youth,) With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's heart;
Demetrius is a wanton gentleman.

Hermia. So is Lysander.

The. In himself he is;
But, in this kind, wanting your father's voice,
The other must be hold the worthier.

Her. I would, my father look'd but with my eyes!
The. Rather, your eyes must with his judgment
Be mov'd to your father's. I beseech you trust your grace to pardon me. [Look.
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concern my modesty,
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts;
But I beseech your grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to abjure
For the sake of men. Therefore, fair Hermia,
Question your desires; Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Truce blessed they, that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthly happier is the rose distill'd,
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
 Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto the liberties of those unwis'd yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause: and by the next new moon,
The sealing-day bestrew my love and me
For everlasting bond of fellowship,
Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia;—and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And with what mine, and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
(If not with vantage,) as Demetrius;
And, which is more than all these boons can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.

Demetrius. I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this *spotted and inconstant man.

The. I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with it some thought I have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus: you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.——
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will,
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life.——
Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?——
Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial, and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

[Exeunt Egeus, Hippolyta, Demetrius, and Lysander.

Her. Ah me! for aught that I could ever read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
That true love ever did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood,—

Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to love!
Lys. Or else misguid'd, in respect of years;—
Her. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!
Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of two men:—
Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes!—
Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the *collid'd night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say,—behold!
The jaws of death do devour it up:
So sickly things come to confusion.

Her. If, then, true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then, let us teach our trial, patience,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers. [misd.
Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, Heri—
I have a widow aunt, a dowager.
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.

* Gawds,* i.e., baubles; toys; trifles, as for aye, i.e., for ever. Earthly happier, i.e., happier in an earthly sense.

4 Wickel. — Besow: — Momentary. — Blackened. — Fen- cier here is love.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee, And to that place the sharp Athenian law Cannot pursue us. If thou lov'st me, then, Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night, And in the wood, a league without the town, (Where I did meet thee once with Hermia, To do observance to a morn of May) There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander!
I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow, By his best arrow with the golden head, By the simplicity of Venus' doves, By that which knitted course, and prosper loves, And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen, When the false Trojan under sail was seen; By all the vows that every man have broke, In number more than ever women spoke; In that same place thou hast appointed me, To-morrow truel will I meet with thee.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speed fair Hermia! Whither away? Hel. Call me you fair? that fair again unsay. Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair! Your eyes are like stars, and your tongue's sweet air More tuneful than lark to shepherd's ear, When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Sickness is catching; O, were I favor so! Your words I would, fair Hermia: ere I go, My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye, My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody. Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated, The rest I'll give to be to you translated. O! teach me how you look, and with what art You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart. Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still. Hel. O, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill! Her. I give him curious, yet he gives me love. Hel. O, that my prayers could such affection move! Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me. Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me. Her. His fault, fair Hermia, is none of mine. Hel. None, but your beauty: would that fault were mine! Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face; Lysander and myself will fly this place.— Before the time I did Lysander see, Seems'd Athens as a paradise to me: Then, what graces in my love must dwell, That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell! Lys. Helen, to your minds we will unfold. To-morrow night when Phoebe doth behold Her silver visage in the warby glass, Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass, (A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,) Through Athens' gates have we devised to steal. Her. And in the wood, where often you and I Upon faint primrose-beds were wont to lie, Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet, There my Lysander and myself shall meet; And thence, from Athens, turn away our eyes, To seek new friends and stranger companies. Farewell, sweet playfellow: pray thou for us, And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!— Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight From lovers' food, till morrow deep midnight.

[Exit Herm.]

Lys. I will, my Hermia.—Helena, adieu: As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! [Exit Lys. Hel. How happy some, o'er other some can be! Through Athens I am thought as fair as she; But what of that? Demetrius think not so; He will not know what all but he do know; And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes, So I, admiring of his qualities. Things base and vile, holding no quantity, Love can transpose to form and dignity. Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind, And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind: Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste: Wings, and no eyes, figure unhoedy haste: And therefore is love said to be a child, Because in choice he is so oft beguiled. As waggish boys in "game themselves forswear, So the boy love is perjur'd every where: For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye, He hal'd down oaths that he was only mine; And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt, So he dissolve'd, and showers of oaths did melt. So will I go him of fair Hermia's flight; Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night, Pursue her; and for this intelligence If I have thanks, it is dear recompense: But herein mean I to enrich my pain, To have his sight thither, and back again. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in a Cottage.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bot. You were best to call them generally, by man, according to the script.
Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and duchess on his wedding-day at night.
Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors, and so go on to appoint.
Quin. Marry, our play is—The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.
Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry.—Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.
Quin. Answer, as I call you.—Nick Bottom, the weaver.
Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.
Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.
Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?
Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.
Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it; if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move stones: I will conde in some measure. To the rest—yet my chief humor is for a tyrant: I could play 'Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split.

"The raging rocks,"
"And shivering shocks,"
"Shall break the locks"
"Of prison-gates:"
"And Phibbus' ear"
"Shall shine from far,"
"And make and mar"
"The foolish fates."

a Your fair, b c. your fairest; your beauty. — b The lode-star is the polar star. — c Countenance; feature. — d Transformed; changed. — e Sport = Eyes. — f Scrip, i.e., script, a written paper. — g Gallantly. — h Hercules.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter A Fairy and Puck at opposite doors.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Flu. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough bush, thorough brier,

Over park, over pale,

Thorough Faggot, thorough fire,

I do wander everywhere,

Swifter than the moon's sphere;

And I serve the fairy queen,

To dew her orbs upon the green:

The cowslips all her pensioners be;

In their gold ~ cups spots you see.

Those be rubies, fairy favours,

In those freckles live their savors:

I must go seek some dew-drops here,

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

Farwell, thou *tob of spirits: I'll be gone.

Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night.

Take heed, the queen come not within his sight;

For Oberon is passing fell and wrathful.

Because that she, as her attendant hath

A lovely boy, stol'n from an Indian king:

She never had so sweet a changeling;

And jealous Oberon would have the child

Knight of his train, to trace the forests wild;

But she, perfidious, withholds the loved boy,

Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy:

And now they never meet in grove, or green,

By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen,

But they do ~ square; that all their elves, for fear,

Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.

Flu. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,

Or else you are that shrewd and kuavish sprite,

Call'd Robin Good-fellow. Are you not he,

That frights the maidens of the Villagery;

Skims milk, and sometimes labors in the ~ queen,

And bootless makes the breathless housewife churn;

And sometimes makes the drink to bear no ~ harm;

Misleads night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,

You do their work, and they shall have good luck.

Are not you he?

Puck. Aye, Fairy, thou speakest right;

I am that merry wanderer of the night.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,

When I a fat and bean-fed herd beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a silly foal;

And sometimes luck I in a goosip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted ~ crab;

And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob,

And on her wither'd dew-lap pour the ale.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,

Sometimes for three-foot stool mistaketh me;

Then slip I from her bum, down topples she,

And ~tailor' cries, and falls into a cough;

And then the whole quire hold their hips, and laugh,

And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and swear

A merrier hour was never wasted there.

But root, Fairy; here comes Oberon.

[gone!]

Flu. And here my mistress.—Would that he be

Enter OBERON, from one side, with his train, and

TITANIA, from the other, with hers.

Obe. I'll met by moon-light, proud Titania.

Tita. What, jealous Oberon! 4 Fairies, skip hence:

* As if. — Stage properties. — "Hold, or cut bow-strings," i. e., be punctual, at all events, come what will.
I have forsworn his bed and company.
Obe. Tarry, rash wanton. Am I not thy lord?
Tita. Then, I must be thy lady; but I know
When thou hast stol'n away from fairy land,
And in the shape of Constable, all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love
To amorous Phyllida. Why art thou here,
Therefore, from the farthest steep of India,
But that, forsooth, the bounding Amazon,
Your buckin'd mistress and your warrior love.
To Theseus must be wedded, and I come
To thank your majesty for the present.
Obe. How came thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolyta,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glittering night
From Perigonia, where he ravished?
And make him with fair Eglé break his faith,
With Arlechino, and Andropas?
Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paven fountain, or by rushy brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brows thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Thus in the winds, pipes to us, as revenge,
Have said, and up from the sea
Contagious fog; which falling in the land,
Have ev'ry pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborne their continents:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat; and the green corn
Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
The fall of sands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock:
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud;
And the quaint mazes on the wanton green,
For lack of tread are indistinguishable.
The human mortals want their winter here:
No night is now with hymn or carol blest;
Therefore the moon, the governor of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatic diseases do abound:
And thorough this distemperature, we see
The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
And on old Hyen's chin, and icy crown,
An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
Leaves in mockery, set
In mock mockery, set,
The chiding autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries; and the mazed world,
By their fineness, now knows not which is which.
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our dissenion, from our dissension:
We are their parents and original.
Obe. Do you amend it then; it lies in you.
What should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my handman.
Tita. Set your heart at rest:
2Thy fairy land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a vextress of my order:
And, in the speeded Indian air, by night,
False love hath she gossiped a hundred side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking th' embarked traders on the flood;
When we have laugh'd to see the sailors conceiving,
And grow big-bellied, with the wanton wind;
Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait
Following, (her womb, then ripe with my young
Would imitate, and sail upon the land,
[squire]
To fetch me triles, and return again,
As from a vessel, richly man's paradise.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake I do rear up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.
Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?
Tita. Farewell, till after Theseus' wedding-day.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, and our day,
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.
Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.
Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom.—Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.
[Exit Titania, with her train.
Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this Till I torment thee for this injury.—
[grove,
My gentle Puck, come hither: thou remember'st Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And had a mermaid on a dolphin's back Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-nymph's music.
Puck. I remember.
Obe. That very time I saw (but thou could'st not),
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took At a fair vestal crowned by the west, And loo'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow, As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts: But I might see young Cupid's lusty shaft Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial voutress past on, In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell: It fell upon a little western flower, Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound, And maidens call it love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once:
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid, Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that is seen.
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again, Ere the leviathan can swim a league.
Puck. I'd put a girdle round about the earth In forty minutes.
[Exit Puck.
Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing then she wakings looks upon,
(If it be lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,) She shall pursue it with the soul of love;
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,
(As I can take it with another herb)
I'll make her render up her page to me,
But who con's here? I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference.
[Retiring. Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.
Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia?
The one I'll slay, the other slay me.
Thou toldst me they were stol'n into this wood,
And here am I, and wood within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence! get thee gone, and follow me no more.
1 A compliment to Queen Elizabeth was here intended.
2 Exempt from the power of love.— The tricolor'd violet.
3 Mad; raging.
Hel. You draw me on, you hard-hearted amadant; But yet you draw not iron, for my heart Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw, And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair? Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you? Hel. And even for that do I love you the more. I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius, The more you beat me, I will fawn on you: Use me but as your spaniel, spur me, strike me, Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave, Unworthy as I am, to follow you.

What worser place can I beg in your love, (And yet a place of high respect with me,) Than to be used as you use your dog?

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit, For I am sick when I do look on thee.

Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you. Dem. You do impose your modesty too much; To leave the city, and commit yourself Into the hands of one that loves you not; To trust the opportunity of night, And the ill counsel of a desert place, With the rich worth of your virginity.

Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that. It is not night, when I do see your face, Therefore I think I am not in the night; Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company, For you, in my respect, are all the world. Then how can it be said, I am alone, When all the world is here to look on me?

Dem. I'll run from thee, and hide me in the brakes, And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.

Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you. Run when you will, the story shall be chang'd: Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase: The spark pursues the griffin; the wild hind Makes speed to catch the tiger. Bootless speed! When cowardice pursues, and valor flies.

Dem. I will not stay thy questions: let me go; Or, if thou follow me, do not believe But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field, You do me mischief. 'Fie, Demetrius!'

Your wrongs do sate a scandal on my sex: We cannot fight for love, as men may do; We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo. I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell, To die upon the hand I love so well.

[Exeunt Dem. and Hel.]

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this grove, Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.—

Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Hast thou the flower there? Welcome, wanderer.

Hel. Ay, there it is.

Obe. I pray thee, give it me.

I know a bank where the wild thyme blows, Where cowslips and the nodding violet grows; Quite over-canopied with lichen woodbine, With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine; There sleeps Titania, some time of the night, Lull'd in these bowers with dances and delight; And there the snake throws her enamell'd skin, Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in: And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes, And make her full of hateful fantasies. Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove: A sweet Athenian lady is in love

With a disdainful youth; anon his eyes; But do it, when the next thing he espies May be the lady. Thou shalt know the man By the Athenian garments he hath on. Effect it with some care, that he may prove More fond on her, than she upon her love. And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.

Puck. Fear not, my lord: your servant shall do so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood. Enter Titania, with her train.

Tita. Come, now a roundelay, and a fairy song; Then, in the third part of a minute, hence: Some to kill campers in the musk-rose buds; Some war with frown-mace for their leathern wings, To make my small elves costs; and some keep back The clamorous owl, that nightly howls, and wonders At our quaint spirits. Sing me now a lullaby; Then to your offices, and let me rest.

FAIRIES' SONG.

1 Fai. You spotted snakes, with double tongue, Thorny hedges, be not seen,
2 Fai. On's, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
3 Fai. Come not near our fairy queen.

CHORUS.

Philomel, with melody,
 sings your sweet lullaby;
 Lullia, lullia, lullaby;
 Lullia, lullia, lullaby;
 Never harm,
 Nor spell nor charm,
 Come our lovely lady nigh;
 For, good night, with lullaby.

TITANIA SLEEPS.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
3 [Anointing Titania's eye-lids. Do it for thy true love sake; Love, and languish for his sake:
 Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
 Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
 In thy eye that shall appear
 When thou wak'st, it is thy dear,
 When wake some vile thing is near.

[Exeunt Fairies. TITANIA SLEEPS.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
 And to speak truth, I have forgot our way:
 We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
 And tarry for the comfort of the day.
 Herm. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed,
 For I upon this bank will rest my head.
 Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both:
 One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one truth.

*The roundelay was a kind of circular dance. — f Bats.— e Sports. — f Bats.— e Cocks.— f Tigers; tiger-cats.— e Leopards.
Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear, Lie further off yet: do not lie so near.

Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence; Love takes the meaning in love's 1 confidence. I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit, So that but one heart we can make of it;

Two bosoms interchanged with an oath; So then, if two bosoms, and a single truth. Then, by your side no bed-room me deny, For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.

Lysander riddles very prettily.

Now much bestrew my manners and my pride, If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied.

But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy Lie further off; for human modesty

Such separation as may well be said

Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid,

So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend.

Thy love no' er alter till thy sweet life end!

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;

And then end life, when I end loyalty!

Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!

Her. With half that wish the wiser's eye be press'd O. [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,

But Athenian found I none,

On whose eyes I might approve

This flower's force in stirring love.

Night and silence! who is here?

Weeds of Athens he doth wear:

This is he, my master said,

Deepseth the Athenian maid;

And here the maiden, sleeping sound

On the dank and dirty ground.

Pretty soul! she durst not lie

Near this lack-love, kill-courtesy.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw

All the power this charm doth love.

[Anointing his eyes.]

When thou wak'st, let love forbid

Sleep his seat on thy eyelid.

So awake when I am gone,

For I must now to Oberon. [Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius. Dem. I charge thee, hence; and do not haunt me thus.

Hel. O! wilt thou 5 darkling leave me? do not so.

Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go. [Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O! I am out of breath in this fond chase.

The more my prayer, the lesser is my 1 grace.

Happy is Hermia, where'er she lies,

For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears:

If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than her's.

No, no, I am as ugly as a bear,

For beasts that meet thee, run away for fear;

Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius

Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.

What wicked and dissembling glass of mine

Made me compare witie Hermia's spar' 2 eyne? —

But who is here? — Lysander on the ground?

Dead, or asleep? — I see no blood, no wound.

Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. And run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake.

[They wak.]

Transparent Hermia! Nature here shows art,

That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.

Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word

Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.

What though he love your Hermia? Lord! what though?

Yet Hermia still loves you: then, be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent

The tedious minutes I with her have spent.

Not Hermia, but Helena I love.

Who will not change a raven for a dove?

The will of man is by his reason sway'd,

And reason says you are the worthier maid;

Things growing are not ripe until their season;

So I, being young, till now 'ripe' not to reason;

And touching now the point of human skill,

Reason becomes the marshal to my will,

And lends me to your eyes; where I o'erlook

Love's stories, written in love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?

When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn?

Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,

That I did never, no, nor never can,

Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,

But you must flout my insufficiency?

Good truth, you do me wrong; good sooth, you do,

In such disdainful manner me to woo.

But fare you well: perform I must confess,

I thought you lord of more true gentleness.

O, that a lady, of one man refused,

Should, of another, therefore, be abused! [Exit.

Lys. She sees not Hermia.—Hermia, sleep thou

And never may'st thou come Lysander near; [there

For, as of the sweetest things

The deepest lousting to the stomach brings;

Or, as the heresies, that men do leave,

Are hated most of those they did deceive;

So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy,

Of all be hated, but the most of me;

And all my powers address 2 their love and might,

To honor Helena, and to be her knight. [Exit.

Hel. 4 Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best,

To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast.

Ah, me, for pity! — what a dream was here! Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear. Methought a serpent eat my heart away,

And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.

Lysander! what, remov'd? Lysander! lord!

What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word? Alack! where are you? speak, if you hear;

Speak, of all 2 loves! I swoon almost with fear.

No! — then I well perceive you are not nigh:

Either death, or you, I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. 6 Titania lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this Hawthorn brake our 'tiring-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince.—

Quin. What say'st thou, bully Bottom? [Exit

"Ripe not," i. e., was not ripe.—"Of all loves," i. e., by all that is dear.
Bot. There are things in this comedy of "Pyramus and Thisby," that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself, which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. *By'rinking, a *parlous fear.

Star. I believe, we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver. This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and *six.

Bot. No, make it two more: let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more *feareful wild-fowl than your lion living, and we ought to look to it.

Snout. Therefore, another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect; *"Ladies, or fair belles, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come bither as a lion, it were pity of my life: no, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are:" and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug, the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things: that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snug. Both the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanack; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorn, and say, he comes to disguise, or to present, the person of moonshine.

Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby (says the story,) did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snug. You can never bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must *present wall; and let him have some plaster, or some *time, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall: *and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin. When you have spoken your speech, enter into that friar; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

So near the cradle of the fairy queen?

What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor;

An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus.—Thisby, stand forth.

Pyr. "Thisby, the flowers *have odious savors sweet,"—

Quin. Odors, odors.

Pyr. *Odors savors sweet:\n
So lath thy breath, my dearest Thisby, dear.—

But, hark, a voice! stay thou but here a while.

And by and by I will to thee appear." [Exit.

Puck. A stranger Pyramus than o'er play'd here.

[Exit.

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

This. *Most radiant Pyramus, most Ily-white of hue,

Of color like the red rose on triumphant brier, Most briskly *jubenum, and *eke most lovely Jew,

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire, I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb."

Quin. Ninny's tomb, now. Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, *cues and all.—Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is, "never tire."

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head on.

This. O!—*As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire."

Pyr. "If I were, fair Thisby, I were only thine—"

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.

Pray, masters! fly, masters! help!

[Exeunt Clowns, 6 in confusion.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round, Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier:

Sometimes a horse I'll be, sometimes a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometimes a fire;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

[Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afraid.

Re-enter Snout.

Snout. O Bottom! thou art changed: what do I see on thee?

[Exit 'frightened.

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own, do you?

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated.

[Exit 'frightened.

Bot. I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me, to fright me, if they could; but I will not stir from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Sings.

The 6 oosel-cock, so black of hue,

With orange-tawney bill,

The 6 thrush with his note so true,

The wren with little quill.

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

[Exeunt.

Bot. The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo pray,

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer, nay;

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a

*By our lady.—Alarming; amazing.—Verses of eight and six syllables.—Terrible.—Represent.—Thicket.

† Young man.—Likewise.—The cues are the last words of the preceding speech.—Blackbird.—Thrush.
Tita. Come, wait upon him: lead him to mybower.

Enter Puck.

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.

Enter Oberon.

Ober. I wonder, if Titania be awake'd;

Then, what it was that next came in her eye,

Which she must done on in extremity.

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither; but if I lead wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go:

Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.

I am a spirit of no common rate;

The summer still doth tend upon my state,

And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;

I'll show thee fairies to attend on thee;

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:

And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.—

Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed!

Enter Four Fairies.

1. Fai. Ready.

2. Fai. And I.

3. Fai. And I.

4. Fai. Where shall we go?

Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman:

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apricocks, and dewberries,

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.

Their honey bags steal from the humble-bee,

And for night nippers crop their waxen thighs,

And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,

To have my love to bed, and to arise;

And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

1. Fai. Hail, mortal!

2. Fai. Hail!

3. Fai. Hail!

4. Fai. Hail!

Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech, your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire 2 of you more acquaintance, good master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Cobweb.

Bot. Peas-blossom.

Bot. I do not, you recommend me to mistress 8 Squash, your mother, and to master Peascod, your father. Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire 3 of you more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Muss. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox had no path through any quarter of your house.

I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire 4 of you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

* Joke; jest. — b Apricots and raspberries. — a A squash meant formerly an unripe peaseed. — c Your patience" is spoken here ironically: as the opinion was formerly prevalent, that mustard excited cholera.
Her brother's noon-tide with th' Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
I Pierc'd through the heart with your stern cruelty;
Yet you, the mourner, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.

Hel. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give me him?

Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

Hel. Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of murder's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, c'en for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with double tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion in a mispriz'd flood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood,
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Hel. I pray thee, tell me, then, that he is well.
Dem. And, if I could, what should I get therefore?

Hel. A privilege, never to see me more.—
And from thy hated presence part I so;
See me no more, whether he be dead or no.

[Exit.]

Dem. There is no hope in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay.

[Act.

Hel. And hid the love-juice on some true-love's sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

Puck. Then fute o'er-rules; that one man holding truth,
A million fool, confounding oath on oath.

Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind.
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer
With sighs of love, that cost the fresh blood dear.
By some illusion see thou bring her here:
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go;
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow.

[Exit.]

Obe. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.

Puck. When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky,—
When thou wak'st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter PUCK.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the youth mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's foe;
Shall we their food pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!

Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And these things do best please me,
That befall preposterously.

* Trick.— Mistaken.— Mistake.—* Love-sick.

Enter Lysander and HER. Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in Scorn and derision never come in tears: [ls? ern?)
Look, when I vow I weep, and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can those things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O, devilish-holy fray!
These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tares.

Lys. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!

[Awaking.

To what, my love, shall I compare this? by eye?
Crystal is muddy. O! how rare in show
Thy lips, these kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure concealed white, high Taurus snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow,
When thou hold'st up thy hand. O, let me kiss
This impress of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me, for your torment:
Had there is no good, so knew ever Hermes,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join in souls to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so;
To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
When, I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia,
And now both rivals, to mock Helena.
A trim exploit, a manly enterprize,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision! none of noble sort
Would so offend a virgin, and extort
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius: be not so,
For you love Hermia; this, you know, I know:—
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;
And yours in Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Lys. Keep thy Hermia: I will none:
If o'er I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sejourn'd,
And now to Helena it is return'd,
There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest to thy peril thou aby it dear.

Hel. Where thy love comes: yonder is thy dear.

Enter HERMIA.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function
The ear more quick of apprehension makes; [takes,
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompence.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so? [go?

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to her.
What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
Fair Helena, who more cugilds the night
Than all you fiery * oes and eyes of light.
Why seekst thou me? I could not this make thee know,
The hate I have thee made me leave thee so?
Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.
Hel. Lo! she is one of this confederacy.
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.
Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspired, have you with these contriv'd
To mist me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the lusty-footed time
For parting us,—O! is all forgot?
All school-day's friendship, 'childhood's innocence?'
We, Hermia, like two * artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition;
Two * loving berries moulded on one stem,
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in her, and Duc to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.
Hel. You have amazed your fondest words.
I scorn you not: it seems that you scorn me.
Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face,
And made your other love, Demetrius,
(Who even but now did spur me with his foot)
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection,
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon love, so fortunate,
But miserable most to love unlov'd,
This you should pity, rather than despise.
Hel. I understand not what you mean by this.
Hel. Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you *had any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But, fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault,
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.
Lys. St. gentle Helena: hear my excuse:
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!
Hel. O excellent!
Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.
Dem. If she cannot entertain, I can compel.
Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
The thoughts have no might against the heart.
Helen, I love thee; by my life, I do: [prayers—
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.
Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.
Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

---

*Circles.—Artful; ingenious.—"Such an argument," i.e., such a subject of light merriment.

4 Canker-worm.—Shrewish; mischievous.—Foolish.
Her. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid: she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir; she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O! when she is angry, she is keen and shrewd. She was a vixen when she went to school; And, though she be but little, she is fierce. Lys. Little again? nothing but low and little?— Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?

Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf; You minimus, of hindering * knot-grass made; You head, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious In her behalf that scorns your services. Let her alone; she speak not of Helena; Take not her part, for if thou dost intend Never so little show of love to her, Thou shalt aby it.

Lys. Now she holds me not; Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right, Or thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow? nay, I'll go with thee, check by jowl. [Exit Lyseus and Demetrius.

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is long of you.

Nay, go not back.

Hel. I'll not trust you, I. Nor longer stay in your curt company, Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray; My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit. Her. I am amazed, and know not what to say. [Exit.

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistak'st, [Coming forward. Or else commit'st thy knavery wilfully.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook. Did not you tell me I should know the man By the Athenian garments he had on? And so far blameless proves my enterprise, That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes; And so far am I glad it so did sort, As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou scat, these lovers seek a place to fight: He therefore, Robin, overcast the night; The starry wealkin cover thou anon With drooping frog, as black as Acheron; And lead these testy rivals so astray, As one come not within another's way. Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue, Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong; And sometime rail thou like Demetrius; And from each other look thou lead them thus, Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep, With leaden legs and bawdy wings, doth creep: Then crush this herb into Lyssander's eye; Whose liquor hath this virtuous property, To take from thence all error with his might, And make his eye-balls roll with wonted sight. When they next wake, all this derision Shall seem a dream, and fruitless fantasy; And back to Athens shall the lovers wander, With league, whose date till death shall never end. While's I in this affair do thee employ, I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy; And then I will her charmed eye release From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste, For night's swift dragoons cut the clouds full fast, And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger; At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,

Knot-grass was acently believed to hinder the growth of children. pretending to have seen it drawn up—"Long of you," i. e., on your account.— Chance; fall out. —Go. Troop home to church-yards: damned spirits all, That in cross-ways and floods have * burial, Already to their wormy beds are gone; For fear lest day should look their shame upon, They willfully themselves exile from light, And must for eye consort with black-brow'd night. Obe. But we are spirits of another sort. I with the morning's * love have oft made sport; And, like a forester, the groves may tread, Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red, Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams, Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams. But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay! [Ron. We may effect this business yet ere day. [Exit One-

Puck. Up and down, up and down; I will lead them up and down: I am fear'd in field and town; Goblin, lead them up and down. Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Puck. Follow me then To plainer ground. [Exit. Lys. as following the voice.

Enter Demetrius. Lys. Lysander! speak again. Thou runnaway, thou coward, art thou fled? [Head? Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy Puck. Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars, Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars, And wit not come? Come, recreant; come, thou wilt whip thee with a rod: he is defild, [Child: That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. You; art thou there? Puck. Follow my voice: we'll try to manhood here. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Lysander.

Lys. He goes before me, and still dares me on: When I come where he calls, then he is gone. The villain is much lighter heed'd than I: I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly; That fallen am I in dark uneven way, And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day! [Lies down. For if but once thou show me thy grey light, I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. [Sleeps.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck. Ho! ho! ho! Coward, why com'st thou not? Dem. Abide me if thou dar'st; for well I wot, Thou run'st before me, shifting every place, And dar'st not stand, nor look me in the face. Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here. Dem. Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt If ever I thy face by day-light see: ["By this dear, Now, go thy way: Fainest constrain me To measure out my length on this cold bed. By day's approach look to be visited. [Lies down and sleeps.

Enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night! O, long and tedious night! Abate thy hours: shine, comforts, from the cast, That I may back to Athens, by day-light; From these that my poor company detests.

5 The ghosts of self-murderers, who were buried in cross-roads, and those who perished by drowning (according to the opinion of the ancients), were condemned to wander for a hundred years.—* Chrymus, the mighty hunter, was here probably meant.—"By this dear," i. e., rue this dearly.
Scene I. Midsummer-Night's Dream. 161

And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye,
Steal me a while from mine own company. [Sits.

Puck. Ye W. yet three! Come one more;
Two of both kinds make up four.
Here she comes, curt and sad.
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers:
I can no farther crawl, no farther go;
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.
Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

Puck. On the ground sleep sound:
I'll apply to your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.

[Anointing Lysander's eyes.

When thou wak'st, see thou tak'st
True delight in the sight
Of thy former lady's eye;
And the country proverb known,
That every man should take his own,
In your waking shall be shown:
Jack shall have Jill;
Nought shall go ill;
The man shall have his mare again,
And all shall be well.

[Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. &c. sleep.

ACT IV.

Scene I.—The Same.

Enter Titania and Bottom; Fairies attending; Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable checks do o'er,

And stick music-roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

Scratch thy head, Peas-blossom.—Where's

Bot. Monseur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not: I would be loath to have you overflown with a honey-bag, signior.—Where's monsieur Mustard-seed?
Must. Ready.

Bot. Give me your belf, monsieur Mustard-seed.
Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monsieur.

Must. What's this, you belf, good monsieur, but to help cavally Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monseur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?
Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let's have the tongs and the bones.
Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desire'st to eat.

Bot. Truly, a peck of pownder: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks, I have a great desire to a bottle of haqy: good haqy, sweet haqy, hath no fellow.

Tit. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirel's board, and fetch thee new nuts.
Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.

Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be a while away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle,
Gently entwists: the female ivy so
Enrings the banky fingers of the elm.
O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Obe. [Advancing.] Welcome, good Robin. Seest thou this sweet sight?

Her dotage now I do begin to pity;
For meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet savors for this hateful fool,
I did upbraided her, and fall out with her;
For she his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;
And that same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'rets' eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.
When I had at my pleasure taunted her,
And she in mild terms begg'd my patience,
I then did ask of her her changeling child,
Which straight she gave me; and her fairy sent
To bear him to my bower in fairy land.

And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes:
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian awain,
That he, awakening when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair,
And think no more of this night's accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a dream.

But first I will release the fairy queen.

Be, as thou wast wont to be; [Anothing her See, as thou wast wont to see;]
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power.

Now, my Titania! wake you, my sweet queen.—
Tit. My Oberon! what visions have I seen?

Methought, I was enamor'd of an ass.

Obe. There lies your love.

Tit. How came these things to pass?

Obe. Silence, a while—Robin, take off this head.—

Titania, music call; and strike more dead
Than common sleep of all these five the sense.

Tit. Music, ho! music! such as charmeth sleep.

Puck. Now, when thou wak'st, with thine own fool's eyes peep. [with me,

Obe. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hands
And reck the ground whereon these sleepers be.
Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will to-morrow midnight solemnly

Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly,
And bless it to all fair posterity.
There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark:
Do hear the morning lark.

Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade;

"To "coy" is to stroke or soothe with the hand.—Fist.
—Cavallerio.

1 To the sad, l.e., grave, serious.
Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGUS, and train.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;
For now our observation is perform'd:
And since we have the bavard of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds.—
Uncouple in the western valley: let them go!—
Despatch, I say, and find the forester.—
We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hipp. I was with Hercules, and Cadmus, once,
When in a wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So dew'd, so sanded; and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lap'd like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tunable
Was never balloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly: these?
Judge, when you hear.—But, soft! what nymphs are

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.

The. No doubt, they rose up early, to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord. [horns.

The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their [Horns, and shouts within. DEMETRIUS, LY- SANDER, HERMIA, and HELENA, wake and start up.*

The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is Begin these wood-birds but to couple now? past;
Log. Pardon, my lord. [He and the rest kneel.

The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know, you two are rival enemies:
How comes this gentle concert in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

Log. My lord, I shall reply amazingly,
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak;—
And now I do behind me, so it is)
I came with Hermia hither: our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.

Ege. Enough, enough! my lord, you have enough.
I bad the law, the law, upon his head.
They would have stol'n away; they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me;
You, of your wife, and me, of my consent,

We the globe can compass soon,
Swifter than the wandering moon.

This. Come, my lord; and in our flight,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground. [Exeunt.

[Horns sound within.*

Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood;
And in I fury hither follow'd them,
Fair Helen in fancy was following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
*(But by some power it is), my love to Hermia,
Melted as the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gawd,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. *To her, my lord,
Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:*
But, like in sickness, did I loath this food;
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met.
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—

Egeus, I will overbear your will, and
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purpose hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us, to Athens: three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—

Come, Hipolyta.

[Exeunt THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGUS, and train.*

Dem. These things seem small, and undistinguish-Like far-off mountains turned into clouds. able,
Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seems double.

Hel. So methinks;—
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

Her. Yea; and my father.

Hel. And Hippolyta.

Dem. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake. Let's follow him;
And by the way let us recount our dreams. Exeunt.
[Exeunt. Bot. Waking.] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, "Most fair Pyra-

—Hey, ho!—Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep.
I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expand this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was, and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to touch, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom, and I will sing it in the latter end of the play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at Thysib's death.

Enter QUINCE, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?

"Fancy" here means affection, love. —Toy.
Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flu. O, sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during his life; he could not have escaped sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? Where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders; but ask me not what, for, if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out. Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together; good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for, the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case let Thisby have clean linen, and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath, and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words: away! go; away! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. More strange than true: I never may believe these antic fables, nor these fairy toys. Lovers, and madmen, have such seething brains, Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends. The lunatic, the lover, and the poet, Are of imagination all compact: One sees more devils than vast hell can hold; That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic, Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt: The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, [heaven; Both glance from heaven to earth, from earth to And, as imagination bodies forth

The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing A local habitation, and a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination, That, if it would but apprehend some joy, It comprehends some bringer of that joy; Or in the night, imagining some fear, How easy is a bush supposed a bear!

Hip. But all the story of the night told over, And all their minds transfigur'd so together, More winnows than fancy's images, And grows to something of great constancy, But, howsoever, strange, and admirable.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

Joy, gentle friends; joy, and fresh days of love, Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us Wait in your royal walks, your beard, your bed! The. Come now; what masks, what dances shall we have, To wear away this long age of three hours, Between our after-supper, and bed-time? Where is our usual manager of mirth? What revels are in hand? Is there no play, To ease the anguish of a torturing hour? Call Philostrate.

Philostr. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what 'abridgment have you for this evening? What mask? what music? How shall we beguile The lazy time, if not with some delight? [ripe; Philostr. There is a 'brief how many sports are Make choice of which your highness will see first. [Giving a paper.

The. [Reads.] "The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung By an Athenian eunuch to the harp."

We'll none of that: that have I told my love, In glory of my kinsman Hercules. "The riot of the tipsey Bacchantes, Torching the Thracian singer in their rage." That is an old device; and it was play'd When I from Theseus came last a conqueror. "The thrice three Muses mourning for the death Of learning, into deceas'd in beggary. That is some entire, keen, and critical, Not setting with a nuptial ceremony. "A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus, And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth." Merry and tragical! Tedium and brief! That is, hot ice, and wondrous seething snow, How shall we find the concord of this discord? Philostr. A play 'this is, my lord, some ten words Which is as brief as I have known a play; [long, But by ten words my lord, it is too long, Which makes it tedious; for in all the play There is not one word apt, one player fitted: And tragical, my noble lord, it is, For Pyramus therein doth kill himself. Which, when I saw rehears'd, I must confess, Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it? [here, Philostr. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens Which never labor'd in their minds till now; And now have toil'd their 'unbreath'd memories With this same play, against your nuptial.

b Consistency; stability. — "Abridgment," i.e., pastime; something to abridge the time.— Short account. — Unexercised; impractised.
And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are content
   To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
Presenteth moonshine; for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn
   To meet at Numis' tomb, there, there, to woo.
This grisly beast, which lion bight by name,
The trusty Thisy, coming first by night,
Did scare away, or rather did affright:
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,
Which lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his gentle Thisy's mantle slain:
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamful blade,
He savagely broched'd his boiling bloody breast;
And Thisy, tarrying in mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. "For all the rest,
Let lion, moonshine, wall, and lovers tawni,
At large discourse, while here they do remain."

[Exeunt 5 Pres., Thisby, Lion, and Moonshine.

The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord:
One lion may, when many ass's do.

Wall. "In this same interlude, it doth befal,
That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would have you think,
That had in it a cranny, hole, or chink,
Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
Did whisper often very secretly.
This lime, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show
That I am that same wall: the truth is so;
And this the cranny, is right and sinister,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper."

The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "O, grim-look'd night! O, night with hue so black!
O night, which ever art, when day is not?
O night! O night! slack, slack, slack!
I fear my Thisy's promise is forgot.—
And thou, O wall! O sweet, O lovely wall!
That stand'st between her father's ground and mine;
Thou wall, O wall! O sweet, and lovely wall!
Show me thy chink to blink through with mine eyes,"

[Wall holds up his fingers.

Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well for this!
But what see I? No Thisy do I see.
O wicked wall! through whom I see no bliss;
Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!"

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not.—"Deceiving me, is Thisy's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall put as I told you.—Younder she comes.

Enter Thisby.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,
For parting my fair Pyramus and me:
My cherry lips have often kis'd thy stones;
Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee."

Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear Thisy's face."

Thisby."

This. "My love! thou art my love, I think."

Pyr. "Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;
And like I Timander am I trusty still."

This. "And I like Helen, till the fates me kill."

* is called.—"Let fall."—Eyes.—Leander.—Horo.
Enter Thesib.

This. "This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?"

Lion. "Oh!" [The Lion roars.—Thesib runs off.

Dem. Well roared, lion.

The Wall. Thesib.

Hip. Well done, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace. [The Lion tears Thesib's mantle,

The. Well I moused, lion. [and exit.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Enter Thesib.

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;

I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright,

For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams,

I trust to take of truest Thisiby sight.

If I may stay;—O spite! [Seeing Thesib's man,

But mark, poor knight,

What dreadful dole is here!

Eyes, do you see?

How can it be?

O dainty duck! O dear!

Thy mantle good,

What! stand with blood?

Approach, ye furies fell!

O fates! come, come;

Cut thread and thrum;

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

The. This passion 6 on the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. "O, wherefore, nature, didst thou lions frame,

Since lion vile hath here deflour'd my dear?

Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame,

That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with

Come, tears, confound; [cheer.

Out, sword, and wound

The pop of Pyramus:

Ay, that left pop.

Where heart doth hop:—

Thus die I, thus, thus! [Stabs himself.

Now am I dead,

Now am I fled;

My soul is in the sky:

Tongue, lose thy light!

Moon, take thy flight! [Exit Moonshine.

Now die, die, die, die, die."

[Dies.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man, for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and yet prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover!

The. She will find him by starlight.—Here she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thesib.

Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better; he for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us.

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she moans, videlicet. —

This. "Asleep, my love!

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus! arise:

[Cephalus to Procurs.—Ninus', — A quibble. "In snuff" signifies also in anger.

4 "Moused," i. e., torn, as a cat tears a mouse.
Speak, speak! Quite dumb?
Dead, dead? A tomb
Must cover thy sweet eyes.
1 This lily lip,
This cherry tip,
These yellow cowslip cheeks,
Are gone, are gone.
Lovers, make morn:
His eyes were green as leeks.
Of sisters three,
Come, come to me,
With hands as pale as milk;
Lay them in gore,
Since you have shore
With shears his thread of silk.
Tongue, not a word:—
Come, trusty sword;
Come, blade, my breast imbure:
And farewell, friends.—
Thus Thisby ends:
Adieu, adieu, adieu."

The Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a *Bergomask dance between two of our company?

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse, for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had play'd Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisse's garret, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly, and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.—

Lovers, to bed: 'tis almost fair time.

I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn,
As much as this night have overwatch'd.

This palpable gross play hath well beguil'd
The heavy *gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed.—

A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels, and new jollity.

SCENE II.

Enter Puck, with a broom on his shoulder.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf bewows the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary torch fordane.

Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch, that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spite.
In the church-way paths to slide:

And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse
Shall disturb this hollow'd house:
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania, with all their train.

Ober. Through the house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Tit. First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand with fairy grace
Will we sing, and bless this place.

THE SONG.

Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray,
To the best broider'd bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blot's of nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand;
Neither mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be,
With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy take his *guit,
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace with sweet peace;
Ever shall 'tis safely rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber'd here,
While these visions did appear;
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend.
And, as I'm an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long,
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.

[Dix.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Antonio, Salario, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad.
It wearies me: you say, it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it, What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn:
And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.
Salario. Your mind is tossing on the ocean,
There, where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curtsey to them, do them reverence,
As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salario. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections would
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind,
Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads;
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt,
Would make me sad.

Salario. My wind, cooling my broth,
Would blow me to an ague, when I thought
What harm a wind too great might do at sea.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Should I go to church,
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all her spices on the stream,

*Argosies are large ships either for merchandise or war.

* centrifugally.
Enrave the roaring waters with my silks,
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing?—Shall I have the thought
To think on this, and shall I lack the thought,
That such a thing bechance’d would make me sad?
But, tell not me: I know, Antonio
Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

Ant. Believe me, no. I thank my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore, my merchandise makes me not sad.

Salan. Why, then you are in love.

Ant. Fie, fie! Salan.

Salan. Not in love neither? Then let’s say, you are sad,
Because you are not merry; and ’twere so easy
For you to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry,
Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus,
Nature hath fram’d strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper;
And some of such vinegar aspect
That they’ll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Salan. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kins-

Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Fare you well: [man,
We leave you now with better company. [mercy,
Salan. I would have stay’d till I had made you
If worshipful friends had not prevented me.

Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.

I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace the occasion too tender.

Salan. Good morrow, my good lords. [Say, when?

Bass. Good signiors both; when shall we laugh?
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Salan. We’ll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

Exeunt Salario and Salanio.

Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found An-
We two will leave you; but at dinner-time, [tonio,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. I will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, signior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world:
They lose it, that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang’d.

Ant. I hold the world but as the world; Gratiano,
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Shall he throw up his Brow, and cry into the jaundice
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;
—There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond,
And do a wilful *stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest’d in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;
As we should say, ‘I am Sir Oracle,
And, when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!’
If! my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when, I am very sure, [ears,
If they should speak, ’twould almost damn those
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.

* * Wiltful stillness,” I.e. obstinate silence.

I’ll tell thee more of this another time:
But fiest not, with this melancholy hint,
For this fool-gudgeon, this opinion.—
Come, good Lorenzo.—Fare ye well, awhile:
I’ll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you, then, till dinner-time.
I must be one of these same dumb wise men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep up the company but two years more,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

Ant. Farewell! I’ll grow a talker for this * gear.

Gra. Thanks, I faith; for silence is only commandable

In a neat’s tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

[Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo.

Ant. * It is that:—any thing now.

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff:
you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well; tell me now, what lady is the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promised to tell us of?

Bass. Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By a something showing a more swelling * port
Than my faint means would grant continuance:
Nor do I now mean to be abridg’d
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money, and in love;
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honor, be assured,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock’d to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; and by adventuring both,
I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and, like a * wasteful youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And the whole rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time,
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And, out of doubt, you do now more wrong,
In making question of my uttermost,
Than if you had made waste of all I have:
Then, do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And the whole residue unto it: therefore, speak.

Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.
Her name is Portia; nothing undervalued
To Cato’s daughter, Brutus’ Portia.

* * Gear,” I.e. matter; subject; business.—State; equipage.—Fiedzake.—“Frez,” I.e. ready (from the French pret, anciantly presto).—Formerly.
SCENE II. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors; and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont Colchis’ strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O, my Antonio! had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate.

And. Thou know’st, that all my fortunes are at sea;
Neither have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum: therefore, go forth;
Try our Portia, in the French, in the Italian,
That shall be reck’d, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is, and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aware of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are.
And, yet, for aught I see, they are as sick, that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing! It is in man happiness, therefore, to be settled in the mean: superfluity comes sooner a by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men’s cottages princes’ palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper leaps o’er a cold decree; such a hare is madness, the youth, to skip o’er the meshes of good counsel, the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose my husband.—O me! the word choice!
I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike: so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father.—Is it not hard,
Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?
Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations; therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead (whereof he chooses his meaning, chooses you) will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly but one whom you shall rightly love.
But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?
Por. I pray thee, overname them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and, according to their description, let my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that’s a b colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approbation of his own good parts, that he can shoe himself. I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the ounty Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say,
‘An you will not have me, choose.’ He hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death’s head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, monsieur le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocketh; but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan; a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine: he is every man in no man; if a sheath sing, he is straight a capping: he will fence with his own shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would deceive me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never require him.

Ner. What say you, then, to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him, for he under stands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor penny-worth in the English. He is a proper man’s picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? How oddly he is suited! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behavior everywhere.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbor?

Por. That he hath a neighborly charity in him;
for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able: I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony’s nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk:
when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast.
An the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.

Por. If I should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father’s will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket: for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing; Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Por. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is indeed, to return to their homes, and to trouble you with no more suit, un less you may be won by some other sort than your father’s imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sisyphus, I will die as caste as Didon: unless I be obtained by the manner of my father’s will. I am glad this parcel of women are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Por. Do you not remember, lady, in your father’s time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes; it was Bassanio: as I think, so was he called.

Por. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever

\(a\) Comes sooner by.
\(b\) i.e. sooner acquires.
\(c\) i.e. a handsome, gay youngster.
\(d\) Thrush. — Handsome. — ‘How oddly he is suited!’ i.e., how oddly the articles of his dress are matched.
my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.—How now? what news?

Enter a Servant.

Serr. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco, who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good a heart, as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the a condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrieve me than live with me. Come, Nerissa. —Sirrah, go before. —Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A public Place.

Enter BASSANIO and SHYLOCK.

Shy. Three thousand ducats,—well.

Bas. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months,—well.

Bass. For which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound,—well.

Bass. May you b steal me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer?

Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio a good man.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Ho! no, no, no:—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me, that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. He hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies: I understand moreover upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath squandered abroad: but ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats, and water-rats, land-thieves, and water-thieves; I mean, pirates: and then, there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient: three thousand ducats—I think, I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured, I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethekin me. May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation which your prophet, the Nazarite, conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? —Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio. [Looks.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a fawning publican he
I hate him for he is a Christian;
But more, for that, in low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance here with us in Venice.
If I can catch him once upon the slip,
I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.
He hates our sacred nation; and he rails,
Even there where merchants most do congregate,

On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe,
If I forgive him!

Bas. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store,
And, by the near guess of my memory,
I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of all three thousand ducats. What of that?
Fubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,
Will furnish me. But soft! how many months
Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signior;

[To Antonio.

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow,
By taking or by giving of excess
Yet, to supply the ripe 2 wants of my friend
I'll break a custom. 2 Are you yet possess'd,
How much he would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats?

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot;—three months; you told me so.
Well then, I give you bond; and let me see—But hear you: Mothought, you said, you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep,
This Jacob from our holy Abraham was
(As his wise mother wrought in his behalf)
The third possessor; ay, he was the third,
Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest: not, as you would say,
Directly interest: mark what Jacob did.
When Laban and himself were compromis'd,
That all the ἔναλίαν which were streak'd, and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire, the ewes, being rank,
In end of autumn turned to the rams;
And when the work of generation
Between these woolly breeders in the act,
The skilful shepherd peal'd me certain wands,
And, in the doing of the deed of _PID, kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes,
Who, then conceiving, did in caning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's.
This was the way to thrive, and he was blest:
Thrift in his blessing. If men seek him?
Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd for;
A thing not in his power to bring to pass,
But sway'd, and fashion'd by the hand of heaven.
Was this 2 inferred to make interest good?
Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams?

Shy. I cannot tell: I make it breed as fast,—
But note me, signior.

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio,
The devil can cite scripture for his purpose.
An evil soul, producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart.
O, what a godly outside 2 falsehood hath! [sum.

Shy. Three thousand ducats;—'tis a good round
Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft,
On the Rialto, you have rated me
About my monies, and my 2 usances;
Still have I borne it with a patient shrug;
For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe.
You call'd me flesh-chopper, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine,
And all for use of that which is mine own.

Nature; disposition. — Assist; help. — Usury; interest.
— Upon the hip; — Nature; — Bear; — bring forth. — Knowledge; — treachery. — Usury; interest.
Well then, it now appears, you need my help:
Go to, then; you come to me, and you say,
"Shylock, we would have monies:" you say so;
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard,
And foot me as you spur a stranger cur.
Over your threshold: monies is your suit.
What should I say to you? Should I not say,
"Hath a dog money? Is it possible,
A cur can lend three thousand ducats!" or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With 'bated breath, and whispering humbleness,
Say this?:—
"Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last;
You spurn'd me such a day: another time
You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies
I'll lend you thus much monies?"

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again,
To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too.
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend; for when did friendship take
A breed for barren metal of his friend?
But lend it rather to thine enemy;
Who if he break, thou may'st with better face
Exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I shall be friends with you, and have your love,
Forget the shame of that you spurned me with,
Supply your present wants, and take no doot
Of usance for my monies,
And you'll not hear me. This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindness.

Shy. This kindness will I show.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Yea up the bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, in faith: I'll seal to such a bond,
And say there is much kindness in thee, Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me:
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it:
Within these two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O, father Abraham! what these Christians are,
Who have sworn hard deals: they teach them suspect
The thoughts of others?—Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the execution of the forfeiture?

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttous, boeves, or goats. I say,
To buy his favor I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, adieu;
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.

Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary's.
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purse the ducats straight;
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an untruthful knife, and presently
I will be with you. [Exit.

Ant. Hee thee, gentle Jew.
The Hebrew will turn Christian: he grows kind.

Bass. I like not fair terms and a villain's mind.

Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay,
My ships come home a month before the day.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his followers; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her train. 2 Flourish Cornets.

Mor. 4 Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbor, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phoebus' fire scarce thaws the icles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath 'fear'd the valiant: by my love, I swear,
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.
Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes:
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing;
But, if my father had not scanted me,
And heg'd me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned Portia, there stood as fair,
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this scimitar,—
That slew the Sopby, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,—
I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look,
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page;
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Mias that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance;
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong,
Never to speak to lady afterward
In way of marriage: therefore, be advis'd.

Mor. Nor will not. Come, bring me unto my chance.

Por. First, forward to the temple: after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then, [Cornets.
To make me blest, or cursed' st among men! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Launcelot Gobbo.

Laun. Certainly, my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master. The fiend is at mine elbow, and tempts me, saying to me, "Gobbo, Laun-celot Gobbo, good Launcelot, or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away!" My conscience says,—"No; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo;—or,

as aforesaid, "honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run; som run with thy heels." Well, the most contagious fiend bids me pack; "Via!" says the fiend; "away!" says the fiend; "fore the heavens, rouse up a brave mind," says the fiend, "and run."
Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me,—"My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son, —or rather an honest woman's son,—for, indeed, my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste:—well, my conscience says, "Launcelot, budge not." "Budge," says the fiend: "budge not," says my conscience. Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well: to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil:
and, at the same time, my conscience tells me I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnation; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly consent: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment; I will run. [Going out in haste.]
Enter Old Gobbo, with a basket.
Gob. Master, young man, you; I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?
Law. [Aside.] O heavens! this is my true begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-grav, blind, knows me not:—I will try confusions with him.
Gob. Master, young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?
Law. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning, but at the next turning all, on your left;
marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand,
but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.
Gob. By God's sotties, 'twill be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?
Law. Talk you of young master Launcelot?
[Aside.] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters.
—[To him.] Talk you of young master Launcelot?
Gob. Yes, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man; and, God be thanked, well to live.
Law. Well, let his father be what 'twill, we talk of young master Launcelot.
Gob. Your worship's friend, and Launcelot, sir.
Law. But I pray you, erge, old man, ergo, I be-seek you, talk you of young master Launcelot?
Gob. Of Launcelot, sir, I don't please your master'ship.
Law. Ergo, master Launcelot. Talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (according to fates and destinies, and such odd sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning, ) is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in pends, gone to heaven.
Gob. May it be so! God forbid! the boy is the very staff of my age, my very prop.
Law. [Aside.] Do I look like a cudgel, or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop?—[To him.] Do you know me, father?
Gob. Alack the day! I know you not, young gentleman. But, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, (God rest his soul!) alive, or dead?

*Saints.

Law. Do you not know me, father?
Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.
Law. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. [Kneels.] Give me your blessing, true! truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long, a man's son may, but in the end truth will out.
Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up. I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.
Law. Pray you, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.
Gob. I cannot think you are my son.
Law. I know not what I shall think of that; but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and, I am sure,
Margarie, your wife, is my mother.
Gob. Her name is Margarie, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. I worship'd might be he! what a beaud hast thou got: thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my bfill-horse has on his tail.
Law. [Rising.] It should seem, then, that Dobin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail, than I have of my face, when I last saw him.
Gob. Lord! how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How agree you now?
Law. Well, well; but, for mine own part, as I have set up my crest to run away, so will I not rest till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew: give him a present! give him a halter: I am amish'd in his service; you may tell every finger I have with my zibs. Father, I am glad you are come:
give me your present to one master Bassanio, who,
indeed, gives rare new liveryes. If I serve not him,
I will run as far as God has any ground.—O rare fortune! here comes the man:—to him, father; for
I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.
Enter Bassano, with Leonardo, and Followers.
Bass. You may do so;—but let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the fairest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered: put the liveryes to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit a Servant.]
Law. To him, father.
Gob. God bless your worship!
Bass. Gramercy. Would'st thou wight with me?
Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy,
Law. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man, that would, sir,—as my father shall specify.
Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve.
Law. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a desire,—as my father shall specify.
Gob. His master and he (saving your worship's reverence), are scarce cater-cousins.
Law. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done me wrong, doth cause me,—as my father, being, I hope, an old man, shall fructify unto you.
Gob. I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is,— Law. In very brief, the suit is importent to myself, as your lordship shall know by this honest old my rest," I. e., determined.—"Gramercy," contracted from man: and, though I say it, though old man, yet, poor man, my father.

Bass. Ouo speak for both.—What would you?

Leon. Save you, sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I know thee well: thou hast obtain’d thy suit.

Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day,
And hath prefer’t thee; if it be preferment,
To leave a rich Jew’s service, to become
The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Leon. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir: you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

[son.—]

Bass. Thou speakest it well.—Go, father, with thy Take leave of thy old master, and inquire
My lodging out.—Give him a livery [To his fellows.
More guardian than his fellows! see it done.

Leon. Father, in.—I cannot get a service,—not! I have ne’er a tongue in my head.—Well! [Looking on his palm;] if any man in Italy have a fairer *table, which doth offer to swear upon a book.—I shall have good fortune.—Go to; here is a simple life of life’s here’s a small triole of wives: alas! fifteen wives is nothing: eleven widows, and nine maids, is a simple coming in for one man; and then, to some drowning threes, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed: here are simple ’scapes! Well, if fortune be a woman, she’s a good wench for this gear.—Father, come; I’ll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye.

[Exeunt LAUNCELOT and Old GORBO.

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this.
These things being bought, and orderly bestow’d,
Return in haste, for I do feast to-night.

My best-esteem’d acquaintance: be thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavors shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit LEONARDO.

Gra. Signior Bassanio!

Bass. Gratiano.

Gra. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You must not deny me. I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must; but hear thee, Gratiano.
Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice:—
Parts, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;
But where thou art not known, why, there they show
Something too liberal.—Pray thee, take pain
To alay with some cold drops of modesty
Thy skipping spirit, lest through thy wild behavior,
I be misconstrued in the place I go to,
And lose my hopes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio, hear me:
If I do not put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely;
Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and aye, and say amen;
Use all the observation of civility.
Like one well studied in a sad *ostent
To please his grandam, never trust me more.

Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night.

Bass. No, that were pity.

I would entreat you rather to put on

*Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends
That purpose merriment. But fare you well,
I have some business.

Gra. And I must to Lorenzo, and the rest;
But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in Shylock’s House.

Enter Jessica and LAUNCELOT.

Jes. I am sorry thou wilt leave my father so:
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness.
But fare thee well; there is a ducat for thee.
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master’s guest;
Give him this letter: do it secretly,
And so farewell. I would not have my father
See me in talk with thee.

Laun. Adieu!—tears exhibit my tongue.—Most beautiful pagan,—most sweet Jew! If a Christian did not play the knave, and get thee, I am much decieved: but, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my manly spirit: adieu!

[Jes.* Farewell, good Launcelot.—

Alack, what heinous sin is it in me
To be ashamed’t be my father’s child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo!
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salarino, and Salanio.

Lor. Nay, we will sink away in supper-time,
Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.

Salar. We have not made good preparation.

Sala. We have not spoke us yet of torch-bearers.

Sala. Tis vile, unless it may be ‘quaintly order’d,
And better, in my mind, not undertook.

*Tis now but four o’clock: we have two hours
To furnish us.—

Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what’s the news?

Leon. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify. [Giving a letter.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, ’tis a fair hand;
And whiter than the paper it writ on
Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith

Leon. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Leon. Marry, sir, to bid my old master, the Jew, to sup to-night with my new master, the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this.—Tell gentle Jessica,
I will not fail her:—speak it privately;

*Go.—Gentlemen, [Exit LAUNCELOT.

Will you prepare business for this masque to-night?
I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Sala. Ay, marry, I’ll be gone about it straight.

Sala. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano,
At Gratiano’s lodging some hour hence.

Sala. ’Tis good we do so. [Exit SALARINO and SALANIO.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed,

*Ornamented.—*The table is a fortune-teller’s term for the palm of the hand.—*Business,—*Gross.—Sad ostent,
Grave show, behavior, demeanor.
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with;
What page's suit she hath in readiness.

If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughter's sake;
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she do it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.

Come, go with me: perseve this, as thou goest.
Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Execut.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before Shylock's House.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio,—
What, Jessica!—Thou shalt not gormandize,
As thou hast done with me!—What, Jessica!—
And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out.
Why, Jessica, I say!

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me, that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will?
Shy. I am 2bid forth to supper, Jessica:
There are my keys,—But wherefore should I go?
I am not bid for love; they flatter me:
But yet I'll go in haste, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian.—Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house:—I am right leaky to go,
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.

Laun. And they have conspired together:—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on black bMonday last, at six o'clock the morning, felling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon. [Jessica:

Shy. What! are there masques?—Hear you me,
Lock up your doors; and when you hear the drum,
And the vile squeaking of the wry-neck'd life,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the public street
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces,
But stop my house's ears, I mean my casements;
Let not the sound of shallow gospery enter
My sober house.—By Jacob's staff, I swear,

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night;
But I will go.—Go you before me, sirrah;
Say, I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir.—Mistress, look out at window, for all this;
There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit Laun.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring? ha!
Jes. His words were, farewell, mistress; nothing else.

Shy. The 8patch is kind enough; but a huge feeder,
Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me;
Therefore I part with him, and part with him
To one that I would have him help to waste
His borrow'd purse.—Well, Jessica, go in:
Perhaps I will return immediately.
Do, as I bid you; shut doors after you:

*Invited.—b "Black Monday" is Easter Monday.—c Fool; simpleton.

Safe bind, safe find,
A proverb never stale in thrythy mind. [Exit.
Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not cross,
I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masqued.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo Desir'd us to make stand.
Sal. His hour is almost past.
Gra. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour,
For lovers ever run before the clock.

Sal. Of ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds now-made, than they are wont
To keep obliged faith un forfeit'd!
Gra. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast,
With that keen appetit that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth unthread again
His tedious measures, with the unhated fire
That he did pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit clasped than enjoy'd.
How like a younger, or a prodigal,
The 4scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the stormy wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather'd ribs, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the stormy wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Sal. Here comes Lorenzo:—more of this hither after.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs have made you wait:
When I shall please to play the theives for wives,
I'll watch an hour for you then.—Approach;
Here dwells my father Jew.—Ho! who's within?

Enter Jessica above, 2as a boy.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me for more certainty,
Albeit I swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed,
For whom love I so much? And now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours? [thou art.

Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts are witness that
Jes. Here, catch this casket: it is worth the pains.
I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. What! must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscure'd.

Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the garnish of a lovely boy.
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.
Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight. [Exit, from above.

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile, and no Jew.

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge of her,
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself;
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, 1 to them below.

What, art thou come?—On, gentlemen; away!
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit with Jessica and Salariño.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?

Gra. Signior Antonio?

Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
'Tis nine o'clock; our friends all stay for you.

No masque to-night: the wind is come about,
Bassanio presently will go aboard:
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't: I desire no more delight,
Than to be under sail, and gone to-night. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Portia with the Prince of Morocco, and both their trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince.—
[Curtains drawn aside.

Now make your choice.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears;
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."
The second, silver, which this promise carries;
"Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves."
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt;
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath."
How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince:
If you choose that, then I am yours in truth.

Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see,
I will survey th' inscriptions back again:
What says this leaden casket?
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath."
Must give—For what I for lead? hazard for lead!
This casket threatens: men, that hazard all,
Do it in hope of fair advantages:
A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross;
I'll then nor give, nor hazard, aught for lead.

What says the silver, with her virgin hue?
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he desires,
As much as he deserves?—Pause there, Morocco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand.
If thou be'st rated by thy estimation,
Then dost deserve enough; and yet enough
May not extend so far as to the lady;
And yet to be assured of my deserving
Were but a weak disabling of myself.
As much as I deserve?—Why, that's the lady:
I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding;
But more than these in love I do deserve 2 her.
What if I stray'd no further, but chose here?
Let's see once more this saying gav'd in gold:
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."
Why, that's the lady; all the world desires her:
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
The Hyrcanian deserts, and the vasty wilds
Of wide Arabia, are as through-fares now,
For princes to come view fair Portia:
The wat'ry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.

One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
It's like, that lead contains her? 'Twere damnation,
To think so base a thought: it were too gross
To rib her cærocloth in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think in silver she's immured,
Being ten times undervalued to truely gold?
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin, that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold, but that's 3 insculp'd upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within.—Deliver me thy word:
Here do I choose, and thrive as I may say!

Por. There, take it, prince; and if my form lie there,
Then I am yours. [He 4 opens the golden casket.

Mor. O hell! what have we here?
A carrion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll. I'll read the writing.

"All that glitters is not gold;
Often have you heard that told;
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tomba do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your 4 answer had not been insculp'd:
Fare you well; your suit is cold!"
Cold, indeed, and laud lose.

Then, farewell, heat; and, welcome, frost.—
Portia, adieu. I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part. [Exit.
Por. A gentle riddance.—Draw the curtains: go.
[Curtains drawn.

Let all of his 4 complexion choose me so. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salariño and Salariño.

Salar. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail:
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship, I'm sure, Lorenzo is not.

Salar. The villain Jew with outward's did the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.

Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.
Besides, Antonio certified the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Salar. I never heard a passion to a fault as this,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter!—O my ducats!—O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian?—O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!
And jewels too! two rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl!
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!"

Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Salar. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.

Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.
I thought upon Antonio when he told me,
And wish'd in silence that it were not his.

* Enclose.—" Undervalued to," i.e., undervalued if compared with.—" Engrav'd.—" Your answer, " i.e., the answer you have got, namely, " Fare you well."—Disposition; character.—Conversed.
Salan. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear; Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed Of his return: he answer'd—"Do not so; a "slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio, But stay the very riping of the time: And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me, Let it not enter in your mind of love. Be merry; and apply your chieftest thoughts To courtship, and such fair and glistening trees Of love As shall conveniently become you there." And even there, his eye being big with tears, Turning his face, he put his hand behind him, And with affection wondrous sensible He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted. Salan. I think, he only loves the world for him. I pray thee, let us go, and find him out, And quicken his embraced heaviness With some delight or other.

Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtains straight.

The prince of Aragon hath ta'en his oath, And comes to his election presently.

Enter the Prince of Aragon, Portia, and their train. 1 Flourish cornets. 2 Curtains withdrawn. Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince. If you choose that wherein I contain'd, Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd; But if you fail, without more speech, my lord, You must be gone from hence immediately.

Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things: First, never to unfold to any one Which casket 'twas I chose: next, if I fail Of the right casket, never in my life To woo a maid in way of marriage: lastly, If I do fail in fortune of my choice, Immediately to leave you and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear, That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

Ar. And so have I 4 address'd me. Fortune now To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver, and base lead. "Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath: You shall look fairer, ere I give, or hazard. What says the golden chest? ha! let me see: — "Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire," What many men desire:—that many may be meant By the foil multitude, that choose by show, Not learning more than the foil eye doth teach; Which 'prize not th' interior, but, like the martlet, Builds in the weather, on the outward wall, Even in the flower of pride and road of casuistry. I will not choose what many men most desire, Because I will not jump with common spirits, And rank me with the barbarous multitudes. Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house; Tell me once more what title thou dost bear: "Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves;" And well said too; for who shall go about To wear an undeserved dignity.

To wear an undeserved dignity.
O! that castles, degrees, and offices, Were not deriv'd corruptly; and that clear honor Were purchas'd by any merit of the wearer! How many then should cover, that stand bare; How many be commanded, that command: How much low peasantry would then be gleen'd From the true seed of honor; and how much honor Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times, To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice: "Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves." I will assume desert—give me a key for this, And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.

Ar. What's here? the portrait of a blinking idiot, Presenting me a schedule? I will read it. How much unlike art thou to Portia? How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings! "Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves."

Did I deserve no more than a fool's head? Is that my prize? are my deserts no better? Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices, And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

"The fire seven times tried this:
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss;
Such have but a shadow's bliss.
There be fools alive, I saw
Silver'd o'er; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So begone: you are sped."

Still more fool I shall appear
By the time I linger here: With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.
Sweet, advise. I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to hear my 5 wrath.

[Exeunt Aragon, and train.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth.
O, these deliberate fools! when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy:

Hanging and wiving 6 go by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

[ 7 Curtains drawn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord? Mess. Madam, there is slighted at your gate A young Venetian, one that comes before To signify the approaching of his lord, From whom he bringeth sensible 7 regrets: To wit, (besides commands, and inexpressible breath,) Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen So likely an ambassador of love.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-sparrow comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afeard, Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee, Thou spend'st at such high-day wit in praising him. —

Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see

Cupid's quick post, that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be.

[Exeunt.

1 Know. — Ruth; misfortune. — Salutation. — Holiday.
SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salanio and Salarino.

Sal. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salar. Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd on the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they call the place: a very dangerous flat, and fatal, where the carcasses of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip, report, be an honest woman of her word.

Sal. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever spagged ginger, or made her neighbors believe she kept for the cloth of a third husband. But it is true, without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the plain high-way of talk, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O, that I had a tide good enough to keep his name company—

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Sal. Ha!—what say'st thou?—Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Sal. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer; for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.

Enter Shylock.

Shy. How now, Shylock? what news among the merchants?

Shylock. You know, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Salar. That's certain: I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledg'd; and then, it is the 6 complication of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!—Salar. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There has been sad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto;—a beggar, that 2 was wont to come so smug upon the mart.—Let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy;—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh; that's the good for you.

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? if you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humidity? revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? why, revenge. The villain you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew.

[Exeunt Salan, Salar, and Servant.

Enter Tubal.

Shy. How now, Tubal? what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort. The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now:—two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels.—I would, my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were beared at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them?—Why, so;—and I know not what's spent in the search: Why 3 then,—loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief, and no satisfaction, no revenge; nor no ill luck stirring, but what lights o' my shoulders; no sighs, but o' my breathing; no tears, but o' my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too. Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripoli.

Shy. I thank God! I thank God! Is it true? is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal.—Good news, good news! ha! ha!—Where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick'st a dagger in me. I shall never see my gold again. Fourscore ducats at a sitting? fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it. I'll plague him; I'll torture him: I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentest me, Tubal: it was my 4 turquoise; I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer: bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will. Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue: go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and their Attendants.

Por. I pray you tarry; pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company: therefore, forbear a while. There's something tells me, (but I know not what,) I would not lose you, and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality. But lest you should not understand me well, And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought, I would detain you here some month or two, Before you venture for me. I could teach you, How to choose right, but then I am forsworn: So will I never be: so may you may. But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin, That I had been forsworn. Beshrew your eyes, They have o'erlook'd me, and divided me; One half of me is yours, the other half yours,— Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, And so all yours! O! these naughty times Put bare between the owners and their rights; And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so, Let fortune go to hell for it,—not I. I speak too long; but 'tis to pause the time, To eke it, and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Bass. I, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess What treason there is mingled with your love. Bass. None, but that ugly treason of mistrust, Which makes me fear the' enjouing of my love. There may as well be amity and life 'Tween snow and fire, and treason and my love. Por. Ay, but, I fear, you speak upon the rack, Where men enforced do speak anything. Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth. Por. Well then, confess, and live.

Bass. Confess, and love.

Had been the very sum of my confession. Q, happy torment, when my torturer Doth teach me answers for deliverance! But let me to my fortune and the sequesters.

[Curtains drawn aside.

Por. Away then. I am lock'd in one of them: If you do love me, you will find me out.— Nerissa, and the rest, stand all aloof.— Let music sound, while he doth make his choice; Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end, Failing in music: that the comparison May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream, And watery death-bed for him. He may win, And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow To a new-crowned monarch: such it is, As are those dulcet sounds in break of day, That creep into the dreaming bridgework's ear, And summer in him to marriage. If it goeth, With no less presence, but with much more love, Than young Alcides, when he did redeem The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice, The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives, With blurred visages, come forth to view The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules! Live thou, I live,—with much, much more dismay I view to fight, than thou that wilt at the fray.

A Song, "The whilst Bassanio comments on the caskers to himself.

Tell me, where is 'fancy bred, Or in the heart, or in the head? How begot, how nourished? Reply, reply. It is engender'd in the eyes, With gaz'ing fed; and fandy dies In the cradle where it lies. Let us all ring fancy's knell: I'll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell. All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward shows be least them: The world is still decivo'd with ornament. [selves: In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt, But, being season'd with a gracious voice, Obscures the show of evil? In religion, What damned error, but some sober brow Will bless it, and I approve it with a text, Hiding the grossness with fair ornament? There is no vice so simple, but assumes Some mark of virtue on his outward parts. How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins The beards of Hercules, and crowning Mars, Who, inward search'd, have lives white as milk: And these assume but valor's excrement, To rend them redoubled. Look on beauty, And you shall see 'tis purchased by the weight; Which therein works a miracle in nature, Making them lightest that wear most of it: So are those crisp'd snaky golden locks, Which make such wanton gambols with the wind, Upon supposed fairness, often known To be the dowry of a second head, The skull that bred them, in the sepulchre. Thus ornament is but the guilting shore To a most dangerous sea, the beautuous scarf Veiling an Indian: beauty, in a word, The seeming truth which cunning times put on To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gayly gold, Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee. Nor will I thy grave, thou pale and drudge 'Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead, Which rather threatnest than dost promise aught, Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence, And here choose I. Joy be the consequence! Por. How all the other passions fleet to air, As doubtful thoughts, and mal-embrac'd despair, And shuddering fear, and green-y'd jealousy, O love! be moderate; alley thy fastness; In measure thin thy joy; scant this excess: I feel too much thy blessing; make it less, For fear I surfeit! [Casket.

Bass. What find I here? [He opens the leaden Far Portin's counterfeit! What demi-god Hath come so near creation! Move these eyes Or wither, freezing in the hands of mine? Seem they in man? Here are sever'd lips, Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar Should suckler such sweet friends. Here, in her hairs, The painter plays the spider, and hath woven A golden mesh t' entrap the hearts of men, Faster than gnats in cowwebs; but her eyes:— How could he see to do them? having made one, Lest likeness; resembaces.
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov'd, I lov'd; for intermission
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For woeing here, until I treat again,
And swearing, till my very tongue was dry
With oaths of love, at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev'd her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?
Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd with.
Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?
Gra. Yes, 'tis my lord. [marriage.
Bass. Our feast shall be much honor'd in your
Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thou-
Ner. What, and stake down?
[and ducats.
Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down.

But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his inédel?
What! and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.
Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome.—By your leave
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord:
They are entirely welcome.
Lor. I thank your honor.—For my part, my lord,
My purpose was not to have seen you here,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Sale. I did, my lord,
And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.
Bass. Er, I ope this letter,
I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.
Sale. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate. [Bassanio reads.
Gra. Nerissa, cheer you stranger; bid her welcome.
Your hand, Salerio: what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know, he will be glad of our news.
We are the Jaxons, we have won the fleece. [lost.
Sale. I would you had won the fleece that he hath
Por. There are some shrewd contents in you same
That steal the color from Bassanio's cheek: [paper,
Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?—
With leave, Bassanio; I am half myself,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia. Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words:
That ever blotted paper. Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins—I was a gentleman:
And then I told you true, and yet, dear lady,
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you,
That I was worse than nothing; for, indeed,
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound,
Issuing life-blood. — But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India?
And not one vessel 'scap'd the dreadful touch
Of merchant-murk'ring rocks?
Saler.
Not one, my lord.
Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man.
He pities the duke at morning, and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificent
Of greatest part, have all persuaded with him,
But none can drive him from the envious plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.
Jos. When I was with him I have heard him swear
To Tubal and to China, his commerce.
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.
Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?
Bass. The dearest friend to me of kindest man,
The best condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honor more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.
Por. What sum owes he the Jew?
Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.
Por. What?
Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond:
Double six thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through my Bassanio's fault.
First, go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall not
To pay the petty debt twenty times over:
When it is paid, bring your true friend along.
My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day,
Did your friends welcome, show a merry chear;
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear. —
But let me hear the letter of your friend.
Bass. [Reads.] "Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since in paying it it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at my death. Notwithstanding, use your pleasure; if your love do not persuade you to come, let ot my letter."
Por. O love! despacht all business, and begone.
Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haste; but till I come again,
No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay,
Nor rest be interposer 'twixt us twain.
[Exeunt.
SCENE III. — Venice. A Street.
Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Jaílor.
Shy. Jaílor, look to him: tell not me of mercy. —
This is the foil that lent out money gratis. —
*Grandeza,— Countenance; look.
*Foolish.
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord's return.
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition,
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart:
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Jes. And, fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you!

Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well-pleas'd
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.—

[Exeunt JESSICA and LORENZO.

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavor of a man,
In speed to Padua: see thou render this
Into my cousin's hand, doctor Bellario;
And, look, what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed
Unto the Tranec, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.

Dalb. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

Por. Come on, Nerissa: I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of. We'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?
Por. They shall, Nerissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall think that we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accounted like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint lies,
How honorable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not save withal:—then, I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them.
And twenty of these puny lits I'll tell,
That men shall swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Por. Why, shall we turn to men?

Por. Fie! what a question's that,
If thou wert near a lewd interpreter.
But come: I'll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Garden.

Enter LAUNCELOT and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and now I speak my agitation of the matter:

* * * "With imagin'd speed," l. c. a, with the greatest speed imaginable. — "I could not do withal," l. c. I, could not help it,— "I fear you," l. c. I, I fear for you. therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think, you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good, and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. Marry, you may partly hope that your father get you not; that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lau. Truly, then, I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother. Well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians *know before; o'en as many as could well live one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter LORENZO.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say: here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo: Laun-celot and I are out. He tells me flatly, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter; and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lau. It is much, that the Moor should be more than reason; but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think, the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots.—Go in, sirrah: bid them prepare for dinner.

Lau. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly lord, what a wit-snaupper are you! then, bid them prepare dinner. *

Lau. That is done too, sir; only, cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Lau. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Lau. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humors and conceits shall govern. [Exit LAUNCELOT.

Lor. O, dear discretion, how his words are *suited! The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools, that stand in better place,
Garnished'd him, that for a tricksy word
Defy the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica? And now, good sweet, say thy opinion; How dost thou like the lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet,
The lord Bassanio live an upright life,
For, having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And, if on earth he do not mean it, then,
In reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one must be something else
Pawn’d with the other, for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lor.
Even such a husband
Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion, too, of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table talk;
Then, howsoever thou speak’st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I’ll set you forth. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke: the Magnificoes; Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salario, Salanio, and others.

Duke. Whau, is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee: thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard,
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy’s reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm’d
To suffer with a quietness of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Sala. He’s ready at the door. He comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but lead’st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then, ’tis thought,
Thou’lt show thy mercy and remorse, more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact’st the penalty,
Which is a pound of that poor merchant’s flesh,
Thou wilt not only lose the forfeiture,
But, touch’d with human gentleness and love,
Fell-give a moiety of the principal;
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enow to press a royal merchant down,
And pluck confession of his state
From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never train’d
To offices of tender courtesy.
We will expect a gentle answer, Jew. [pose;

Shy. I have possess’d your grace of what I pur-
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city’s freedom.

You’ll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carriion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats? I’ll not answer that:
But, say, it is my humor: is it answer’d?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas’d to give ten thousand ducats
To have it baned? What, are you answer’d yet?
Some men there are not a gaping pig:
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe sings i’ the nose,
Cannot contain their urine for affection:
Masters of passion sway it to the mood
Of what it likes, or loathes. Now, for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to be render’d,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
To excuse the current of thy cruelty.

Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my answer.

Duke. Do all men kill the things they do not love?

Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Duke. Every offence is a hate at first.

Shy. What! would’st thou have a serpent sting thee?

Ant. I pray you, think you a question with the Jew.
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
Or c’en as well use question with the wolf,
When you behold the eve bleat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what’s harder?)
His Jewish heart.—Therefore, I do beseech you,
Make no more offers, use no farther means,
But with all brief and plain conveyance,
Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.

Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.

Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them: I would have my bond.

Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rendering one? [wrong?

Shy. What judgment shall I dred, doing no
You have among you many a purchas’d slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in object and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them:—shall I say to you,
Let them be free; marry them to your heirs?
What sweat they under burdens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
Be season’d with such viands? You will answer,
The slaves are ours.—So do I answer you:
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, ’tis mine, and I will have it.
If you deny me, fei upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
I stand for judgment; answer; shall I have it?

Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court,
Unless Belbiano, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.

Sala. My lord, here stays without

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

183

A messenger with letters from the doctor,
Now come from Padua. —

Duke. Bring us the letters: call the messenger.

Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What man, courage yet! —

The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt lose me one drop of blood. —

Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Most erect for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.

You cannot better be employed, Bassanio,
Than to live still, and write mine epistle.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario? —

Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greets your grace.

[Presenting a letter. —

Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly? — [SHYLOCK whets his knife.

Shy. To cut the forfeit from that bankrupt there.

Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew! Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee? —

Shy. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Gra. O, be thou damned, inexorable dog,
And for thy life let justice be accused! —

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy currish spirit
Governs a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallowes did his fell soul fleet,
And whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallowed dam,
Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are as flesh, bloody, starr'd, and ravenous.

Shy. Till thou can'st rain the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To senseless ruin. — I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth command
A young and learned doctor to our court. —

Where is he? —

Ner. He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart: — some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place. —

Mean time, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[CLERK reads.] "Your grace shall understand, that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick; but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome; his name is Balthazar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio, the merchant; we turned o'er many books together: he is furnish'd with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation."

Duke. You hear the learn'd Bellario, what he deserveth for death? And here, I take it, is the doctor come. — [writes:

Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.

Give me your hand. Came you from old Bellario? —

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court? —

Por. I am informed throughly of the cause. —

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew? —

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth. —

Por. Is your name Shylock? —

Shy. Shylock is my name. —

Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot b impugn you, as you do proceed. —

You stand within his danger, do you not? —

[To ANTONIO.]

Ant. Ay, so he says.

Por. Do you confess the bond? —

Ant. I do. —

Por. Then must the Jew be mercifull. —

Shy. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd,
It dropeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesteth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this set away;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself,
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
Whom mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,—
That in the course of justice none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea,
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence against the merchant there. —

Shy. My deeds upon my head. I crave the law;
The penalty and forfeit of my bond. —

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money? —

Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court; —

Yea, twice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart.
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth: and, I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right, do a little wrong,
And curb this cruel devil of his will. —

Por. It must not be. There is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established: —

Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. It cannot be. —

Shy. A Daniel come to judgment! yea, a Daniel! —

O, wise young judge, how do I honor thee! —

Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond. —

Shy. Here 'tis, most reverend doctor; here it is. — [Showing it. —

Shylock, there's thistle thy money o'd there. —

Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my soul? —

No, not for Venice. —

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the merchant's heart. — Be mercifull;
Take thine thry money: bid me tear the bond.

b Oppose; controvert. — c "Within his danger," i.e., within his power.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT IV.

Shy. When it is paid according to the tenor.—
Thy doth appear you are a worthy judge;
You know the law; thy exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgment. By my soul I swear,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me. I stand here on my bond.

Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why then, thus it is:—
You must prepare your bosom for his knife.

Shy. O, noble judge! O, excellent young man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law,
How does it call to effect the penalty,
Which here appeared due upon the bond.

Shy. 'Tis very true. O, wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art than thou thy looks?
Por. Therefore, lay bare thy bosom.

Shy. Ay, his breast;
So says the bond:—doth it not, noble judge?—
Nearest his heart: those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?

Shy. I have them ready. [Producing scales.

Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,

To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.

Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?

Por. For indent where he shall pay the penalty,

Shy. Two were good you do so much for charity.

Shy. I cannot find it: 'tis not in the bond.

Por. You, merchant, have you any thing to say?

Ant. But little: I am arm'd, and well prepar'd.
Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well.
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you,
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.
Commend me to your honorable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Such as you would have mine, in my death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a lover.

Por. Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And repent not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all,
Here to this devil, to deliver you. [that,

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for
If she were by to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife, thou, and I love
She would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some power to change this currish Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make also an unquiet house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands! I have a daughter;
Would any of the stock of Barabbus
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!
We trifled time; I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine:
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Shy. Most rightful judge!

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast:

The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Shy. Most learned judge!—A sentence come, prepare!
[Shewing the scales again.

Por. Tarry a little: there is something else.—
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are, a pound of flesh:
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh; But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the laws of Venice confiscate
Unto the state of Venice. [judge!

Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew:—O learned

Shy. Is that the law?

Por. Thou shalt see the act;

Por. Thou urgest justice, be assured,
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest.

Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew:—a learned judge!

Shy. I take his offer then: pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Bass. Here is the money.

Por. Soft! The Jew shall have all justice;—soft?—no haste:—
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!

Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh; if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it so much
As much the less, or more, than the balance,
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor scruple; nay, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew! Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.
Por. Why dost thou the Jew pause? why wilt thou pause?
Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go.

Bass. I have it ready for thee: here it is.

Por. He hath refused it in the open court:
He shall have merely justice, and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel, still say I; a second Daniel:—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not have barely my principal?
Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

Shy. Why then the devil give him good of it.
I'll stay no longer question.

Por. Tarry, Jew!

The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If be proved against an alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts,
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods: the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.
In which proceeding, I say, thou stand'st;—
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That, indirectly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriv'd against the very life
Of the defendant, and thou hast incurred
The danger formerly by me rehearsed.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it.
SCENE I.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's:
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.

Por. Ay, for the state: not for Antonio.

Nay, take my life and all: pardon not that:
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.

Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?

Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake!

Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the court,
To quit the fine for one half of his goods,
I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter:
Two things provided more,—that, for this favor,
He presently become a Christian;
The other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.

Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.

Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou say?

Shy. I am content.

Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.

Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence.
I am not well; Send me the deed after me,
And I will sign it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.

Gra. In christening thou shalt have two godfathers:
Had I been judge, thou should'st have had ten b more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.

Eliz Shylock. Duke, Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.

Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon:
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.

Duke. I am sorry, that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman,
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.

[Exeunt Duke, Magnificoes, and train.

Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitt'd
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal.

Ant. And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.

Por. He is well paid, that is well-satisfied;
And if I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercenary,
I pray you, know me, when we meet again:
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you farther:
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a fee. Grant me two things, I pray you;
Not to deny me, and to pardon me,

Por. You press me far, and therefore I will yield.
Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake;
And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you.—
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more,
And you in love shall not deny me this.

Bass. This ring; good sir!—alas, it is a trifle;
I will not shame myself to give you this.

Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now, methinks, I have a mind to it. [value.

Bass. There's more depends on this, than on the
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation;
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.

Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in other:
You taught me first to beg, and now, methinks,
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.

Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife;
And when she put it on she made me vow,
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.

Por. That's some serves many men to save their gifts,
As if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have deserved this ring,
She would not hold out enemy for ever,
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you.

[Exit Portia and Nerissa.

Ant. My lord Bassanio, let him have the ring,
Let his deservings, and my love withal,
Be valued against your wife's commandment.

Bass. Go, Gratiano; run and overtake him;
Give him the ring, and bring him, if thou can'st,
Unto Antonio's house.—Away! make haste.

[Exit Gratiano.

Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,
And let him sign it. We'll away to-night,
And be a day before our husbands home.
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

[Exit Gratiano running.

Gra. Fair sir, you are well o'erta'en.
My lord Bassanio, upon more 'advice,
Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.

Por. That cannot be.

His ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,
I pray you, show my youth old Shylock's house.

Gra. That will I do.

Ner. Sir, I would speak with you.—
I'll see if I can get my husband's ring, [To Portia.
Which I did give him swear to keep for ever.

Por. Thou may'st, I warrant. We shall have old swearing,
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too.
Away! make haste: thou know'st where I will tarry.

Ner. Come, good sir; will you show me to this house?

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. The Avenue to Portia's House.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright.—In such a night as
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees, [this,
And they did make no noise; in such a night,
Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls,
And sigh'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Cressid lay that night.

Jes. In such a night,
Did Thisbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew;
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,

*Reflection.—"Old" was formerly used in the sense of abundant, frequent.
And ran dismay'd away.

Lor. In such a night,
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea-banks, and wav'd her love
To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night,
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Eson.

Lor. In such a night,
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew,
And with an untrift love did run from Venice,
As far as Belmont.

Jes. In such a night,
Did young Lorenzo swear he lov'd her well,
Stealing her soul with many vows of truth,
And no' er a true one.

Lor. In such a night,
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come;
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Steph. A friend. [you, friend]
Lor. A friend! what friend? your name, I pray
Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
My mistress will before the break of day
Be here at Belmont: she doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Lor. Who comes with her?
Steph. None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.
I pray you, is my master yet return'd?
But go wo in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Enter LaunceLot.

Lau. Soln, sola! wo ha, ha! sola, sola!
Lor. Who calls?
Lau. Soln, sola! did you see master Lorenzo, and mistress Lorenzo? sola, sola!
Lor. Leave babooing, man; here.
Lau. Sola! where? where?
Lor. Here.
Lau. Tell him, there's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news: my master will be here ere morning. [Exit.
Lor. Sweet soul, let's in, and there expect their
And yet no matter: why should we go in? [coming,
My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand;
And bring your music forth into the air.—
[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here we will sit, and let the sounds of music
Crep in our ears: soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sitt, Jessica: look, how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patterns of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-cy'd cherubins:
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, he! and wake Diana with a hymn:
With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear,
And prate her with music. [Music.

Jes. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.
Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:
For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fething mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood,
If they but hear, perchance, a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gait.
By the sweet power of music: therefore, the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods,
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils:
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus.
Let no such man be trusted.—Mark the music.

* [Music again.

Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. [dcl.
Ner. When the moon's shone, we did not see the can-
Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A subordinate shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! hark!
Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.
Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect:
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.
Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.
Por. The crew doth sing as sweetly as the lark'
When neither is attended: and, I think
The nightingale, if she could sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection:
Peace! now the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak'd! [Music ceases.
Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia. [cuckoo.
Por. He knows me, as the blind man knows the
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.
Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?
Lor. Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa:
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;
Nor you, Lorenzo;—Jessica, nor you.
[ A tucket sounded.
Lor. Your husband is at hand: I hear his trumpet.
We are no tell-tails, madam; fear you not.
Por. This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick;
It looks a little paler: 'tis a day,
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun.
Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a light wife douh make a heavy husband,
And never be Bassanio so for me:
But God sort all!—You are welcome home, my lord.
Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my
This is the man, this is Antonio, [friend:
To whom I am so infinitely bound.
Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.
Ant. No more than I am well acquiesced of.
Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy.
Gra. [To Nerissa.] By yonder moon, I swear,
you do me wrong;
In faith, I gave it to the judge’s clerk:
Would he were gelt that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.
Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what’s the matter?
Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give ’to me; whose poesy was
For all the world, like cutters’ poetry
Upon a knife, “Love me, and leave me not.”
Ner. What talk you of the poesy, or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it till your hour of death,
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Give it a judge’s clerk! no, God forgive my judge,
The clerk will wear hair on my face, that had it.
Gra. Ho will, as if he live to be a man.
Por. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.
Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy; a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself, the judge’s clerk;
A pesting boy, that begg’d it as a fee:
I could not for my heart deny it now.
Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife’s first gift;
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands:
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor could be got from his finger for his wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief:
An ‘twere to me, I should be mad at it. [Hand off,
Bass. [Aside.] Why, I were best to cut my left
And swear I lost the ring defending it.
Gra. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg’d it, and, indeed,
Deserv’d it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg’d mine;
And neither man, nor master, would take aught
But the two rings.
Por. What ring, gave you, my lord?
Not that, I hope, which you receiv’d of me.
Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see my finger
Hath not the ring upon it: it is gone.
Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will ne’er come in your bed
Until I see the ring.
Ner. Nor I in yours,
Till I again see mine.
Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When naught would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honor to retain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleas’d to have defended it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?
Nerissa teaches me what to believe:
I’ll die for’t, but some man had the ring.
Bass. No, by mine honor, madam, by my soul,
No woman had it: but a civil doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg’d the ring, which I did deny him,
And suffer’d him to go displeas’d away,
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was enforc’d to send it after him:
I was beset with shame and courtesy;
My honor would not let ingratitude
So much besmear it. Pardon me, good lady,
For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begg’d
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.
Por. Let not that doctor e’er come near my house.
Since he has got the jewel that I lov’d,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you:
I’ll not deny him any thing I have;
No, not my body, nor my husband’s bed.
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus;
If you do misbehave, I’ll be left alone.
Now, by mine honor, which is yet mine own,
I’ll have that doctor for my bedfellow.
Ner. And I his clerk; therefore, be well advis’d
How you do leave me to mine own protection.
Gra. Well, do you so: let not me take him, then;
For, if I do, I’ll mar the young clerk’s pen.
Ant. I am not unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.
Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And in the hearing of these many friends
I swear to thee, even by thine fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself,—
Por. [Aside.] Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one—swear by thy double self,
And there’s an oath of credit.
Bass. Nay, but hear me.
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear,
I never more will break an oath with thee.
Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth,
Which, but for him that had your husband’s ring,
Had I quite misused: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.
Por. Then, you shall be his surety. Give him this,
And bid him keep it better than the other.
Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.
Bass. By heaven! it is the same I gave the doctor.
Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring the doctor lay with me.
Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano,
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor’s clerk,
In lieu of this last night did lie with me.

4 "7 Held as a ceremony; " i. e., kept religiously as a pledge or remembrance.—" A civil doctor;" i. e., a doctor of the civil law.—" Double," i. e., deceitful; full of duplicity.—
" Wealth," i. e., advantage; benefit.
Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways in summer, when the ways are fair enough. What! are we cuckolds, ere we have deserv’d it?
Por. Speak not so grossly. - You are all amaz’d:
Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor;
Nerissa there, her clerk. Lorenzo, here,
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you,
And even but now return’d: I have not yet
Enter’d my house.

My clerk hath some good comforts, too, for you.
Ner. Ay, and I’ll give them him without a fee.
Por. There do I give to you and Jessica,
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess’d of.
Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion: he bequeathed me by will, but a poor thousand crowns; and, as thou say'st, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth, for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

[Adam retires.

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Now, sir! what makes you here?
Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.
Oli. What makes you, then, sir?

*Destroys; ruins.
§"What make you," i. e., what do you?
Ori. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Chas. Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile.

Ori. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat husks with them? What prodigal portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury?

Oli. Know you where you are, sir?

Ori. O! sir, very well: here, in your orchard.

Oli. Ay, better than he I am before knows me. I know, you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me. The courtesy of nations allows me your better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us. I have as much of my father in me, as you, albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Oli. What, boy?

Ori. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?

Ori. I am no villain. I am the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain, that says, such a fellow beget villains. Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had pulled out Wertong tongue for saying so. [Shaking him.] Thou hast railed on thyself.

Adam. [Coming forward.] Sweet masters, be patience for your father's remembrance, be at accord.

Oli. Let me go, I say.

Ori. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you in his will, to give me good education: you have taught me like a peasant, obscurant and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it; therefore, allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allotment my father left me by testament: with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will. I pray you, leave me.

Ori. I will not further offend you, than becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is old dog my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoken such a word.

[Exeunt ORLANDO and ADAM.

Oli. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Hola, Dennis! Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?

Den. So please you, he is here at the door, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit DENNIS.]—'Twill be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Chas. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good monsieur Charles, what's the new news at the new court?

* "And be naught awhile," i. e., and be hanged to you.— b Villain is used in a double sense: by Oliver for a worthless fellow; by Orlando for one of base extraction.

Chas. There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news; that is, the old duke is banished by his younger lords the new duke, and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore, he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the old duke's daughter, be banished with her father?

Chas. O! no; for the new duke's daughter, her cousin, and her being eaten up in their cradles bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old duke live?

Chas. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England. They say, many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Chas. Marry, do I; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguise against me, to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young, and tender; and, for your love, I would be loth to fall him, as I must for my own honor if he come in. Therefore, out of my love to you I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intention, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shewest me; I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have, by underhand means, labored to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles: it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother: therefore, use thy discretion. I had as well break his neck as his fingers and thou wert best look to't: for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath taken thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee (and almost with tears I speak it) there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Chas. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I'll give him his payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. And so, God keep your worship. [Exit.]

Oli. Farewell good Charles. —Now will I stir this gamester. I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he: yet he's gentle; neither schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and, indeed, so much in the heart of—

* The forest of Ardenne is in French Flanders, near the river Meuse.— b To fleet is to pass away.— c Intuition; design. — d Frolicksome fellow. — e Banks. the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. But it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I'll go about. [Exit.

SCENE II.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Ros. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of, and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Here's a, I see, thou levest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered, as mine is to thee.

Cel. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection: by mine honor, I will; and when I break that oath let me turn monster. Therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see; what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I pr'ythee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honor come off again.

Ros. What shall be our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit, and mock the good housewife, Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. This true, for those that she makes fair, she scarce makes honest; and those that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favored.

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No: when nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes nature's natural the cutter off of nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither, but nature's; who, perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.—How now, wit? whither wander you? [Father.

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your C. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. No, by mine honor; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight, that swore by his honor they were good pancakes, and swore by his honor the mustard was naught: now, I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry: now unmuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now; stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knife.

Cel. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. I am a knave, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honor, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw these pancakes, or that mustard.

Cel. Pr'ythee, who is that thou mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Ros. My father's love is enough to honor him enough. Speak no more of him: you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my truth, thou say'st true; for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cramm'd. [Table. Cel. All the better; we shall be the more market.

Le Beau. Bou jour, monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?—

Ros. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Cell. A Spot! Of what color?

Le Beau. What color, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the destinies decree.

Ce. Well said: that was laid on with a trowel.

Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—

Ros. Thou losest thy old smell.

Le Beau. Le Beau, monsieur, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning; and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to do: and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons,—

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence;—

Ros. With bills on their neck,—"Be it known unto all men by these presents,"—

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie, the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Alas!"
Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?
Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.
Duke. They may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.
Cel. Or I, I promise thee.
Ros. But is there any else long to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking?—Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?
Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.
Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.
Ros. Is yonder the man?
Le Beau. Even he, madam.
Cel. Alas! he is too young: yet he looks successfully.
Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?
Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.
Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the men. In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated: speak to him, ladies, so far you can move him.
Cel. Call him hither, good monsieur Le Beau.
Duke F. Do so: I'll not be by. [Duke goes apart.
Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princess calls for you.
Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.
Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?
Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.
Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself 1 with our eyes, or knew yourself with our judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal oneness. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this attempt.
Duke F. Do, young sir: your reputation shall not therefore be misprised. We will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.
Cel. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shamed that was never gracious; if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so. I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me: the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.
Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
Cel. And mine, to eke out hers.
Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you!
Cel. Your heart's desires be with you.
Duke F. Come, where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.
Duke F. You shall try but one fall.
Cel. No, I warrant your grace, you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.
Duke F. You mean to mock me after: you should not have mocked me before; but come your ways.
Ros. Now, Hercules be thy speed, young man!
Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow. [Duke F. and Orlando wrestle.
Ros. O, excellent young man!
Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [Charles is thrown. Shout.
Duke F. No more, no more.
Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace: I am not yet well breathed.
Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?
Cel. I am yet alive; I speak my lord.
Duke F. Bear him away. [Charles is borne out.
Cel. What is thy name, young man?
Orl. Orlando, my liege: the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois.
Duke F. I would, thou hadst been son to some man else.
The world esteem'd thy father honorable,
But I did find him still mine enemy:
Thou shouldst have better plans'd me with this deed,
Hadst thou descended from another house.
But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth.
I would thou hadst told me of another father.
[Exeunt Duke Fred., Train, and Le Beau.
Cel. We'll to my father, coz, would I do this?
Orl. I am more proud to be sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son, and would not change that calling,
To be adopted heir to Frederick.
Ros. My father lov'd sir Rowland as his soul,
And all the world was of my father's mind.
Had I before known this young man his son,
I should have given him tears unto entreaties,
Ere he should thus have ventur'd.
Cel. Gentle cousin,
Let us go thank him, and encourage him:
My father's rough and cavious disposition
Sticks me at heart.—Sir, you have well deserv'd:
If you do keep your promises in love
But justly, as you have exceeded all promise,
Your mistress shall be happy.
Ros. Gentleman,
[Giving him a chain.
Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks
Shall we go, coz?
[means.—
Cel. Ay.—Fare you well, fair gentleman.
Orl. Can I not say, I thank you! My better 1 parts
Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up
Is but a quaintise, a mere lifeless block.
[Tunes;
Ros. He calls us back. My pride fell with my for.
I'll ask him what he would.—Did you call, sir?—
Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown
More than your enemies.
Cel. Will you go, coz?
Ros. Have with you.—Fare you well.
Cel. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?
I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.
[Exeunt Rosalind and Ce"lia.
Orl. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?
I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.
Roe"ter Le Beau.
O, poor Orlando! thou art overthrown.

1 Appellation.
2 "Out of suits," i. e., out of favor.
3 "My better parts," i. e., my spirits.
4 A quaintise was a figure set up for tilers to run at, in mock turnaments.
Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Look, here comes the duke.

Duke. Wilt thou have my eyes full of anger. [haste, Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your fastest and get you from our court.

Ros. Me, uncle?

Duke F. You, cousin: Within these ten days if that thou be'st found So near our public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it.

Ros. I do beseech your grace, Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me. If with myself I hold intelligence, Or have acquaintance with mine own desires, If that I do not dream, or be not frantic, (As I do trust I am not) then, dear uncle, Never so much as in a thought unborn Did I offend your highness.

Duke F. Thus do all traitors: If their purgation did consist in words, They are as innocent as grace itself. Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor. Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends. [enough.

Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter; there's Ros. So was I when your highness took his duke So was I when your highness banish'd him. [dom; Treason is not inherited, my lord; Or if we did derive it from our friends, What's that to me? my father was no traitor.

Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much, To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak. Duke F. Ay, Celia: we stay'd her for your sake; Else had she with her father hang'd along.

Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay: It was your pleasure, and your own remorse. I was too young that time to value her, But now I know her. If she be a traitor, Why so am I, we still have slept together, Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, cut together; And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans, Still we went coupled, and inseparable. [ness,

Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and her smooth-Her very silence, and her patience, Speak to the people, and they pity her. Thou art a fool: she robs thee of thy name; And thou wilt shew more bright, and seem more virtuous, When she is gone. Then, open not thy lips: Firm and irrevocable is my doom; Which I have pass'd on her. She is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence, then, on me, my I cannot live out of her company. [liege; Duke F. You are a fool. — You, niece, provide your-If you out-stay the time, upon mine honorable, [self; And in the greatness of my word, you die.

[Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords.

Cel. O, my Rosalind! mistress Rosalind! whether wilt thou go? Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine. I charge thee, be not thou more grieved than I am. Ros. I have more cause.

Cel. Thou hast not, cousin.

Pr'ythee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke Hath banish'd me, his daughter.

Ros. That he hath not.

Cel. No, hath not? Rosalind lacks, then, the love Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one. Shall we be sister'd? shall we part, sweet girl? No: let my father seek another heir. Therefore, devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go, and what to bear with us:
And do not seek to take your charge upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.
Ros. Why, whither shall we go?
Cel. To seek my uncle
In the forest of Arden.
Ros.Alias, what danger will it be to us,
Maids as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provoketh leaves sooner to gold.
Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind ofumber smirch my face.
The like do you: so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants.
Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me full points like a man?
A gallant cutler-axe upon my thigh.
A bear-spear in my hand; and, in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will,
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other manish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.
Cel. What shall I call thee, when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no woman name then Jove's own
And therefore look you call me Ganymede. [page,
But what will you be call'd?]
Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state:
No longer Celia, but Aliena.
Ros. But, cousin, what if we essay'd to steal
The clownish fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?
Cel. He'll along o'er the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time, and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made
After my flight. Now go we in content
To liberty, and not to banishment. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, and other Lords, like Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates, and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet,
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the envious court?
Here feel we not the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference, or the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites, and blowes upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly persuade me what I am.
Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head;
And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.
Ami. I would not change it. Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubborness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

* Cutler-axe is an old word for cutlass.—"Swashing," i.e., dashing.—It was a current superstitition, in Shakespeare's time, that the head of a toad contained a stone which was ended with singular virtues.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native burghers of this desert city,
Should, in their own confines, with foiled heads
Have their round launces gor'd.

1 Lord. Indeed, my lord,
The melancholy Jaques grieves at that;
And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp
Than doth your brother that hath banish'd you.
To-day, my lord of Arsinia and Nayland,
Did steal behind him, as he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood;
To which the place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to hanguish: and, indeed, my lord,
The wretched animal he'd forth so gross,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting: and the big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase: and thus the hairy fool,
Much marked of the melancholy Jaques,
Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook,
Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?

1 Lord. O! yes, into a thousand similes.
First, for his weeping in the needless stream;
"Poor dear," quoth he, "thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more [alone,
To that which 'tis too much." Then, being there Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
"Tis right," quoth he; "thou miscry doth part
The flux of company." Ami, a careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him,
And never stays to greet him: "Ay," quoth Jaques,
"Sweep on, you fat and greedy cussies;
Tis just the fashion: wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there?"
Thus most invectively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
You, and of this our life, swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. [tioin
2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing deer.

Duke S. Show me the place.
I love to scope him in these sullen fits,
For then he's full of matter.

2 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be: some villains of my court
Are of consent and sufferance in this.
1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her.
The ladies, her attendants of her chamber,
Saw her a-bed; and in the morning early
They found the bed uncurtained of their mistress.
2 Lord. My lord, the boyish clown, at whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.
Hesperia, the princess' gentlewoman,
Confesses that she secretly o'er-head
Your daughter and her cousin much commend
The parts and graces of the wrestler,
That did but lately foil the s介绍y Charles.

* It irks me," i.e., it gives me pain.—"With forked heads," i.e., with barbed arrows.—"Needless stream," i.e., that needed no such accession.—Encounter.—Scurvy.
As You Like It.

And she believes, wherever they are gone,
That youth is surely in their company.  [hither;
Duke F. Send to his brother: fetch that gallant
If he be absent, bring his brother to me.
I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly,
And let not search and inquisition quit
To bring again these foolish runaways.  [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Before Oliver’s House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who’s there?  [master!
Adam. What, your young master?—O, my gentle
O, my sweet master! O, you b memory
Of old sir Rowland! why, what make you here?
Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why would you be so fond to overcome
The bony prizer of the humorous duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not, master, to some kind of men
Their graces serve them but as enemies?
No more do yours: your virtues, gentle master,
Are sanctified and holy tractors to you.
O, what a world is this, when what is comely
Because him that bears it?

Orl. Why, what’s the matter?
Adam. O, unhappy youth!
Come not within these doors: ’tis beneath this roof
The enemy of all your graces lives.
Your brother—(no, no brother; yet the son—
Yet not the son—[will not call his son—
Of him I was about to call his father,)
Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie, and
You within it: if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off:
I overheard him, and his practices.
This is no place; this house is but a butchery:
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.  [go?
Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me?
Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.
Orl. What! wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,
Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road?
This I must do, or know not what to do;
Yet this I will not do, do how I can.
I rather will subject me to the like use
Of a diverted, 2 proud, and bloody brother.
Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,
The thirteenth by I sav’d under your father,
Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse
When service should in my old limbs lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners thrown.
Take that: and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yes, providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold:
All this I give you. Let me be your servant:
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did not with unashamed forehead woe
The means of weakness and debility:
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly. Let me go with you:
I’ll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessaries.
Orl. O, good old man! how well in thee appears
The constant fayor of the antique world,
When service sweat for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashions of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion,
And having that, do chuse their service up.
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.
But, poor old man, thou prust ’a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come they ways: we’ll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We’ll light upon some settled low content.
Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp with truth and loyalty.
From seventeen years, till now almost fourscore,
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week:
Yet fortune cannot recompenose me better
Than to die well, and not my master’s debtor.  [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind for Ganymede, Celia for Alcina, and Clown, alias Touchstone.

Rosl. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits?
Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Rosl. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man’s apparel, and to cry like a woman; but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat: therefore, courage, good Alcina.

Cyd. I pray you, bear with me: I can go no further.
Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you, than bear you: yet I should bear no 6 cross, if I did bear you, for, I think, you have no money in your purse.

Rosl. Well, this is the forest of Arden.

Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden; the more fool I: when I was at home I was in a better place, but travellers must be content.

Rosl. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.—Look you; who comes here? a young man, and an old, in solemn talk.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.
Sil. O Corin, that thou knew’st how I do love her! Cor. I partly guess, for I have lov’d ere now.
Sil. No, Corin; being old, thou canst not guess,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
As ever sigh’d upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy love were ever like to mine,
As sure I think did never man love so,
How many actions most ridiculous
Hast thou been drawn to by thy fancy?
Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.
Sil. O! thou dost then ne’er love so heartily.
If thou remember’st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not lov’d:
Or if thou hast not sat, as I do now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress’ praise,
Thou hast not lov’d:
Or if thou hast not broke from company,
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not lov’d.
Rosl. O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe!  [Exit Silvius.
Rosl. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound, I have by hard adventure found mine own.

—s a cross was a piece of money stamped with a cross.
Touch. And I mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile: and I remember the kissing of her *butler, and the cow's dags that her pretty chopped hands had milked: and I remember the wooring of a *peasecod instead of her; from whom I took two cots, *and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears, "Wear these for my sake." We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as ill is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Ros. Thou speakest wiser than thou art 'ware of.

Touch. Nay, I shall ne'er be 'ware of mine own wit, Till I break my shins against it.

Ros. Love, love! this shepherd's passion
Is much upon my fashion.

Touch. And mine; but
It grows something stale with me,
And begins to fail with me.

Cel. I pr'ythee, one of you questionyon'd man,
If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.

Touch. Holla, you clown!

Cor. Who calls?

Touch. Your betters, sir.

Cor. Else are they very wretched.

Ros. Peace, I say,—

Good even to you, friend.

Cor. And to you, gentle sir; and to you all.

Ros. I pr'ythee, shepherd, if that love, or gold,
Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed.
Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd,
And faints for succor.

Cor. Fair sir, I pity her,
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze:
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little *weeks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality.
Besides, his *cute, his flocks, and loads of feed,
Are now on mole; and at our shepheardote now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my *voice most welcome shall you be.

Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?

Cor. That young swain that you saw here but *ere—
That little cares for buying any thing.
[While,

Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cel. And we will mend thy wages. I like this place,
And willingly could waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold.
Go with me: if you like, upon report,
The soil, the profit, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithfull feeder be,
And buy it with your gold right suddenly.[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter AMIET, JAQUES, and others.

SONG.

Ami. Under the Greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,

And tune his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see no enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more! I pr'ythee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More! I pr'ythee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. More! I pr'ythee, more.

Ami. My voice is *ragged; I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanza. Call you 'em stanzas?

Ami. What you will, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?

Ami. More at your request, than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you: but that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes; and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks, I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I'll end the song,—Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree.—He hath been all this day to look you. Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too *disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble; come.

SING.

Who doth ambition shun,[All together here.
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats,
And pleas'd with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see, &c.

Jaq. I'll give you a verse to this note, that I made yesterday in spite of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it.

Jaq. Thus it goes:—

If it do come to pass,
That any man turn as
Leaving his wealth and ease,
A stubborn will to please,
Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame,
Here shall he see, gross fools as he,
An if he will come to me.

Ami. What's that ducdame?

Jaq. 'Tis a Greek invocation to call fools into a circle. I'll go sleep if I can; if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I'll go seek the duke: his banquet is prepared.[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no farther: O! I die for food. Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Ori. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself

* A butler, or butler, was a washerwoman's stick for beating linen.—*Peasecod was the ancient term for peas in the pod, that had the being the pod.—*Cuts,—"Cote," I.e., cot; cotton.—"In my voice," I.e., as far as I have a voice, or vote.—"But crewelwise," I.e., but just now.
SCENE VII.—The Same.

A Table set out. Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Lords, and others.

Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast, For I can no where find him like a man. 1 Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence: Here was he merry, hearing of a song. Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical, We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.— Go, seek him: tell him, I would speak with him.

Enter Jacques.

1 Lord. He saves my labor by his own approach. Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this, That your poor friends must woo your company? What, you look merrily.

Jaq. A fool, a fool!—I met a fool i' the forest, A motley fool; (a miserable world!) As I do live by food, I met a fool, Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun, And rail'd on fady Fortune in good terms, In good set terms,—and yet a motley fool. "Good-morrow, fool," quoth I: "No, sir," quoth he, "Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune." And then he drew a dial from his poke, And looking on it with lack-lustre eyes, Says very wisely, "It is ten o'clock; Thus may we see," quoth he, "how the world wags: Tis but an hour ago since it was nine, And after one hour more 'twill be eleven; And so from hour to hour we rip and rife, And then from hour to hour we rot and rot; And thereby hangs a tale." When I did hear The motley fool thus moral on the time, My lungs began to crow like chateleers, That fools should be so deep contemplative; And I did laugh, "sans intermission, An hour by his dial.—O, noble fool! A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear. Duke S. What fool is this? [courtier, Jaq. O, worthy fool!—One that hath been a And says, if ladies be but young and fair, They have the gift to know it; and in his brain, Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd With oblique snares, the which he vents In mangled forms.—O, that I were a fool! I am ambitious for a motley coat. Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my only suit; Provided, that you weed your better judgments Of all opinion that grows rank in them, 1 compact of jars, I. e., made up of discords. 2 Motley, I. e., part-colored; an allusion to the part-colored dress of fools or clowns. —An allusion to the proverb: "Fools are the favorites of fortune." 3 Pocket.—Moralize. 4 Without.—5 My only suit, a goble between suit, a petition, and suit, a dress.

That I am wise. I must have liberty Withal, as large a charter as the wind, To blow on whom I please; for so fools have: And they that are most galled with my folly, They must most laugh. And why, sir, must they so? The why is plain as way to paroch church: He, that a fool doth very wisely hit, Doth very foolishly, although he smart, But to seem senseless of the bob; if not, The wise man's folly is anatomiz'd; Even by the hand even given of the fool. Invest me in my motley: I'll give me leave To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of th' infected world, If they will patiently receive my medicine. [do.

Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou would'st say.

Jaq. What, for a couther, would I do, but good!

Duke S. Most mischiefful fool sin, in chiding sin: For thou thyself hast been a libertine, As sensual as the brutish stig itself; And all th' embossed sores, and headed evils, That thou with licence of free foot hast caught, Wouldst thou discharge into the general world.

Jaq. Why, who cries out on pride, That can therein tax any private party? Dost it not flow as hugely as the sea, Till that the very means of weal do ebb? What woman in the city do I name? When I that say, the city-woman bears The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders? Who can come in, and say, that I mean her, When such a one as she, such is her neighbor? Or what is he of basest function, That says, his bravery is not on my cost, Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits His folly to the metre of my speech? There then; how then? what then? Let me see wherein My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right, Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free, Why then, my tuxing like a wild goose flies, Unchim'd of any man. But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. Why, have I eat none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd.

Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress, Or else a rude despiser of good manner, That in civility thou seem'st so empty? [point

Orl. You touch'd my vein at first: the thorny Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show Of smooth civility; yet am I the inland bred, And know some nurture. But forbear, I say: He dies, that touches any of this fruit, Till I and my affairs are answered.

Jaq. An you will not be answered with reason, I must die.

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force, More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

[you:

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray I thought, that all things had been savage here, And therefore put I on the countenance

2 But to seem senseless, I. e., to seem otherwise than senseless.—6 Inland bred, I. e., not clownishly bred.—8 Education, manners.
Of stern commandment. But what' e'er you are,
That, in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time,
If ever you look'd on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,
If ever sat at any good man's feast,
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be.
In the which hope, I blush, and hide my sword.
Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,
And at such good men's feasts, and wip'd our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd; and
And therefore sit you down in gentleness,
And take, upon commend, what help we have,
That to your wanting may be minister'd.
Orl. Then, but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a dog, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step.
Limp'd in pure love: till he be first suffer'd,
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.
Duke S. Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.
Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort. [Exeunt.
Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy;
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants, than the scene
Wherein we play a in.
Jap. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant
Mewing and puking in the nurse's arms.
Then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then, the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woefull ballad
Made to each other's eye, even so,
Full of strange oaths, and beauteous slights,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then, the justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eye severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacle on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank, and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable
And let him feed. [Burdens, Orf. Adam. So had you need;
I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.
Duke S. Welcome; fall to: I will not trouble you

As yet to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

[Confers with Orlando.

Song.

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen.
Although thy breath be rude.
Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is frigging, most loving more folly.
Then, heigh, ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.
Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost bite so nigh.
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp,
As friend remember'd not.
Heigh, ho! sing, &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good sir Rowland's son,
As you have whisper'd faithfully, you were,
And as mine eye doth his eligies witness
Most truly lim'd, and living in your face,
Be truly welcome hither. I am the duke,
That lov'd your father. The residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me.—Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is,
Support him by the arm.—Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords and Attendants.

Duke F. Not seen him since? Sir, sir, that can—but were I not the better part made merry, I am: I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it: Find out thy brother, wheresoe'er he is;
Seek him with candle: bring him,dead or living; Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory,
 Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.
Oli. O, that thy highness knew my heart in this! I never lov'd my brother in my life.
Duke F. More villain thou.—Well, push him out of doors:
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands.
Do this expediently, and turn him going. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Orlando, 4 hanging a paper on a tree.

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey

SCENE II.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character,
Thus shall they eye, which in this forest looks,
 Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando: carve, on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter CORIN and TOUCHSTONE.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humor well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one sickens, the worse case he is; and he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great cause of the night, is lack of the sun; that he, that hath learned no wit by nature nor art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope,—

Touch. Truly, thou art damned, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.

Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone: those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country, as the behavior of the country is most mockable at the court. Thou toldst me, thou sawest not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes, and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say; come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will humble them the sooner: shallow again. A more sounder instance; come.

Cor. And they are often tarried over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! Thou worms-meet, in respect of a good piece of flesh, indeed!—Learn of the wise, and pend perpend; civet is of a baser birth than tar; the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courteously a wit for me: I'll rest.

Touch. Wilt thou rest damned? God help thee,
Will I Rosalinda write;
Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite.
Heaven would in a little show,
Therefore hear Nature chang'd.
That one body should be fill'd
With all graces wide enlarg'd:
Nature presently distill'd
Helen's cheek, but not her heart,
Cleopatra's majesty,
Alalanta's better part,
Sad Lucretia's modesty.
Thus Rosalinda of many parts
By heavenly synod was devis'd;
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the 'touches dearest priz'd.'
Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Rosal. O, most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, "Have patience, good people!"
Cel. How now? back, friends.—Shepherd, go off a little:—go with him, sirrah.
Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honorable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

[Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?
Rosal. O! yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.
Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.
Rosal. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.
Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering, how thy name should be hanged and carved upon these trees?
Rosal. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree: I was never so be-thymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.
Cel. "Trow you, who hath done this?"
Rosal. Is it a man?
Cel. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck? Change you color?
Rosal. I pr'ythee, who?
Cel. O lord, lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.
Rosal. Nay, but who is it?
Cel. Is it possible?
Rosal. Nay, I pr'ythee, now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.
Cel. O, wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all whooping!
Rosal. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am capsarion'd like a man, I have a doub; let and hose in my disposition! One inch of delay more is a Sphynx of discovery; I pr'ythee, tell me, who is it quickly; and speakPrivacy. I would thou couldst stammer, that thou might'st pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle; either too much or once, or none at all. I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.
Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.
Rosal. Is he of God's making? What manner of man is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?
Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.
Rosal. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful. Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.
Cel. It is young Orlando, that tripp'd up the wrestler's heels and your heart, both in an instant.
Rosal. How then, but the devil take mocking: speak sad brow, and true maid.
Cel. I'faith, coz, 'tis so.
Rosal. Orlando?
Cel. Orlando.
Rosal. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose?—What did he, when thou saw'st him? What said he? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee, and when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.
Cel. You must borrow me Garagantua's mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say, ay, and no, to these particulars is more than answer in a catechism.
Rosal. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freely as he did the day he wrestled?
Cel. It is as easy to count atoms, as to resolve the propositions of a lover: but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.
Rosal. It may well be call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.
Cel. Give me audience, good madam.
Rosal. Proceed.
Cel. There lay he stretch'd along, like a wounded knight.
Rosal. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it will become the ground.
Cel. Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pr'ythee; it curves unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.
Rosal. O ominous! he comes to kill my heart.
Cel. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of tune.
Rosal. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

[Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Cel. You bring me out.—Soft! comes he not here?
Rosal. 'Tis he: slink by, and note him.

[ROSALIND AND CELIA retire.

Jaqu. I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.
Orl. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.
Jaqu. Good bye, you: let's meet as little as we can.
Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.
Jaqu. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing love-songs in their barks.
Orl. I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favoredly.

Scene II.

As you like it.

201

Jaq. Rosalind is your love's name?   Orl. Yes, just.
Jaq. What stature is she of?
Orl. Just as high as my heart.
Jaq. You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and could't then out of rings?
Orl. Not so; but I answer you right painted Cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.
Jaq. You have a nimble wit: I think, 'twas made of Atlas's heca. Will you sit down with me? and we will two sail against our mistress the world, and all her misery.
Orl. I will chide no breathier in the world, but myself, against whom I know most faults.
Jaq. The worst fault you have is to be in love.
Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.
Jaq. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool when I found you.
Orl. He is drowned in the brook: look but in, and you shall find him.
Jaq. There I shall see mine own figure.
Orl. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cypher.
Jaq. I'll tarry no longer with you. Farewell, good signior love.
Orl. I am glad of your departure. Adieu, good monsieur melancholy.

[Scene on Withal.

Exeunt Jaques. — Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. [Aside to Celia.] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him. [To him.] Do you hear, forester?
Orl. Very well: what would you?
Ros. I pray you, what is't o'clock?
Orl. You should ask me, what time o' day: there's no clock in the forest.
Ros. Then, there is no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock.
Orl. And why not the swift foot of time? had not that been as proper?
Ros. By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.
Orl. I pr'ythee, who doth he trot withal?
Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a so'night, Time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Ros. Who ambles Time withal?
Orl. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merry, because he feels no pain: the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. These Time ambles withal.

Ros. What cloth he gallop withal?
Orl. With a thief to the gallowers; for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.
Ros. Who stands he still withal?
Orl. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Ros. Where dwell you, pretty youth?
Orl. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringue upon a petticoat.
Ros. Are you native of this place?
Orl. As the coney, that you see dwell where she is b'kindled.
Ros. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.
Orl. I have been told so of many: but, indeed, an old relish of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it; and I thank God, I am not a woman, to be touched with so many giddy offences, as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.
Ros. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?
Orl. There were none principal: they were all like one another, as half-pence are; every one fault seeming monstrous, till his fellow fault came to match it.
Ros. I pr'ythee, recount some of them.
Orl. No; I will not cast away my physic, but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that adores our young plants with carving Rosalind on their backs; hangs odes upon lawthorns, and elegies on brambles: all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fancymonger I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotient of love upon him.
Ros. I am he that is so love-shaked. I pray you, tell me your remedy.
Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not prisoner.
Orl. What were his marks?
Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not; a blue eye, and sunken, which you have not; an unquenchable spirit, which you have not; a beard neglected, which you have not:—but I pardon you for that, for, simply, your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue. Then, your hose should be ungar'd, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man: you are rather a point-device in your accoutrements; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other.
Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.
Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than to confess she does: that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?
Orl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.
Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?
Orl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.
Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house, and a whip, as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punmonger" is one who deals in tricks of imagination.—"Having," i. e., possession.—"Point-device," i. e., precise; exact.

And. Well, I am not fair, and therefore, I pray the gods, make me honest!

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

And. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy frowness: sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee; and to that end, I have been with sir Oliver Martext, the vicar of the next village, who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

Jaq. [Aside.] I would fain see this meeting.

Aud. And, the gods give us. A man 2 might, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—many a man knows no end of his goods: right; many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, then, it is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. 2 Are horns given to poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honorable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much 3 defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Martext. Here comes sir Oliver.—Sir Oliver Martext, you are well met: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Oli. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [coming forward.] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Mr. What-se'call't: how do you, sir? You are very well met: 4 God'll ill you for your last company. I am very glad to see you:—even a toy in hand here, sir.—Nay, pray, be cover'd.

Jaq. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his 2 bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so weallock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then, one of you will prove a shrunken pannel, and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind, but I were better to be married of him than of another; for he is not like to marry me well, and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey. We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver! Not O sweet Oliver! O brave Oliver! 14

Bring us to this sight, and you shall say
I'll prove a busy actor in their play.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Sil. Sweet Phoebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phoebe:
Say that you love me not; but say not so
In bitterness. The common executioners,
Whose hearts in accident of death doth make hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humbered neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sternere
Than he that "kills and lives by bloody drops?"

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, behind.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on'tomories,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart:
And, if mine eyes can speak, now will they tell thee;
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;
Or, if thou cast not, O, for shame, for shame!
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee:
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The rascalice and palpable impression
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darter at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O! dear Phoebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.

Phe. But till that time
Come not thou near me; and when that time comes Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not,
As till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. [Advancing.] And why, I pray you? Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once, [Beauty,
Over the wretched? What though you have no
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed,
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you, than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work.—O'll my little life!
I think she means to tangle my eyes too.
No, 'faith, proud mistress, hope not after it:
'Tis not your inky brows, your black-silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.—
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy south, pulling with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a properer man,
Than she a woman: 'tis such fools as you,
That make the world full of ill-favor'd children.
'Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can show her.

But, mistress, know yourself: down on your knees,
And thank heaven fasting for a good man's love;
For I must toll you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can: you are not for all markets.
Cry the man mercy: love him; take his offer:

*Notes; stones,—Love.
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near To fall in love with him: but for my part I love him not, nor hate him not, and yet I have more cause to hate him than to love him; For what had he to do to chide at me? He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black; And, now I am remember'd, scold'd at me: I marvel why I answer'd not again: But that's all one; omittance is no quittance. I'll write to him a very taunting letter, And thou shalt hear it: wilt thou, Silvius? Silv. Phebe, with all my heart. Phe. I'll write it straight: The matter's in my head, and in my heart: I will be bitter with him, and passing short. Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jac. I pray thee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say, you are a melancholy fellow.

Jac. I am so: I do love it better than laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Jac. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a poet.

Jac. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all of these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels; which by often rumina-tion wraps me in most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear, you have sold your own hands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jac. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad. And to travel for it too!

Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind.

Jac. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

[Exit.]

Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: look you lipp, and wear strange suits; 2 disable all the benefits of your own country; be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that counten- nance you are, or I will scarce think you have swarm in a 2 gondola.—Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover? An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! Ho that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and a Foul is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer. So, take her to thee, shepherd.—Fare you well. Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a year to-gether: I had rather hear you chide, than this man woo.

Ros. He's fallen in love with your 2 founess, and she'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll suacer her with bitter words.—Why look you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I bear you. Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me, For I am failer than vows made in wine: Besides, I like you not.—If you will know my house, 'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard by.— Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard. Come, sister.—Shepherdess, look on him better, And be not proud: though all the world could see, None could be so abus'd in 'sight as he. Come, to off flock.

[Exeunt Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.

Phe. Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might; "Who ever lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?" Sil. Sweet Phebe! Phe. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius? Sil. Sweet Phebe, pity me. Phe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius. Sil. If ever sorrow was, relief would be— If you do sorrow at my grief in love, By giving love, your sorrow and my grief Were both externum'd.

Phe. Thou hast my love: is not that neighborly? Sil. I would have you. Phe. Why, that were covetousness.

Silvius, the time was that I hated thee, And yet it is not that I bear thee love: But since that thou castest talk of love so well, Thy company, which erst was irksome to me, I will endure, and I'll employ thee too; But do not look for further recompense, Than thine own gaudiness that thou art employ'd. Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my love, And I in such a poverty of grace, That I shall think it a most plentiful crop To glean the broken ears after the man That the main harvest reaps: loose now and then A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon. Phe. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me ere while?

Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft; And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds, That the old 2 carlot once was master of.

Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him. 'Tis but a 2 peevish boy;—yet he talks well:— But what care I for words? yet words do well, When he that speaks them pleases those that hear. It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:— But, sure, he's proud; and yet his pride becomes him. He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue Did make offence, his eye did heal it up. He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall. His leg is but so so; and yet 'tis well: There was a pretty redness in his lip; A little liver, and more lusty red. [Fence Than that mix'd in his cheek: 'twas just the differ-Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask. There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart-whole.

Oro. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an ye be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be woo'd of a snail.

Oro. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head, a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman. Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Oro. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Oro. Virtue is no horn-maker, and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Oro. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holiday humor, and like enough to consent.—What would you say to me now, an I were your very Rosalind?

Oro. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Oro. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Oro. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should thank my honesty rather than my wit.

Oro. What, out of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Oro. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person I say—I will not have you.

Oro. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Ros. No,'faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, but he was taken with the cramp, or drowned, and the foolish corners of that age found it was a Hero of the first.

But these are all lies: men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Oro. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind, for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on-disposition, and ask you what you will, I will grant it.

Oro. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith will I; Fridays, and Saturdays, and all.

Oro. And wilt thou have me?

Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Oro. What say'st thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Oro. I hope so.

Ros. Why, then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us. —Give me your hand, Orlando.—

What do you say, sister?

Oro. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin.—"Will you, Orlando?—"

Cel. Go to.—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Oro. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Oro. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say,—"I take thee, Rosalind, for wife."—

Oro. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but, —I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a girl, goes before the priest; and, certainly, the woman's thought runs before her actions.

Oro. So do all thoughts: they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her?

Oro. For ever, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the ever. No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clumsy than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like b Diana in the fountain, and I will do what you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a' chyem, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Oro. But will my Rosalind do so?

Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Oro. O! but she is wise.

Ros. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder. Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Oro. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say, —"Wit, whither wilt?"

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbor's bed.

Oro. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Ros. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. Of that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's accusing, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Oro. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours.

Oro. I must attend the duke at dinner: by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways.—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less:—that flattering tongue of yours won me:—'tis but one cast away, and so,—come, death!—Two o'clock is your hour!

—That is, like the figure of Diana in an artificial fountain.—

—Hyem. —Bar.
By the stern brow, and waspish action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor. Pardon me,
I am but as a guileless messenger.
Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter,
And play the swaggerer: hear this, bear all.
She says, I am not fair; that I lack manners;
She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
Were man as rare as Phoenix. Od’s my will!
Her love is not the hate that I do hunt:
Why writes she so to me?—Well, shepherd, well;
This is a letter of your own device.
Sil. No, I protest; I know not the contents:
Phebe did write it.
Ros. Come, come, you are a fool,
And turn’d into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand; she has a leather hand,
A freestone-color’d hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but ‘twas her hands:
She has a housewife’s hand; but that’s no matter.
I say, she never did invent this letter;
This is a man’s invention, and his hand.
Sil. Sure, it is hers.
Ros. Why, ’tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
A style for challengers: why, she defies me,
Like Turk to Christian. Woman’s gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant- rude invention,
Such round, bold words, that sweep in their effect
Than in their countenance.—Will you hear the letter?
Sil. So you please; for I never heard it yet,
Yet heard too much of Phebe’s cruelty.
Ros. She Phebe me. Mark how the tyrant writes.
Sil. But what you will.
Ros. “Art thou god to shepherd turn’d,
That a maiden’s heart hath burn’d?”—
Can a woman rail thus?
Sil. Call you this railing?
Ros. “Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr’st thou with a woman’s heart?”
Did you ever hear such railing?—
“Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no b violence to me.”—
Meaning me, a beast.—
Sil. To me or the score of your bright eye?
Have you power to raise such love in mine,
Alack! in me what strange effect
Would they work in mild aspect?
Whiles you chide me, I did love;
How then might your prayers move me?
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me:
And by him soul up thy mind:
Whether that thy youth and 4 kind
Will the faithfull offer take
Of me, and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I’ll study how to die.”
Sil. Call you this chiding?
Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!
Ros. Do you pity him? no; he deserves no pity.
Wilt thou love such a woman?—What, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? not to be endured!—Well, go your way to her, (for I see, love hath made thee a tame snake) and say this to her:—that if she love me, I charge her to love thee; if she will not, I will never have her, unless thou entertain for her.—If you be a true lover, hence, and not a word, for here comes more company.
[Exit Silvius.

Enter Olyver.
Oli. Good morrow, fair ones. Pray you, if you
Where in the purlieus of this forest stands [know, a "Here much Orlando," an ironical expression, signifying, “here’s no Orlando.”

b Mischief.—Eyes.— Nature; natural affection.
A shep-cote, front'd about with olive-trees? [tom:
Cle. West of this place, down in the neighbor-boys.
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place.
But at this hour the house doth keep itself;
There's none within.
Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description;
Such garments, and such years:—"The boy is fair,
Of female favor, and "bestows himself,
Like a rife slipster: the woman low,
And browner than her brother." Are not you
The owner of the house I did inquire for?
Cle. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say, we are.
Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls his Rosalind,
He sends his bloody napkin. Are you he?
Ros. I am. What must we understand by this?
Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stain'd.

Cle. I pray you, tell it.
Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour; and, passing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And, mark, what object did present itself!
Under an old oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top baid with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and grilied snake had wraith'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlack'd itself,
And with indented glises did slip away
Into a bush; under which bush's shade
A lioness, with uders all drawn dry,
Lay couching; head on ground, with catlike watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast,
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.
This seen, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.
Cle. O! I have heard him speak of that same brother;
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst men.

Oli. And well he might so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.
Ros. But, to Orlando. Did he leave him there,
Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness?
Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him: in which hurtling
From miserable slumber I awak'd.
Cle. Are you his brother?
Ros. Was it you he rescu'd?
Cle. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?
Oli. "Twas I; but 'tis not I. I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.
Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?
Oli. By and by.
When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments had most kindly bath'd,
As, how I came into that desert place,
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brother's love:
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself; and here, upon his arm,
The lioness had torn some flesh away,
Which all this while had blest; and now he fainted,
And cried in fainting upon Rosalind.
Brief, I recover'd him, bound up his wound;
And, after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am,
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise; and to give this napkin,
Dyed in his blood, unto the shepherd youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

Cle. Why, how now, Ganymede? sweet Ganymede?
[ROSALIND swoons.
Oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.
Cle. There is more in it.—Consul!—Ganymede!
Ros. Look, he recovers.
Cle. Why, are you at home?
Ros. We'll lead you thither.
I pray you, will you take him by the arm? [Jack Oli. Be of good cheer, youth. You a man? You
A man's heart.
Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah! a body
Would think this was well counterfeited. I pray
You, tell your brother how well I counterfeited.—
Heigh ho!—
Oli. This was not counterfeit: there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.
Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.
Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.
Ros. So I do; but, 'tis faith, I should have been a woman by right.
Cle. Come; you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards.—Good sir, go with us.
Oli. That will I, for I must hear answer back,
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.
Ros. I shall devise something. But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.—Will you go?
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey; a most tile Mar-text. But, Audrey; there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis: he hath no interest in me in the world. Here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown.
By my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for: we shall be floating; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William. Will a good even to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: nay, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

*Forbear.
Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William?
Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name. Wast born i' the forest here?
Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God;—a good answer. Art rich?
Will. Sir, so, so, so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good:—and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?
Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying; "The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool." The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?
Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned?
Will. No, sir.

Touch. Neither learn this of me. To have, is to have; for it is a figure in rhetoric, that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other; for all your writers do consent, that ipse is he: now, you are not ipse, for I am he.

Will. Which he, sir?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar, leave, the society,—which in the boors is, company,—of this female,—which in the common is,—woman; which together is, abandon the society of this female, or, clown, thou peribhest; or, to thy better understanding, diest; or, to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage. I will deal in poison with thee, or, in bastinado, or in steel: I will hang thee with thee in faction; I will o'errun thee with policy; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways: therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you: come, away, away!

Touch. Trip, Audrey; trip, Audrey.—I attend, I attend. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that, but seeing, you should love her; and, loving, woo; and, wooing, she should grant? and will you persevere to enjoy her?

Or. No. Neither call the gladness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting; but say with me, I love Aliena; say with her, that she loves me; consent with both, that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good; for my father's house, and all the revenue that was old sir Rowland's, will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Orl. You have my consent.

Let your wedding be to-morrow: thither will I invite the duke, and all's contented followers.

Enter Rosalind.

Goyou, and prepare Aliena; for, look you, Here comes my Rosalind.

Rosl. God save you, brother.
SCENE IV.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Phe. And I for Ganymede.
Orl. And I for Rosalind.
Ros. And I for woman.
Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service;
And so am I for Phebe.
Phe. And I for Ganymede.
Orl. And I for Rosalind.
Ros. And I for woman.
Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All luminescence, all patience, and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance;
And so am I for Phebe.
Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.
Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.
Ros. And so am I for woman.
Phe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?
Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Rosalind.]

Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Phebe.]

Ros. Who do you speak to, "why blame you me to love you?"

Orl. To her, that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Phe. Pray, who go you more of this: `tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon.—I will help you,[To Silvius] if I can:—I would love you,[To Phebe] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you,[To Phebe] if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow:—I will satisfy you,[To Orland.] if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow:—I will content you,[To Silvius] if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow.—As you[To Orlando] love Rosalind, meet:—as you[To Silvius] love Phebe, meet:—and as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So, fare you well: I have left you commands.

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.
Orl. Nor I.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey: to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart, and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Touch. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

1 Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met. Come, sit; sit; and a song.

2 Page. We are for you: sit i' the middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hours, which are only the prologues to a bad voice?

2 Page. I'faith, I'faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

SONG.

It was a lover, and his lass,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonio,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass
In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding;
Sweet lovers love the spring.

*That is, a married woman.

Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonio,
Those pretty country folk would be,
In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonio,
How that our life was but a flower
In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonio,
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unimpeachable.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time; we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. 'God be wi' you; and God mend your voices.—Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Aliens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not, As those that fear to hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Ros. Patience once more, whiles our compact is heard.—[To the Duke.] You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here? [with her.]

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give [To Orlando.] And you say, you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. [To Phebe.] You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Phe. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Ros. But if you refuse to marry me, You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phe. So is the bargain.[To Phebe, if she will?]

Ros. [To Silvius.] You say, that you'll have Silvius. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promis'd to make all this matter even. Keep you your word, O duke! to give your daughter:

You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter:— Keep you your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me, Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd:— Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me:—and from hence I go, To make these doubts all even— even so.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy Some lively touches of my daughter's favor.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him, Methought he was a brother to your daughter: But, my good lord, this boy is forest-borne, And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.
Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome. This is the moity-valued gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier, he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a *measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that to 'en up?

Touch. 'Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How is the seventh cause?—Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God'll you, sir; I desire you of the like.

I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country capricatives, to swear, and to forswear, according as marriage binds, and blood breaks.—A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favored thing, but mine own: a poor humor of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will. Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor-house, as your pearl in your foil oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sensible.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times † removed.—Bears your body more * seeming, Audrey.—As thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the "rot-courtious." If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the "quip modest." If again, it was not well cut, he "disabled my judgment: this is called the "reply churlish." If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spake not true: this is called the "reproof valiant." If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I * lied: this is called the "countercheck quarrelsome:" and so to the "lie circumstantial," and the "lie direct."

Jaq. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no farther than the "lie circumstantial," nor he durst not give me the "lie direct;" and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the 'book, as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the retort courteous; the second, the quip modest; the third, the reply churlish; the fourth, the reproof valiant; the fifth, the countercheck quarrelsome; the sixth, the lie with circumstance; the seventh, the lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an if. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met, themselves, one of them thought but of an if, as if you said so, then I said so; and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your if is the only peace-maker; much virtue in if.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

Duke S. He uses his folly like a strolling-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman's clothes; and Celia.

Still Music.

Hymn. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even
* To Duke S. I will give myself, for I am yours.

[To Orlando.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Ori. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,
I will your love admit:
[not he—]

[To Duke S.] I'll have no father, if you be not he:

[To Touchstone and Audrey.] You and you are sure together,
As the winter to foul weather.

Wyles a wedlock-hymn we sing,
Feed yourselves with questioning,
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and thus we finish.

Song.

Wooling is great Jono's crown:
O, blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock, then, be honored:
Honor, high honor, and renown,
To Hymen, god in every town!

Duke S. O, my dear niece! welcome thou art to me:
Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. [To Silvius.] I will not cut my word, now thou art mine:
Thy faith my fancy to thee doth * combine.

Enter Second Brother.

2 Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two. I am the second son of old Sir Rowland, that brings these tidings to this fair assembly.—Duke Frederick, hearing how that every Men of great worth resorted to this forest,

Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot
In his own conduct, purposely to take
His brother here, and put him to the sword.

And to the skirts of this wild wood he came,

SCENE IV.

Where, meeting with an old religious man,
After some question with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise, and from the world;
His crown bequeathing to his banish’d brother,
And all their lands restor’d to them again,
That were with him excil’d. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man.
Thou offer’st fairly to thy brothers’ wedding:
To one, his lands withheld; and to the other,
A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.
First, in this forest, let us do those ends
That here were well begun, and well begot;
And after, every of this happy number,
That have endured shrewd days and nights with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall’n dignity,
And fall into our rustic revelry.—

Play, music! and you brides and bridegrooms all,
With measure heap’d in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience.—If I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life,
And thrown into the neglect the pompous court?

2 Bro. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I: out of these b convertites
There is much matter to be heard and learn’d.—
You [To Duke S.] to your former honor bequeath;
Your patience, and your virtue, well deserve it:—
You [To Orlando] to a love, that your true faith doth merit:—
You [To Oliver] to your land, and love, and great
You [To Silvius] to a long and well deserved bed:—
And you [To Touchstone] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage
Is but for two months victuall’d.—So, to your pleasure,
I am for other than for dancing measures.

EPILOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the Epilogue; but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in, then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women! for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you; and I charge you, O men! for the love you bear to women, (as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hates them) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked 'me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make curtesy, bid me farewell.

Exit.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an Alehouse on a Heath.

Enter Hostess and Christophero Sly.

Sly. I'll
2 phuse you, in faith.

Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!

Sly. Y'are a baggage: the Slys are no rogues:
look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, paucas b pallabris; let the world slide. "Sessa!"

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Jeronimy: go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the headborough. 4 [Exit.

Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law. I'll not budge an inch, boy: let him come, and kindly. 11 [Lies down, and falls asleep.

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord’s House.

Sly is discovered, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with bonnet, ever, and apparteneances. Enter Lord, dressed like a Servant.

Sly. For God’s sake, a pot of small ale. [sack]
1 Serv. Will I please your lordship drink a cup of 2 Serv. Will I please your honor taste of these conerves? [day]

3 Serv. What raiment will your honor wear to
Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call not me honor, or lordship: I ne’er drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef. Ne’er ask me what raiment I will wear, for I have no more doubles than backs, no more stockings than legs, nor no more shoes than feet; any, sometime, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overlather. [o! Lord. Heaven cease this evil humor in your hon-

TAMING OF THE SHEEOH.

INDUCTION.

Should be infused with so foul a spirit!
Sly. What! would you make me mad? Am not 1 Christopher Sly, old Sly's son, of Burton-heath; by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hackett, the fat alewife of Wincot, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for 1 Warwickshire ale, score me up for the lying'st knave in Christendom. What! I am not 2 bestraught. Here's—

1 Serv. Of! this it is that makes your lady mourn.

2 Serv. Of! this it is that makes your servants dreap.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. O, noble lord! bethink thee of thy birth; Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment, And banish hence these abject lowly dreams. Look how thy servants do attend on thee, Each in his office ready at thy beck: Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays, [Music. And twenty caged nightingales do sing: Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch, Softer and sweeter than the lastful bed On purpose trimm'd up for Serenities. Say thou wilt walk, we will bestrew the ground: Or wilt thou ride, thy horses shall be trapp'd, Their harness saddled all with gold and pearl. Dost thou see how hawking? thou hast hawks will soar Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt? Thy hounds shall make the wealkin answer them, And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. 1 Serv. Say thou wilt course, thy greyhounds are as swilt As breathing stags, ay, fletcher than the roe. 2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight. Adonis painted by a running brook, And Cytherea all in 3 hedges hid, Which seem to move and wanton with her breath, Even as the wandering sodges play with wind. Lord. We'll show thee Io as she was a maid, And how she was begullid and surpris'd, As soon as the desire of her was, and I 3 Serv. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny wood, Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds; And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep, So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord: Thou hast a lady, far more beautiful Than any woman in this waking age. 1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee, Like envious floods, o'er-run her lovely face, She was the fairest creature in the world; And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady? Or do I dream? or have I dream'd till now? I do not sleep; I see, I hear, I speak; I see my own savours, and, I feel soft things.— Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed.

And not a tinker, nor Christophero Sly.—

Well, bring our lady hither to our sight; And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale. 2 Serv. Will please your mightiness to wash your lips with 2 servants present an ewer, basin, and napkin. O, how glad I am to see your 3 restor'd! O, that once more you knew but what you are! These fifteen years you have been in a dream, Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept. Sly. These fifteen years! by my 4 fay, a goodly nap. But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O! yes, my lord, but very idle words; For though you lay here in this goodly chamber, Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door, And rail upon the hostess of the house, And say you would present her at the 4 leet, Because she brought stone juggs, and 2 not seal'd quart's. Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house.

3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no such maid,

Nor no such men, as you have reck'nd up,

As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,

And Peter Turf, and Henry Plimmerell,

And twenty more such names and men as these, Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a Lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?

Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.

Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband? My men should call me lord: I am your good-man.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband;

I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I know it well.—What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Al'ce madam, or Joan madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else: so lords call ladies.

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd,

And slept 'bout some fifteen year and more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me, Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much.—Servants, leave me and her alone.

Madar, undress you, and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you To pardon me yet for a night or two; Or if not so, until the sun be set, Dost thou not think thou wouldst have expressly charg'd, In peril to incur your former malady, That I should yet absent me from your bed.

I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long; but I would be loath to fall into my dreams again: I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honor's players, hearing your amendment, Are come to play a pleasant comedy; For so your doctors hold it very meet, Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood, And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy: Therefore, they think it good you hear a play, And frame your mind to mirth and merriment, Which bans a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it. Is not a 4 comody a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see't. Come, madam wife, sit by my side,

We shall ne'er be younger, and let the world slide.
ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A Public Place.

Enter Lucentio and Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since, for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv’d for fruitful Lombardy.

The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father’s love and leave, am arm’d
With his good will, and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approv’d in all,
Here let us breathe, and hasty institute
A course of learning, and ingenious studies.
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens,
Gave me my being: and my father, first
A merchant of great traffic through the world,
Vincenzo, comes of the Bentivolii.
Vincenzo’s son, brought up in Florence,
It shall become, to serve all hopes * conceiv’d,*
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
By virtue specially to be achiev’d.
Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left,
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow * placè,* to plunge him in the deep,
And with solace seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. My * perdona te,* gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself,
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy;
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let not your stocks, I pray you;
Or so devote to Aristotle’s Ethics,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur’d.
Talk logic with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk:
Music and poesy use to quicken you:
The mathematics, and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you.
No profit grows, where is no pleasure t’en —

In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well dost thou advise.
If, Biondello * now were come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness,
And take a lodging fit to entertain
Such friends as time in Padua shall beget.
But stay awhile: what company is this?

Tra. Master, some show, to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am resolv’d you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder.
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Grem. To cart her rather: she’s too rough for me.

— There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife?

Kath. [To Bap.] I pray you, sir, is it you * gracious
To make a * stake of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder * mood.

*That is, to fulfil the expectations of his friends.— *Puddle.— (bdl.) Pardon me.— Stale, l. c., but; decay.

k* Prefer them hither; for to * cunning men
I will be very kind, and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing-up;
And so farewell. Katharina, you may stay,
For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit.]

Kath. Why, and I trust, I may go too; may I not?
What shall I do? I am appointed hours, as though, belike,
I know not what to take, and what to leave? Ha!

Gre. You may go to the devil’s dam: your * gifts are so good, here’s none will hold you. * This love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out: our cake’s dough on both sides. Farewell; yet, for the love
I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights,
I will wish him to her father.

Hor. So will I, signior Gremio: but a word, I pray,
Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brook’d parle, know now upon * advice, it toucheth us both,
that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress, and be happy rivals in Bianca’s love, to labor and effect one thing * specially.

Gre. What’s that, I pray? *

Hor. Marry sir, to get a husband for her sister.

Gre. A husband! a devil.

Hor. I say, a husband.

Gre. I say, a devil. Think’st thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio! though it pass your patience, and mine, to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gri. I cannot tell, but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition,—to be whipped at the high-cross every morning.

Hor. 'Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained, till by helping Baptist's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to't afresh.—Sweet Bianca:—Happy man he's done! I dare not say the next runs safest gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Gri. I am agreed: and 'would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her. Come on.

[Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.]

Tra. [Advancing.] I pray, sir, tell me, is it possible
That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O, Trajio! till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible, or likely,
But see! while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness;
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as secret, and as dear,
As love to the Queen of Carthage was.

Trajio, I burn, I pine; I perish, Trajio,
If I 1 ache not this young modest girl.

Counsel me, Trajio, for I know thou canst:
Assist me, Trajio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart;
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but so,— Redimite te captum, quam vocas minime.

Luc. Gramercies, lad! go forward: this contents;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what the pith of all.

Luc. O! yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agonor's race,
That made great Jove to humbly hold her hand,
When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.

Luc. Saw you no more? mark'd you not, how her

Luc. Ah, Trajio, what a cruel matter's he! But art thou not advis'd, he took some care
To get her cunning 'masters to instruct her?

Luc. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it, Trajio.

Tra. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tra. You will be schoolmaster,
And underake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.

Luc. It is: may it be done?

Tra. Not possible; for who shall bear your part,
SCENE II.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

My best beloved and approved friend, Hortensio; and, I hope, this is his house.—
Here, sirrah Grumio, knock, I say. Hor. Knock, sir? whom should I knock? is there any man *rebused your worship?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

Gru. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what am I, sir, that should knock you here, sir?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate;

And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome. — I should knock you first.

And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will it not be?

'Sfaith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll wring it:

I'll try how you can sol, sa, and sing it.

[He wrings Grumio by the ears.

Gru. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.

*Grumio falls down.

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now! what's the matter? — My old friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio! — How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Con tutto il core ben venuto, molto honorato signior mio Petruchio.

Rice, Grumio true: we will compound this quarrel.

Gru. Basing. Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he *leges in Latin. — If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service, — look you, sir, — he bid me knock him, and rap him soundly, sir:

Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so:

Being, perhaps, (for ought I see) two and thirty, —

O pip, a mo?

Whom, would to God, I had well knock'd at first,

Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain! — Good Hortensio,

I bade the rascal knock upon your gate,

And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate? — O heavens! Spake you not these words plain, — Sirrah, knock me here; rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly!

And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience: I am Grumio's pledge.

Why this? a heavy chance 'twixt him and you;

Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio.

And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale

Blows you to Padua, here, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the

To seek their fortunes farther than at home,

Where small experience grows. But in a few

Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:

Antonio, my father, is decess'd,

And I have thrust myself into this maze,

Haply to live, and thrive, as best I may.

Crowns in my purse I have, and goods at home,

And so come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee,

And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favor'd wife?

Thou'dst thank me but a little for my counsel;

And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich,

And very rich: but thou'rt too much my friend,

And I'll not wish thee to her.

Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as we,

Few words suffice; and therefore, if thou know

One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife,

(As wealth is butcher of my wooing dance)

Do she as foul as Florence's love,

As old as Sybil, and as curt and shrewd!

As Socrates' Xantippe, or *even worse,

She moves me not, or not removes, at least,

Affection's edge in me. Were she as rough

As are the swelling Adriatic seas,

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;

If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Gru. Nay, but you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is: why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an 4aglet-baby; or an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses. Why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are step'd thus far in,

I will continue that I broach'd in jest.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife

With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous;

Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman:

Her only fault, and that is faults enough,

Is, that she is intolerably curt,

And shrewd, and brawdly; so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for mine own sake:

Pet. Petruchio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect. —

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough,

For I will board her, though she chide as loud

As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,

An affable and courteous gentleman:

Her name is Katharina Minola,

Renowned in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her,

And he knew my deceased father well.

I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her;

And therefore let me be thus bold with you,

To give you over at this first encounter,

Unless you will accompany me thither.

Gru. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humor lasts.

O my word, an she know him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon him. She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves, or so; why, that's nothing: an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir, — an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see within a cat than a yaw. You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee,

For in Baptista's keep my treasure is:

He hath the jewel of my life in hold,

His youngest daughter, Beautiful Bianca,

And her withholdings from me, and other more

Smites to her, and rivals in my love;

Supposing it a thing impossible,

For those defects I have before reheard,

That ever Katharina will be wound:

Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en,

That none shall have access unto Bianca,

Till Katharina the curst have got a husband.

Gru. Katharine the curst!

A title for a maid of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace,

And offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,

To Old Baptista, as a schoolmaster

Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca;

That so I may by this device, at least 4 A figure carved on an e*age,* or jewel. — Shrewish: cross.

 Measure,— " Well seen," i. e., well skilled.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT I.

Have leave and leisure to make love to her, And unsuspicious court her by herself. [Enter Gremio, and Lucentio disguised, with books under his arm.]

Gru. Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you: who goes there? ha!

Hor. Peace, Gruccione: 'tis the rival of my love. Petruchio, stand by a while.

Gru. A proper stirring, and an amorous! [They retire.]

Gru. O! very well; I have per'd the note. Hank you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that at any hand, And see you read no other lectures to her. You understand me.—Over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality, I'll mend it with a larger.—Take your papers, too, And let me have them very well perfumed, For she is sweeter than perfume itself, To whom they go. What will you read to her? Luc. What'er I read to her, I'll plead for you, As for my patron; stand you so assured, As firmly as yourself were still in place: Yea, and perhaps with more successful words This man, unless you were a scholar. Sir, O, this learning, what a thing it is! Gru. O, this woodcock, what an ass it is! Pet. Peace, sirrah! Hor. Gruccione, mum! —[Coming forward.]—God save you, signior Gremio!

Gru. And you are well met, signior Hortensio. Trew you, whither I am going!—To Baptista Minola. I promise'd to inquire carefully About a master for the fair Bianca: And, by good fortune, I have lighted well On this young man; for learning, and behavior. Fit for her turn; well read in poetry, And other books,—good ones, I warrant ye. Hor. 'Tis well; and I have met a gentleman Hath promised me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress: So shall I no whit be behind in duty To fair Bianca, so belov'd of me. Gru. Belov'd of me, and that my deeds shall prove. Gru. And that his bags shall prove. Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love. Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I'll tell you all masters, I care not how many. Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking, Will undertake to woo curst Katharine; Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please. Gru. So said, so done, is well. Hortensio, have you told him all her faults? Pet. I know, she is an irksome, brawling scold: I'll be all masters, I care not how many. Gru. No, say'st me so, friend? What countryman? Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son: My father dead, my fortune lives for me; And I do hope good days, and long, to see. Gru. O! sir, such a life with such a wife were strange; But if you have a stomach, to't o' God's name: You shall have me assisting you in all, But will you woo this wild cat? Pet. Will I live? Gru. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her.

At any hand," I. e., at any rate.—Present.—"Trow you," I. e., think you.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent? Think you, a little din can daunt mine ears? Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds, Rage like an angry bear, chafed with sweat? Have I not heard great ordnance in the field, And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang? And do you tell me of a woman's tongue, That gives not half so great a blow to hear, As will a whirlwind in a farmer's fire? Tush! tush! fear boys with bugbears.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong your—
To make a bondmaid, and a slave of me: [self
That I disdain; but for these other 1 yards,
Unbind my hands, I'll put them off myself,
Yes, all my raiment, to my Petticoat;
Or what you will command me I'll do,
So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell Whom thou lovest best: see thou dispose not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face
Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thou liest. Isn't it Hortensio?
Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,
I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O! then, belike, you fancy riches more:
You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?
Nay then, you jest; and now I well perceive,
You have but jested with me all this while.
I pray thee, sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be just, then all the rest was so.

[Strikes her.]

Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?

Bianca, stand aside:—poor girl! she weeps.—
Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her.—
For shame, thou alluring of a devilish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee? When did she cross thee with a bitter word?

Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be reveng'd.

Bap. [Holding her.] What! in my sight!—Bianca, get thee in. [Exit Bianca.]

Kath. What! will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see,
She is your treasure, she must have a husband;
I may have welcome 'mongst the rest that you, and free access and favor as the rest: And, toward the education of your daughters, I here bestow a simple instrument, And this small packet of Greek and Latin books: If you accept them, then their worth is great. Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whence, I pray? Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio? Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report I know him well. You are very welcome, sir. — Take you [To Hor.] the lute, and you [To Luc.] the set of books; You shall go see your pupils presently. Holla, within! — Enter a Servant. Sirrah, lead these gentlemen To my daughters; and tell them both, These are their tutors: bid them use them well. [Exeunt, with Hortensio, Lucentio, and Bianello.]

We will go walk a little in the orchard, And then to dinner. You are passing welcome, And so I pray you all to think yourselves. Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, And every day I cannot come to woo. You knew my father well, and in him, me, Left solely heir to all his lands and goods, Which I have better'd rather than decreas'd: Then, tell me, — if it get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife? Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands, And in possession twenty thousand crowns. Pet. And, for that dowry, I will assure her o of her widowhood, be it that she survive me, In all my lands and lesser whatsoever. Let specialties be therefore drawn between us, That covenants may be kept on either hand. Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd, That is, her love: for that is all in all. Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am as preposterous as she proud-minded; And where two raging fires meet together, They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Though little fire grows great with little wind, Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all; So I to her, and so she yields to me, For I am rough, and not so like a babe. [speed! Bap.] Well may'st thou woo, and happy be thy But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words. Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds, That shake not, though they blow perpetually. — Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken. Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale? Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale. Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician? Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier: Iron may hold with her, but never lutes. Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute? Hor. Why no, for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her she mistook her 4 feet, And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. When, with a most impotent, devilish spirit, "Frets, call you these?" quoth she: "I'll fame with them!" And with that word she struck me on the head, And through the instrument my pate made way; And there I stood amazed for awhile, As on a pillow looking through the lute, While she did call me rascal fiddler, And twangling Jack, with twenty such vile terms, As she had studied to misuse me so. Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench! I love her ten times more than ever I did: O, how I long to have some chat with her! Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discomfited: Proceed in practice with my younger daughter; She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns.— Signior Petruchio, will you go with us, Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you? Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here, [sto. [Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, and Horten- And woo her with some spirit when she comes, Say, that she rail; why, then I'll tell her plain, She sings as sweetly as a nightingale: Say, that she frown; I'll say, she looks as clear As morning roses newly wash'd with dew: Say, she be mute, and not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility, And say, she uttereth piercing eloquence: If she do bid me peck her, I'll give her thanks, As though she bid me stay her by a week: If she deny to we'd, I'll crave the day When I shall ask the bans, and when be married.— But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak. — Enter Katharina. Good morrow, Kate, for that's your name, I hear. Kath. Well have you heard, but something 'hard of hearing:

They call me Katharine that do talk of me. Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate, And homely Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst; But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom; Kate of Kate-Hall, my super-daunty Kate. For dainties are all cates: and therefore, Kate, Take this of me, Kate of my consolation:— Hearing thy mildness prais'd in every town, Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sound'd, Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs, Myself am mov'd to woe thee for my wife. Kath. Mov'd! in good time: let him that mov'd you ither, Remove you hence. I knew you at the first, You were a moveable. Pet. Why, what's a moveable? Kath. A joint-stool. Pet. Thou hast hit it: come, sit on me. Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you. Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you. Kath. No such jade to bear you, if you me mean. Pet. Ah! good Kate! I will not burden thee; For, knowing thee to be but young and light,— Kath. Too light for such a swain as you to catch, And yet as heavy as my weight should be. Pet. Should be? should buzz. Kath. We'll tam, and like a buzzard. Pet. O, slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee? Kath. Ay, for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard. Pet. Come, come, you wisp; 'tis faith, you are too angry. Kath. If I be wispish, best beware my sting. Pet. My remedy is, then, to pluck it out. Kath. Ay, if the fool could find it out where it lies. Pet. Who knows not where a wisp does wear his In his tail. [sting? Kath. In his tongue. Pet. Whose tongue? Kath. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.

*Garden.—On.—Special rights.—Frets are the points at which a string is to be stopped.

*Horard and hard were anciently pronounced alike.
Scene 1. Taming of the Shrew.

Pet. What! with my tongue in your tail? nay, Good Kate, I am a gentleman. [Come again: Kat."till I'll try. [Striking his chin. Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again. Kath. So may you lose your arms, If you strike me you are no gentleman, And if no gentleman, why, then no arms. Pet. A herald, Kate? O! put me in thy books. Kath. What is thy crest? a cockcomb? [sour. Pet. A comely cock, so Kate will be my hen. Kath. No cock of mine; you crow too like a crow. [so sour. Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look Kath. It is my fashion when I see a crab. [sour. Pet. Why, here's no crab, and therefore look not Kath. There is, there is. Pet. Then show it me. Kath. Had I a glass, I would. Pet. What, you mean my face? Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one. Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you. Kath. Yet you are wither'd. Pet. 'Tis with cares. Kath. I care not. Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth, you 'scape not so. [Holding her. Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry: let me go. Pet. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle. 'Twas told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen, And now I find report a very liar; For thou art pleasant, gossamery, passing courteous, And slow in speech, yet swift as springtime flowers. Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance, Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will; Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk; But thou with mildness entertain'st thy woovers, With gentle conference, soft and affable. Why does the world report that Kate doth limp? O! slanderous world! Kate, like the hazel-twigs, Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. O! let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt. Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st command. Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove, As Kate this chamber with her pricuy gait? O! be thou Dian, and let her be Kate, And these let Kate this chaste, and Dian sportful. Kath. Where did you learn all this jocose speech? Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit. Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son. Pet. Am I not wise? Kath. Yes; keep you warm. Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed. And therefore, setting all this chat aside, Thus in plain terms—your father hath consented That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on, And, will you, nill you, I will marry you. Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn; For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty, Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well, Thou must be married to no man but me: For I am he, am born to tame you, Kate, And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate Conformable, as other household Kates. Here comes your father: never make denial; I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine! in your dunce? That I'll try. Kath. Call you me, daughter? now, I promise you, You have show'd a tender fatherly regard, To wish me wed to one half lunatic; A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack, That thinks with oaths to face the matter out. Pet. Father, 'tis thus:—yourself and all the world, That talk'd of her, have talk'd'amiss of her. Kath. But, sir, if it be for policy, for me? For she's not froward, but modest as the dove; She is not hot, but temperate as the moon; For patience she will prove a second Griselle, And Roman Lucrece for her chastity; And to conclude,—we have 'greed so well together, That upon Sunday is the wedding-day. Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first.

Grc. Hark, Petruchio: she says, she'll see thee hang'd first.

Tra. Is this yourspeeding? nay then, good night one pact.

Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for my— If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you? [self: 'Tis bargain'd twixt us twain, being alone, That she shall still be in her father's company. I tell you, 'tis incredible to believe How much she loves me. O, the kindest Kate! She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath, That in a twink she won me to her love. O! you are nobles: 'tis a world to see, How tame, when men and women are alone, A peacock wretch can make the curstest show.— Give me thy hand, Kate: I will unto Venice, To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day.— Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests: I will be sure! my Katharine shall be fine. Bap. I know not what to say; but give me your hand's God send you joy! Petruchio, 'tis a match. Grc. Tra. Amen, say we: we will be witnesses. Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu. I will to Venice; Sunday comes apace.

We will have rings, and things, and fine array; And, kiss me Kate, we will be married o' Sunday. [Exit Petruchio and Katharina, severally. Grc. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly? Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's And venture madly on a despente mat. [part. Tra. 'Twas a commodity h'fretting by you: 'Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas. Bap. The gain I seek is quiet in the match. Grc. No doubt but he hath got a quick catch. But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter. Now is the day we long have looked for: I am your neighbor, and was suitor first. Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess. Grc. Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as L. Tra. Grey-heard, thy love doth freeze. Grc. But thine doth fry. Skipper, stand back: 'tis age, that nourisheth. Tra. But youth, in ladies' eyes, that flourisheth. Bap. Content you, gentlemen: I'll compound this strife: 'Tis deeds must win the prize; and he, of both, That can assure my daughter greatest dower, Shall have my Bianca's love.— Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her?}

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista’s House.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear: you grow too forward, sir. Have you so soon forgot the entertainment Her sister Katharine welcom’d you withal?

Hor. ‘Tut, wrangling pedant! I avouch, this is The patroness of heavenly harmony:

Then, give me leave to have prerogative;

And when in music we have spent an hour, Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far To know the cause he was ordained! Was it not to refresh the mind of man, After his studies, or his usual pain?

Then, give me leave to read philosophy, And while I pause serve in your harmony.

Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these braves of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong, To strive for that which resteth in my choice. I am no breaching scholar in the schools; I’ll not be tied to hours, nor ‘pointed times, But learn my lessons as I please myself.

And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down:—

Take you your instrument, play you the whites; His lecture will be done, ere you have tun’d.

Hor. You’ll leave his lecture when I am in tune? [Hor. retires.

Luc. That will be never:—tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Here, madam:—

Hoc igitur Simois; igitur Sicia tellus;
Hic steterat Priami regia célia sents.
Bian. Construe them.

Luc. Hoc can, why music was ordinance:—

Hic steterat, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing,—

Priami, is my man Tranio, regia, bearing my port,— célia sents, that we might beguile the old pantaloons.

[tune.

Hor. [Returning.] Madam, my instrument’s in Bion. Let’s hear.—

[Hortensio plays.

O fa! the trobble jars.

Luc. Split in the hole, man, and tune again.

Bian. Now let me see if I can construe it: Hoc igitur Simois, I know you not;—igitur Sicia tellus, I trust you not;—Hic steterat Priami, take heed he hear us not;—regia, presume not;—célia sents, despair not.

Hor. Madam, ‘tis now in tune.

Luc. All but the base.

Hor. The base is right; ‘tis the base knave that How fiery and forward our pedant is! [jars. Now, for my life, the knave doth court my love:

Luc. In time I may believe, yet I mistrust. [Aside. Bion. Most I trust it not; for, sure, Jeacides Was Ajax, call’d so from his grandfather. [you, Bion. I must believe my master; else, I promise I should be arguing still upon that doubt: But let it rest.—Now, Licio, to you.—

Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray, That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Hor. [To Lucentio.] You may go walk, and give

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? [Aside.] Well, I must wait, and watch within; for, but I be deceiv'd, our fine musician growth amorous.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument, to learn the order of my fingering, I must begin with rudiments of art; to teach you gamut in a briefer sort, more pleasant, pithy, and effectual, than hath been taught by any of my trade: and there it is in writing fairly drawn.

Bion. Why, I am past my gamut long ago.

Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio. [Accord, Bion. [Reads.] Gamut, I am, the ground of all. A re, to plente Hortensio's passion; B mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord, C flat, that loves with all affection: D sol re, one chaff, two notes have I: E la mi, show pity, or I die.

Call you this gamut? tut! Like it not: Old fashions please me best; I am not so nice, to change true rules for new inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your book, and help to dress your sister's chamber up: books, You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day. Bion. I will, sir; but sweet masters, both: I must be gone. [Exit Bianca and Servant.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharina, Bianca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the 'pointed day That Katharine and Petruchio should be married, and yet we hear not of our son-in-law. What will be said! what mockery will it be, To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage? What says Lucentio to this shame of ours? [fo'rc'd Kath. No shame but mine: I must, forsooth, be To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart, Unto a mad-brain'd Trudeley, full of 'spleen; Who wou'd in haste, and means to wed at leisure. I told you, I, he was a frantic fool, Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behavior; And to be noted for a merry man, He'll woo a thousand, 'point the day of marriage, Make friends, invite, yes, and proclaim the ban's; Yet never means to wed where he hath wo'd. Now must the world point at poor Katharine, And say,—"Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife, If it would please him come and marry her." Tra. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptista too. Upon my life, Petruchio means but well, Whatever fortune stays him from his word: Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise; Though he be merry, yet wil'd he's honest. Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him thoug'ht!

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep, Unless, D ecoy; but,—"Rudeley," I, e., rude, turbulent fellow.—Caprice; inconsistency.

For such an injury would vex a very saint, Much more a shrew of thy impatiant humor.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Master, master! two news, and such old news as you never heard of!

Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news to hear of Petruchio's coming?

Bap. Is he come?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am, and sees you Tra. But, say, what is thine old news?

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming, in a new hat, and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned; a pair of boots that have been candleнецas, one buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword tro'd out of the town armory, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points: his horse thumped with an old nothy saddle, and stirrups of no kindred: besides, possessed with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine; troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of wind-puffs, specked with the yellow, post cure of the bives, stark spoiled with the stagers, begsnawn with the bots; swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten; me'er-legged before, and with a half-checked bit, and a head stall of sheep's-leather; which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots: once given six times piec'd, and a woman's crapper of velvet, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in 'suds, and here and there pieced with packthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir! his lackey, for all the world caprisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-sole on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat, and the amours orauty fancies prick'd in for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy, or a gentleman's lackey. [ion; Tra. 'Tis some odd humor pricks him to this fashion: Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparel'd.

Bap. Why, that's all one.

Bion. Nay, by St. Jamy, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man Is more than one, And yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio, strangely appareled.

Tra. Not so well apparell'd, As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it? much better, I should rush in thus.

Enter Luciana and Bianca.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT III.

But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?—
How does my father?—Gentiles, methinks you frown:
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

Bap. Why, sir, you know, this is your wedding-day:
First were we sad, fearing you would not come;
Now sadder, that you come so unprovided.
Fie! doff this habit, shame to your estate,
An eye-sore to our solemn festival.

Tra. And tell us why to censor me.

I'll tell you, sir, Lucentio: when the priest
Should ask,—if Katharine should be his wife,
'Ay, by gogs-wooms,' quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all-said, the priest let fall the book,
And, as he stooped again to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest:
"Now take them up," quoth he, "if any list."

Tra. What said the wench when he arose again?

Gre. Trembled and shook; for, why, he stamp'd,
And, with a virile motion, to censer me.
And swore, but after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine:—"A health," quoth he; as if
He had been abroad, carousing to his mates,
After a storm:—quaff'd off the muscadel,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,
But that his beard grew thin and hungry,
And seem'd to ask him kips as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck,
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack,
That, at the parting, all the church did echo;
And I, seeing this, came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming:
Such a mad marriage never was before.
Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play.

[Music.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista,
Hortensio, Grumio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your
I know, you think to dine with me to-day, [pains.
And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheer;
But, so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I meant to take my leave.

Bap. I'll tell you, sir, that thus you will away to-night?

Pet. I must away to-day, before night come.
Make it no wonder: if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay—
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me,
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner,

Pet. It may not be.

Gre. Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kath. Let me entreat you.

Pet. I am content.

Kath. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Pet. Grumio, my horse!

Gre. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten the horses.

Kath. How, then,
Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day:
No, nor to-morrow, till I please myself.
The door is open, sir, there lies your way:
You may be jogging whiles your boots are green;
For me, I'll not be gone, till I please myself.—
'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Gre. O, Kate! content thee: pr'ythee, be not an Kath. I will be angry. What hast thou to do?—
Father, be quiet; he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner,
I see, a woman may be made a fool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.
Obey the bride, you that attend on her:
SCENE I. TAMING OF THE SHREW. 225

Go to the feast, revel and *domineer, Carouse full measure to her maidenhead, Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves. But for my bonny Kate, she must with me. Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret; I will be master of what is mine own. She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house, My household-stuff, my meat, my drink, My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing: And here she stands; touch her whoever dare: I'll bring mine action on the proudest he That stops my way in Padua.—Grumio, Draw forth thy weapon; we're beset with thieves: Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man.— [Kate: Fear not, sweet woman; they shall not touch thee, I'll buckler thee against a million.]

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Grumio.]

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Gre. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like.

Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister? Bisc. This being such herself, she's most madd: Grumio. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated. Bap. Neighbors and friends, though bride and bridgroom wants For to supply the places at the table, You know, there wants no *junkets at the feast.— Lucentio, you shall supply the bridgroom's place, And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bridge it? Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen; let's go. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. Tie, tie, on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foole ways! Was ever man so better? Was ever sheep so trayed? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now, were not I a little pot, and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me; but, I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself, for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holla, how! [Curts]

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that, calls so coldly? Gru. A piece of ice: if thou doubt it, thou may'st slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis. Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio? Gru. O! ay, Curtis, ny; and therefore fire, fire: cast on no water.

Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported? Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost; but, thou know'st, winter turns man, woman, and beast, for it hath tuned my old master, and my new mistress, and I myself, fellow Curtis.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast. Gru. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

Curt. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and, therefore, fire. Do thy duty, and have thy duty, for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death, sir. Curt. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news?

Curt. Come, you are so full of conceyatching. Gru. Why, therefore, fire: for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, coakews swept; the servingmen in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without, the carps laid, and every thing in order?

Curt. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news! Gru. First, know, my horse is tied; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How?

Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's ha't, good Grumio. Gru. Lend thine ear.

Curt. Here.

Gru. That I have told thee. [Striking him. Curt. This 'tis to feel a tale, not to hear a tale. Gru. And therefore 'tis called, a sensible tale; and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress.—

Curt. Both of one horse?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Curt. Why, a horse.

Gru. Tell thou the tale:—but had'st thou not crossed me, thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou should'st have heard, in how miry a place; how she was *bemoiled, how he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat me because her horse stumbled; how she waited through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore; how she prayed, that never prayed before; how I cried; how the horses ran away; how her bridle was burst; how I lost my crupper:—with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Curt. By this reckoning he is more shrew than she. Gru. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall end, when he comes home. But what talk I of this?—Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugaran, and the rest: let their hands be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an *indifferent knot; let them custom with their left legs, and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands, Are they all ready?

Curt. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Curt. Do you hear? ho! you must meet my master, to countenance my mistress.

Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that? Gru. Thou, it seems, that calleth for company to countenance her.

* Bluster; swagger.— * Delicacies.— * Bewrayed; dirty.

4 These words are the beginning of an old round.—Reprinted.— Broken.— "Of an indifferent knot," i.e., tolerably well knit.
What's this? mutton?
I Serv. Ay.
Who brought it?
I Serv.
Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat.
What dogs are these!—Where is the rash cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all.
[Throws the meat, &c. &c. &c. all about you heedless jolthead, and unmanner'd slaves!
What! do you grumble? I'll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet:
The meat was well, if you were so contented.
Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,
And I expressly am forbid to touch it.
For it engenders choler, planteth anger:
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are cholerick,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow 't shall be mended,
And for this night we'll fast for company.
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.
[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Curtis.
Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like?
Peter. He kills her in her own humor.
Re-enter Curtis.
Gru. Where is he?
Curt. In her chamber,
Making a sermon of continency to her;
And rails, and swear's, and rates, that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak,
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither.
[Exeunt, running.
Re-enter Petruchio.
Pet. Thus have I politicly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her, as we watch those kites,
That 'scape, and beat, and will not be c dent.
She ate no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not:
As with the meat, some undeserved fault
I'll find about the making of the bed,
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:
Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night:
And, if she chance to nod, I'll rail, and brawl,
And with the chumor keep her still awake.
This is the way to kill a wife with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humor.
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak: 'tis charity to shew.
[Exit.
Enter Tranio and Hortensio.
Tran. Is't possible, friend Lucio, that mistress
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio?
Bianca  I tell you, sir, she bears me fair in hand.
Hort. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said,
Stand by, and mark the manner of his teaching.
[They stand aside.
* * *
"Man my haggard," i. e., tame my hawk.—Flatter.
* Intend is used for pretend.
Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read?
Bian. What, master, read you? I first resolve me.

Luc. I read that I profess, the Art to Love. [that.
Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art!
Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.
[They retire.

Hor. [Coming forward.] Quick professors, marry!
Now, tell me, I pray,
You that durst swear that your mistress Bianca
Lov'd none in the world so well as Lucentio.

Tra. O, despiteful love! unconsummated lady!—
I tell thee, Licio, this is wonderful.

Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Licio,
Nor a musician, as I seem to be,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one, as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a callion.

Know, sir, that I am call'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca;
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness,
I will with you, if you be so contented,
Forswear Bianca and her love for ever. [centio,

Hor. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio, is this my hand, and here I firmly vow
Never to woo her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favors
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her, though she entreat.

Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth court him.

Hor. Would all the world, but he, had quite for-sworn her!
For me, that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard.
And so farewell, signior Lucentio.—

Kindness in women! not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love:—and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio.—Lucentio and Bianca advance.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace,
As longeth to a lover's blessed case!

Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love,
And have forsworn you, with Hortensio.
[me?
Bian. Tra. Bianc. I pray you, but have you both forsworn

Tra. Mistress, we have.

Luc. Then we are rid of Licio.

Tra. I'faith, he'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be wo'd and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he'll take her.

Bian. He says so, Trajico.

Tra. 'Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master;
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,
To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master! I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-wearied; but at last I spied
An ancient ombler coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello?

Bian. Master, a mercantilist, or a pedant,

I know not what; but formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio,
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincentio.

Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tra. And you, sir; you are welcome.

Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two;

But then up farther, and as far as Rome,
And so to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua, sir!—marry, God forbid!

And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua to come to Padua. Know you not the cause?

Your ships are stay'd at Venice; and the duke,
For private quarrel 2twixt your duke and him,
Hath publish'd and proclaimed it openly.

Ped. Abs, sir! it is worse for me than so;

For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy
This will I do, and this I will advise you.—

First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been;

Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them, know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:

A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. [Aside.] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity,
This favor will I do for his sake,
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are so like to Vincentio.
His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd.

Look, that you take upon you as you should:
You understand me, sir—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city.
If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O! sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.
This, by the way, I let you understand:
My father is here look'd for every day,
To pass assurance of a dowry in marriage.

'Twixt me and one Baptist'a's daughter here:
In all these circumstances I'll instruct you.

Go with me, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Petruchio's House.

Enter Katharina and Gremio.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not, for my life.

Kath. Then more my wrong, the more his spite is:
What did he marry me to furnish me?

Pears. Beggars, that come unto my father's door,

* "To pass assurance," I.e., to agree upon a settlement.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT IV.

Upon entreaty, have a present alms; If not, elsewhere they meet with charity: But, I, who never knew how to entreat, Nor never needed that I should entreat, Am starved for meat, giddily for lack of sleep; With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed. And that which spitest me more than all these wants, He does it under name of perfect love; As who should say, if I should sleep, or eat, 'Twere deadly sickness, or else present death. I pr'ythee go, and get me some repast; I care not what, so it be wholesome food. Gru. What say you to a neat's foot? Kath. 'Tis passing good: I pr'ythee let me have it. Gru. I fear, it is too cholemic a meat. How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd? Kath. I like it well: good Gruimio, fetch it me. Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, 'tis cholemic. What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard? Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon. Kath. Why, then, the beef, and let the mustard rest. Gru. Nay, 1 that I will not: you shall have the Or else you get no beef of Gruimio. [mustard, Kath. Then both, or one, or anything thou wilt. Gru. Why then, the mustard without the beef. Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave. [Beats him. That feed'st me with the very name of meat. Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you, That triumph thus upon my misery! Go; get thee gone, I say. Enter Petruchio with a dish of meat, and Hortensio. Pet. How fares my Kate? What, swathing, all Hor. Mistress, what cheer! [Stern. Kath. Faith, as cold as can be. Pet. Pluck up thy spirits; look cheerfully upon me. Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am, To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee: [Sets the dish on a table. I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks. What! not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not, And all my pains is sorted to no b proof.— Here, take away this dish. Kath. I pray you, let it stand. Pet. The poorest service is repair'd with thanks, And so shall mine, before you touch the meat. Kath. I thank you, sir. Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame. Come, mistress Kate, I'll bear you company. Pet. [Aside.] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st me. [to her.] Much good do it unto thy gentle heart! Kate, eat auspice. —An now, my honey love, Will we return unto thy father's house, And revel it as bravely as the best, With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings, With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things; With scarfs, and fans, and double change of 8 bravery, Am steady, gentle, and all this knavery. What! hast thou din'd? —The tailor stays thy leisure, To deck thy body with his 8 ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments; Enter Holabender.

Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir?

Hob. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak. Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringer; A velvet dish;—fie, fie! 'tis lewd and filthy. Why, 'tis a cockle or a walnut shell, A knock, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap; Away with it! come, let me have a bigger. Kath. I'll have no bigger: this doth fit the time, And gentlewomen wear such caps as these. Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too; And not till then.

Hor. [Aside.] That will not be in haste. Kath. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak, And speak I will, I am no child, nor bee: Your better's had endurance say my mind, And, if you cannot, best you stop your ears. My tongue will tell the anger of my heart, Or else my heart, concealing it, will break: And, rather than it shall, I will be free, Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why, thou say'st true: it is a paltry cap, A custard, a coffer, a bubble, a silkken pie. I love thee well, in that thou lik'st it not.

Kath. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap, And it will have, or I will have none. [see't Pet. Thy gown? why, ay:—come, tailor, let us O, mercy, God! what masking stuff is here? What's this? a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon: What's this? a down, car'd like an apple-tart? Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash, Like to a 'censer in a barber's shop.— Why, what, o devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this? Hor. [Aside.] I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

Tal. You bid me make it orderly and well, According to the fashion, and the time. Pet. Marry, and I did; but if you forget, I remember'd, I did not bid you mar it to the time, Go, hop me over every kennel home, For you shall hop without my custom, sir. I'll none of it: hence! make your best of it. Kath. I never saw a better-fashion'd gown, More quaint, more pleasing, more commendable. Before, a mere woman, to make a puppet of me. [thee. Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of Tal. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her. Pet. O, monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou Thou thimble, [thread. Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail! Thou flea, thou knut, thou winter cricket thou— Bud'd I mine own house with a skin of thread? Away! thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant, Or I shall so be mete thee with thy yard, As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou livest. I tell thee, I, that thou hast mar'd her gown. Tal. Your worship is deceiv'd: the gown is made Just as my master bid direction. Gruimio gave order how it should be done. Gru. I gave no order; I gave him the stuff. Tal. But how did you desire it should be made? Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread. Tal. But did you not request to have it cut? Gru. Thou hast faced many things. Tal. I have. Gru. Face not me: thou hast brav'd many men; brave not me: I will neither be faced nor brav'd.

* Coffin was a culinary term for the raised crust of a pie or cake. * Censer was a clashing-dish, or brazier, with a pierced convoy cover.—" If you be remember'd, i.e., if you recollect. * Next; trim; spruce. — Mesmerize.— Faced.
SCENE IV. TAMING OF THE SHREW.

I say unto thee, — I bid thy master cut out the gown; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest.

Tat. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

Gru. The note lies in a threat, if he say I said so.

Tat. "Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown."

Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread: I said, a gown.

Tat. "With a small compassed cape."

Gru. I confess the cape.

Tat. "With a trunk sleeve."

Gru. I confess two sleeves.

Tat. "The sleeves curiously cut."

Pet. Ay, there's the villainy.

Gru. Error i'the bill, sir; error i'the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sewed up again; and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tat. This is true, that I say: an I had thee in place where, thou shouldst know it.

Gru. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, give me thy mate-yard, and spare not me.

Hor. God-a-mercy, Gramio; then he shall have no odds.

Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.

Gru. You are i'the right, sir: 'tis for my mistress.

Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master's use.

Gru. Villain, not for thy life! Take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use?

Pet. Why, sir, what's your conceit in that?

Gru. O, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think for.

Thee and mistress' gown to his master's use?

O, fie, fie, fie!

Pet. [Aside.] Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid.

Go take it hence; be gone, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow: Take no unkindness of his hasty words.

Away, I say; commend me to thy master. [Exeunt Tailor and Haberdasher.

Pet. Well, come, my Kate; we will unto your Even in these honest men's habiliments. [father's, Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor; For 'tis the mind that makes the body rich; And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds, So honor peercyth in the meanest habitat. What, is the day more precious than the lark, Because his feathers are more beautiful? Or is the adder better than the eden, Because his painted skin contents the eye? O! no, good Kate; neither art thou the worse For this poor furniture, and mean array. If thou account'st it shame, lay it on me; And therefore frolie: we will hence forthwith, To fetch and sport us at thy father's house. — Go, call my men, and let us straight to him; And bring our horses unto Long-lane end, There will we mount, and thither walk on foot.—

Let's see; I think, 'tis now some seven o'clock, And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kath. I dare assure you, sir, 'tis almost two, And twilights are supper time, ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seven, ere I go to horse.

Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do, You are still crossing it—Sir, let's alone: I will not go to-day; and ere I do, It shall be what o'clock I say it is.

—"A small compassed cape" is a round cape.—A quibble is here intended between a written bill and the escopas of a foot-soldier.
My boy shall fetch the scriever presently.

The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

_Bap._ It likes me well:—Cambio, lie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;
And, if you will, tell what hath happened:
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

_Luc._ I pray the gods she may with all my heart.

_Tra._ Daily not with the gods, but get thee gone.
Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way?
Welcome: one mess is like to be your cheer.
Come, sir; we will better it in Pisa.

_Bap._ I follow you.

_[Exeunt Tranio, Petulant, and Baptista._
_Bion._ Cambio!

_Luc._ What say'st thou, Biondello?

_Bion._ You saw my master wink and laugh upon you?

_Luc._ Biondello, what of that?

_Bion._ 'Faith nothing; but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

_Luc._ I pray thee, moralize them.

_Bion._ Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.

_Luc._ And what of him?

_Bion._ His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.

_Luc._ And then?

_Bion._ The old priest at St. Luke's church is at your command at all hours.

_Luc._ And what of all this?

_Bion._ I cannot tell; except, whilst they are bussed about a counterfeit assurance, take you assurance of her, _cum privilegio ad imprimentum solam_.
To the church—I take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses.

If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

_Luc._ Hear'st thou, Biondello?

_Bion._ I cannotarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for pursley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to St. Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you,
with the appendix.

_[Exeunt._

_Luc._ I may, and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her.
_[Exeunt._

SCENE V.—A public Road.

_Enter Petruchio, Katharina, and Hortensio._

_Pet._ Come on, o' God's name: once more toward our father's.

_Good lord! how bright and goodly shines the moon._

_Kath._ The moon! the sun! it is not moonlight now.

_Pet._ I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.

_Kath._ I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.

_Pet._ Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself;
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list,
Or ere I journey to your father's house.—
Go on, and fetch our horses back again.—

_Evermore cross'd, and cross'd; nothing but cross'd._

_Hor._ Say as he says, or we shall never go.

_Kath._ Forward, I pray, since we have come so far,
And be it moon, or sun, or what you please.
An if you please to call it a rush candle,

"Moral," I, e., secret purpose. —The words of the old exclusive privilege for printing a book.

_Henceforth, I vow, it shall be so for me._

_Pet._ I say, it is the moon.

_Kath._ I know, it is the moon.

_Pet._ Nay, then you lie: it is the blessed sun.

_Kath._ Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun;
But sun it is not, when you say it is not,
And the moon changes, even as your mind.

What you will have it so, nay, even that it is;
And so it shall be.

_Hor._ Petruchio, go thy ways: the field is won.

_Pet._ Well, forward, forward! thus the bowl should
And not unluckily against the bias.—

_[Run, but soft! what company is coming here?_

_Enter Vincentio, in a travelling dress._

_[To Vincentio._ Good-morrow, gentle mistress:
where away?—

_Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too._

_Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman?

_Such war of white and red within her cheeks!

_What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty._

_As those two eyes become that heavenly face?—

_Fair lovely maid, upon the more good day to thee._

_Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake._

_Hor._ 'A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him._

_[sweet._

_Kath._ Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and Whiter away, or where is thy abode?

_Happy the parents of so fair a child;

_Happier the man, whom so many stars
Alot for his lovely bed-fellow!_

_[mad._

_Pet._ Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not
This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

_Kath._ Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,
That every thing I look on seemeth green.

Now I perceive thou art a reverend father;
_Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking._

_Pet._ Do, good old grandsire; and, withal, make known

_Which way thou travellest: if along with us;_

_We shall be joyful of thy company._

_Vin._ Fair sir, and you my merry mistress,

_That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me._

_Well, and so, is called Vincentio;_

_And bound I am to Padua, there to visit._

_A son of mine, which long I have not seen._

_Pet._ What is his name?

_Vin._

_Lucentio, gentle sir._

_Pet._ Happily met; the happier for thy son._

_And now by law, as well as reverend age,
M I may entitle thee—my loving father;

_The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this lath married. Wonder not,
Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Beside, so qualified as may becometh

_The spouse of any noble gentleman._

_Let me embrace with old Vincentio;

And wander we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous._

_Vin._ But is this true? or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
_Upon the company you overtake?_

_Hor._ I do assure thee, father, so it is.

_Pet._ Come, go along, and see the truth hereof;

_For our first Merriment hath made thee jealous._

_[Exeunt Petruichio, Katharina, and Vincentio._

_Hor._ Well, Petruchio, this has put me in heart.

_Have to my widow; and if she be froward,_

_Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward._

_[Exeunt._
ACT V.

Enter on one side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca; Gremio walking on the other side.

Bian. Softly and swiftly, sir, for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home: therefore, leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back; and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.

Grem. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door; this is Lucentio's house: My father's heirs more toward the market place; Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go. I think I shall command your welcome here, And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.

[Knocks.

Gre. They're busy within; you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What's he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What, if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself: he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua.—Do you hear, sir? to leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest: his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman? [To Vincentio.] why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain. I believe, 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: God send 'em good shopping!—But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio! now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

[Lo.

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What, have you forgotten me?

Bion. Forget you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir: see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. In'st so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.

Bion. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me, now.

[Exit.

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Baptista! [Exit, from the window.

Pet. Pr'ythee, Kate, let's stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.

Re-enter Pedant, below: Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are ye, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? nay, what are you, sir?— O, immortal Gods! O, base villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a c capotain hat!—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what 6 terms it you if I wear pelri and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O, villain! he is a sailmaker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir: you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine own son, and heir to the lands of me, signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O! he hath murdered his master.—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name.—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

Enter one, with an Officer.

Carry this mad knave to the jail.—Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the jail!

Gre. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio. I say, he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, signior Baptista, lest you be e cony caught in this business. I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard! to the jail with him! Vin. Thus strangers may be handled and abused —O, monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio, and Bianca.

Bion. O, we are spoiled! and yonder he is: deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.

Vin. Lives my sweet son?

[Binodello, Tranio, and Pedant run out.

Bian. Pardon, dear father. [Kneeling.

Bap. How hast thou offended?— Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, Right son to the right Vincentio; That have by marriage made thy daughter mine, While counterfeit 8 supposes bear'd thin 9 eyes. Gre. Here's that packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain, Tranio, That faic'd and braved me in this matter so? Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

* A "capotain hat" was a sugar-loaf or conical hat. — 8 Concerns.— 9 Deceived; cheated. — 5 Pretenders.— 6 Eyes. — 7 Plotting.
Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Luciento.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenance in the town;
And happily I have arrived at the last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio did, myself encon'd him to;
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Fin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you: go to;
but I will in, to be revenged for this villany. [Exit.

Bap. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery.
[Exit.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.
[Exeunt Luc. and Bian.

Gre. My cake is 8-dough; but I'll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit.

PETRUCHIO AND KATHARINA advance.

Kath. Howse, let's, to see the end of this
Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will, [ado.
Kath. What, in the midst of the street?
Pet. What! art thou ashamed of me?
Kath. No, sir, God forbid; but ashamed to kiss.
Pet. Why, then let's home again.—Come, sirrah, let's away. [love, stay.
Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pay thee,
Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate!
Better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in LECENTO'S House.

A Banquet set out: Enter BAPTISTA, VINCENTIO, GREMIO, the pedant, LUCENTO, BIANCA, PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, HORTENSIO, and Widow. TRANIO, BIONDELLO, GREMIO, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree:
And time it, when raging war is 3 gone,
To smile at 'scapes and perils overthrown.—
My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome,
While I with self-same kindness welcome thine,—
Brother Petruchio,—sister Katharina,—
And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,
Feast with the best, and welcome to my house:
My 3 banquet is to close our stomachs up,
After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down;
For now we sit to chat, as well as eat. [They sit at table.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!
Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.
Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.
Hor. For both our sakes I would that word was true.
Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
Wid. Then, never trust me, if I be afraid.
Pet. You are very sensible, and yet you miss my
I mean, Hortensio is afraid of you. [sense:
Wid. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.
Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?
Pet. Thus I conceive by him.
Pet. Conceives by me?—How is Hortensio that?
Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.
Pet. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round:—
I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.
Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew,
Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe.
And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.
Wid. Right, I mean you.
Pet. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.
Pet. To her, Kate?
Hor. To her, widow!
Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.
Hor. That's my office.
Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Here's to thee, lady. [Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?—
Gre. Believe me, sir, they but together well.
Bian. Head and butt? an hasty-witted body
Would say, your head and butt were head and horn.
Vin. Ay, mistresse bride, hath that awaken'd you?
Bian. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore, I'll sleep again.
Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have began,
Have of you for a better jest or two.

Bap. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush,
And then pursue me as you draw your bow.—
You are welcome all.

[Exeunt Bianca, Katharina, and Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio;—
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not:
Therefore, a health to all that shot and missed.

Traf. Sir! Luciento slip'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.
Pet. A good 8-swift simile, but something curiush
Traf. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself;
Pet. 'Tis thought, your deer does hold you at a bay.

Luc. I think thee for that 8-gird, good Tranio.
Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?
Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess; and,
As the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it main'd you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,
I think thou hast the veriest shrill of all.
Pet. Tell, I say no: and therefore, for assurance,
Let's each one send unto his 8-several wife,
And he, whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!
I'll venture so much of my hawk, or hound,
But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I.

Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go.

[Exeunt Biondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistresse sends you word,
That she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?

Gre. Ay, and a kind one too:
Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

* "Swift," i.e., quick-witted. — * "Gird," i.e., cut; sarcastic.

* A proverb not yet obsolete.—A "banquet" formerly meant what we now call a desert.
Pet. I hope better.
Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go, and entreat my wife
To come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.
Pet. O ho! entreat her!
Nay, then she must needs come.
Hor. I am afraid, sir,
Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now, where's my wife?
Bion. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand;
She will not come: she bids you come to her.
Pet. Woman and worse: she will not come? O vile!
Intolerable, not to be endured?
Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress; say,
I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio.
Hor. I know her answer.
Pet. What?
Hor. She will not.
Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katharina.

Bap. Now, by my lodifume, here comes Katharina! Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?
Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?
Kath. They sit conferring by the parlor fire.
Pet. Go, fetch them hither: if they deny to come,
Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands.
Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.

[Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.
Hor. And so it is. I wonder what it bodes.
Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life,
An awful rule, and right supremacy!
And, to be short, what not that's sweet and happy.
Bap. Now fair befall thee, good Petruchio!
The wager thou hast won; and I will add
Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns;
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is chang'd, as she had never been.
Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet,
And show more sign of her obedience,
Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca and Widow.

See, where she comes, and brings your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.—
Katharina, that cap of yours becomes you not;
Off with that haberd, throw it under foot.
[Katharina pulls off her cap, and throws it down.
Wid. Lord! let me never have a cause to sigh,
Till I be brought to such a silly pass.
Bian. Fie! what a foolish duty call you this? Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too.
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,
Cost me one hundred crowns since supper-time.
Bian. The more you fee for laying on my duty.
Pet. Katharina, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women
What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.
Wid. Come, come, you're mocking: we will have no telling.
Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.
Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say, she shall—and first begin with her.
Kath. Fie, fie! unskil that threateneth unkind brow,
And dart not scornful glances from these eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:
It blinds thy beauty, as frosts do bite the meads,
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds,
And in so sense is meet, or amiable.
A woman's mind is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeing, thick, bereft of beauty;
And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance; commits his body
To painful labor, both by sea and land,
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience,
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such duty as the subject owes the prince,
Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
And when she's froward, peevish, sulen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a fool contending rebel,
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?—
I am asham'd that women are so simple
To offer war where they should kneel for peace,
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable worms,
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
My heart as great, my reason, hapy, more
To bandy word for word, and frown for frown;
But now I see our lances are but straws,
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,
That seeming most, which we indeed least are.
Then, vail your stomachs, for it is no boast,
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease.
[Exeunt. Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss
Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad, for thou shalt not.
Vin. Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.
Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed.—
We three are married, but you two are sped.
'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
[To Luciento.
And, being a winner, God give you good night.
[Exeunt Petruchio and Kath.
Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast 'tis a curst shrew.
Luc. Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be
'tis so.
[Exeunt.

*Punish.

"Our soft conditions," i.e., the gentle qualities of our minds.—
"Vail your stomachs," i.e., lower your pride.—
"It is to boot," i.e., it is profitable.—
"You two are sped," i.e., the fate of you both is decided against you.—
"To hit the white!" is a phrase borrowed from archery, signifying to hit the centre of the target, which was white. There is also a play upon the name of Bianca, which is white in Italian.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafeu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father. He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam;

The heirs of great fortunes were the king's words.—

Abide.

under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process, but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis!—whose skill, almost as great as his honesty, had it stretched so far would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so—Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly and mourningly. He was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?
SCENE I.

All's Well that Ends Well.

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises: her dispositions she inherits, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity: they are virtues and traitors both. Love them they are the better for their simplicity: she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praisin'. The remembrance of her father never departs from her: Love her then, but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. —No more of this, Helen: go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed; but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that? [father

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram; and succeed thy In manners, as in shape! thy blood, and virtue, Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness Shall stand forth as a fairer work than his first was, but a few, Do wrong to none; to be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use; and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will, That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down, Fall on thy head! — Farewell, my lord;

The negligence'd courtier: good my lord, Advise him. Laf. He cannot want the best That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him! —

Farewell, Bertram. [Exit Countess.

Ber. [To Helena.] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be conformable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father. [Exeunt Bertram and Lafaët.

Hel. O, were that all! — I think not on my father; And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him: my imagination Carries no favor in't but 'by Bertram's, I am undone: there is no living, none, If Bertram be away. It were all one, That I should love a bright particular star, And think to wed it, he is so above me: In his bright radiance and collateral light Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Th' ambition in my love this plagues itself: The hind that would be mated by the lion Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague, To see him every hour; to sit and draw His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls, In my heart's table; heart, too capable Of every line and trick of his sweet favor: But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy Must succour his relics. Who comes here?

Enter Paroles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake, And yet I know him a notorious liar,

Think him a great way fool, 4 solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, where virtue's steele bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. And you, monarch.

Par. No. Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some 5 stain of soldier in you, let me ask you a question: man is enemy to virginity: how may we barricado it against him?

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak. Unfold to us some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up! — Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got, till virginity was lost. That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found: by being ever kept, it is ever lost. 'Tis too cold a companion: away with't.

Hel. I will stand fort a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in't: 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity is to accuse your mothers, which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Virginity breeds mates, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very pining, and so dies with feuling his own stomach. Besides, what's dead, dry, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most uninhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not: you cannot choose but lose by't. Out with't: 5 within two years it will make itself two, which is a greatly increase, and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill; to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying: the longer kept, the less worth: off with't, while 'tis vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old currier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly united, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which 6 wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears: it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a withered pear: it was formerly better; marry, yet, 'tis a withered pear. Will you 6 do any thing with it?

Hel. Not with my virginity yet.

There shall your master have a thousand loves, A mother, and a mistress, and a friend, A phoenix, captain, and an enemy, A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign, A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear:

4 Together.—5 Tincture.—6 Forbidden.—7 Which wear not now;* i. e., which are not now born.

[Exeunt.]
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord dulcet,
Of pretty, fond, adoptive *chrestemons,
That blinking Cupid gossip. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall:—God send him well!—
The court's a learning-place; and he is one—
Par. What one, Pishi?
Hel. That I wish well.—'Tis pity—
Par. What's pity?
Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born,
Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

Enter a Page.

Page. Monsieur Paroles, my lord calls for you.
[Exit Page.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.
Hel. Monsieur Paroles, you were born under a charitable star.
Par. Under Mars, L.
Hel. I especially think, under Mars.
Par. Why under Mars?
Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.
Par. When he was predominant.
Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.
Par. Why think you so?
Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.
Par. That's for advance.
Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety; but the composition that your valor and fear make in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well.
Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends. Get thee a good husband, and use him as he useth thee: so farewell.
[Exit. Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, Whiles we ourselves disprize them. In the heavens,
Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull
Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull.
What power is't which mounts my love so high;
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The mightiest space in nature fortune brings
To join like likes, and kiss like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts to these:
That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose,
What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove
To show her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease—my project may deceive me;
But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me.
[Exit."

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending.

King. The Florentines and *Semoys are by th' ears;
Have fought with equal fortune, and continue
A brave wing.

1 Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.
King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it
A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend
Prefridicates the business, and would seem
To have us make denial.

1 Lord. His love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For amplest credence.
King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes;
Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

2 Lord. It may well serve
A nursery to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here?
[Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Paroles.

1 Lord. It is the count Roussillon, my good lord,
Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st th' father's face;
Frank nature, rather curious than in haste;
Hath well coupled thee; Thy father's moral parts
Mav'lt thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.
Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father, and myself, in friendship
First tried our soldiership. He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciplined of the bravest; he lasted long;
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me
To talk of thy good father. In his youth
He had the wit, which I can well observe
To-day in our young lords; but they may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unsated,
 Ere they can hide their levity in honour:
So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride, or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awak'd them: and his honor,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him
He us'd as creatures of another place,
And bow'd his eminent top to the low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times,
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them new
But goeses backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb:
So in 'approving lives not his epitaph,
As in your royal speech.

King. 'Would I were with him! He would always say,
[Methinks, I hear him now; his plausible words
He scatter'd not in ears, but graven them, to trow there, and to bear,—]"Let me not live,"—
Thus his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe of pastime,
When it was out, "let me not live," quoth he,
"After my fashion lacks oil, to be the snuff
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but new things disdain: whose judgments are

*Romans.—"Hide their levity in honor," i. e., over, cover their gruity judged and decry'd.
*His for—"So is approv'd lives not his epitaph," i. e., the approbation of his worth lives not so much in his epitaph.—"Plausible."
Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies Expire before their fashions."—This he wish'd: I, after him, do after him wish too, Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my hive, To give some laborers room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir; They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first. King. I fill a place, I know't.—How long is't, count, Since the physician at your father's died? He was much fam'd. Count. Some six months since, my lord. King. If he were living, I would try him yet:—Lend me an arm:—the rest have worn me out With several applications: nature and sickness Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count; My son's no dearer.

Scene III.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear: what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your countenance, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavors; for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you, I do not all believe: 'tis my showness, that I do not for I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam; 'tis not so well, that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship's good-will to go to the world, Isabel, the woman, and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Isabel's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage; and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body, for they say, 'Barns are blessings.'

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh, and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You are shallow, madam; 'tis great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am a- weary of. He, that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop: if I be *a That is, who make no other use of their faculties than to invent new modes of dress. — "To even your content," i.e., to set up to your desires. — "To go to the world," that is, to be married. — "Children. — "Ploughs.

his cuckold, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend;

 Ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend.

If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poyssam the papist, howsome'er their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may joll horns together, like any deer in the herd.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat, Which men full true shall find; Your marriage comes by destiny, Your cuckold sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir: I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you? of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell me your gentlewoman, I would speak with her; Helen, I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face, quoth she, the cause, Why the Greecians sacked Troy?

*Fond done, done fond, good sooth it was; Was this king Priam's joy?

With that she sighed as she stood And gave this sentence then;

Among nine bad if one be good, There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What! one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying o' the song, and mending o' the sex. Would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a', as we might have a good woman born—but one—every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere he pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done!—Though honestly be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplus of humility over the black gown of a big heart.—I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit.

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do; her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully take title to as much love as she finds; there is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son, her fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates: love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level; Diana, no queen of vir-gins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransomed afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that o'er I heard virgin exclaim in; which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal, silence in the loss that may happen it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly: keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: 'tis all this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you farther anon. [Exit Steward.]

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young: if ever we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn both to our rose of youth rightly belong:

Our blood to us, this to our blood is born:
Is it the show and seal of nature's truth,
Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth.

Enter Helena.

By our *remembrances of days foregone
*Search we out faults, for then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on' t: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honorable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother.

Why not a mother? When I said, a mother,
I thought you saw a serpent: what's in mother,
That you start at it? I say, I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were croum'd mine. 'Tis often seen,
Adoption strives with nature; and the rude breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care.—

God's mercy, maiden! does it curb thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That this diatrem'd messenger of wet,
The many-col'd Eras, rounds thine eye?
Why, that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam; The count Rousillon cannot be my brother;
I am from humble, he from honour'd name;
No note upon my parents, his all noble:
My master, my dear lord he is; and I
His servant live, and will his vassal die.
He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam: would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother)
Indeed, my mother! or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, than I do for heaven;
So I were not his sister. Can't no other,
But, I your daughter, he must be my brother? [Law.

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-
God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother,
So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again?
My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see
That woe of all your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears' head. Now to all these 'tis gross,
You love my son: invention is ashamed,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say, thou dost not: therefore tell me true;
But tell me then, 'tis so:—for, look, thy cheeks
Confess it, th'e one to the other; and thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviors,
That in their kind they speak it: only sin,
And hellish obstinacy thy tongue;
That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so?
If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue;
If it be not, forswear't: how'er, I charge thee,
As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me.

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress.

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about: my love hath in't a bond,
Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose
The state of your affection, for your passions
Have to the full approach'd.

Hel. Then, I confess, *Knelling.

Here on my knee, before high heaven and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son.—

*Rising.
My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love:
Be not offended, for it hurts not him,
That he is low'd of me. I follow him not
By a taken of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him,
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this *capacious and intemperate siege,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And lack not to lose still. Thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honor cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of liking,
Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian
Was both herself and love, O! then, give pity
To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly,
To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? toll true.

Hel. I will tell truth, by grace itself I swear.
You know, my father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading
And manifold experience had collected
For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me
In needful'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties *inclusive were
More than they were in 'note. Amongst the rest,
There is a remedy approv'd, set down
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The king is reaper'd lost.

Count. This was my motive
For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord, your son, made me to think of this;
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king;
Had, from the conversation of my thoughts,
*Haply been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,
If you should tender your supposed aid,
He would receive it? He and his physicians
Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him,

* Language.—"Captious," i. e., deceitful.—"Intemperate," i. e., incapable of holding.—"Faculties inclusive," i. e., concealed virtues.—"More than they were in 'note," i. e., greater than was apparent.—Perhaps.
SCENE 1. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit
A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools,
Embellow'd of their ^ doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something in't,
More than my father's skill, which was the greatest
Of his profession, that his good receipt
Shall, for my legacy, be sanctified. [ honor
By the luckiest stars in heaven; and, would your
But give me leave to try success, I'll venture
The well-best life of mine on his grace's curse,
By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe't? Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly. [ love, Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings
To those of mine in court. I'll stay at home,
And pray God's blessing 'unte thy attempt.
Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this,
What I can help thee to thou shalt not miss.

Exeunt. ACT II.

SCENE 1.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter KING, with young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; BERTRAM, PARDOLES, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lords. These warlike principles [well,—
Do not throw from you:—and you, my lords, faro-
Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis receiv'd,
And is enough for both.

1 Lord. 'Tis our hope, sir
After well-enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.
King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
(Those 'bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy) see, that you come
Not to woo honor, but to wed it: when
The bravest quafntant signs, what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. I say, farewell.

2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!
King. Those girls of Italy, take them heed of them.
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.
King. Farewell.—Come hither to me. [The King retires to a couch.

1 Lord. O, my sweet lord, that you will stay be-

Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!
Par. Most admirable I have seen those wars.
Ber. I am command'd here, and kept a 'coil with;
"Two young," and "the next year," and "tis too early."
Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.
Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,

Till honor be bought up, and no sword worn,
But one to dance with. By heaven! I'll steal away.

1 Lord. There's honor in the theft.
Par. Commit it, count.
2 Lord. I am your accessory; and so farewell.
Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

1 Lord. Farewell, captain.
2 Lord. Sweet Monsieur Paroles!
Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks, and lustres, a word, good metals:—
you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii, one captain Spurnio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek: it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live, and observe his reports of thee.

2 Lord. We shall, noble captain. [Exeunt Lords.
Par. Mara dote on you for his novices!—What will you do?

Ber. Stay; the king— [Seeing him rise.
Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords: you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an advice: be more expressive to them;
for they wear themselves in the cap of the time;
there do must be true and gait; eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.
Par. Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy sword-men. [Exeunt BERTRAM and PARDOLES.

Enter LAFFU.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

Kneeling.

KING. I'll see thee to stand up.

Laf. Then here a man stands, that has brought his pardon. [Rising.

I would, you had knee'd, my lord, to ask me mercy,
And that, at my bidding, you could so stand up.

KING. I would I had; so I had brake thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for. [Thus:

Laf. Good faith, across. But, my good lord, 'tis
Will you be cur'd of your infirmity?

KING. No.

Laf. O! will you eat no grapes, my royal fox?
Yes, but you will, ayce, noble grapes, an if My royal fox could reach them. I have seen
A medicine that's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rock, and make you dance an ecany
With sprightly fire and motion: whose simple touch
Is powerful to 'suprize king Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemaine a pen in's hand,
'To write to her a love-line.

KING. What her is this?

Laf. Why, doctor she. My lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will see her:—now, by my faith and honor,
If seriously I may convey my thought.
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more
Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,
(For that is her demand) and know her business?
That done, Hugh well at me.

* It was the fashion in Shakespeare's time for gent'ocmen to dance with their swords girded — It's a tortured body i.e., as it were to torture or dis-solver a body. — " Sinister check," I. e., left cheek. — A man's life, " true gait." I. e., true military step. — Dance. — Unskilfully. — " Medicine," I. e., a female physician. — The canary was a lively dance. — " Profession. — I. e., altercation of the object of her coming. — " Blame my weakness." I. e., own my weakness of.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT II.

King. Now, good Lafeu, bring in the admiration, that we with thee may spend our wonder too, or take off thine own raving how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you, [Exit Lafeu.

King. 'Tis he his special nothing ever prologue.

Enter Lafeu, with Helena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. 'This haste hath wings, indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

This is his majesty, say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors his majesty seldom fears. I am Cressida's uncle, that dare leave two together. Fare you well. [Exit.

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us? Hel. Ay, my good lord. Gerard de Narbon was in what he did profess well found. [my father.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him;
Knowing him, is enough. On a bed of death Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one, Which, as the dearest issue of his practice, And of his old experience th' only burling, He gave to me store up as a triple eye, Safer than mine own two, more dear. I have so; And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd With that malignant cause, wherein the honor Of my dear father's guest stands chief in power, I come to tender it, and my appliance, With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden; But may not be so credulous of cure:
When our most learned doctors leave us, and The congressed college have concluded That laboring art can never ransom nature From her insidious estate, I say, we must not So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope, To prostitute our past-cure malady To empiricks; or to discover so Our great self and our credit, to esteem A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.

Hel. My duty, then, shall pay me for my pains: I will no more enforce mine office on you; Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts A modest one, to bear me back again. King. I cannot give thee less, to be called grateful. Thou canst do much to help me, and such thanks I give, As one near death to those that wish him live; But what at full I know thou knowst not part, I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do, can do no hurt to try, Since you set up your rest against remedy. He that of greatest works is finish'd, Oft does them by the weakest minister: So holy writ in ladies hath judgment shown, When judges have been 'babes. Great floods have From simple sources; and great seas have dried, When miracles have by the greatest been denied. Oft expectation fails, and most oft there Where most it promises; and oft it hits, Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid.

Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid:

"I am Cressida's uncle," I. e., I am Pandaran. See Troilus and Cressida. —"Well found, I. e., of acknowledged excellence. —"A triple eye," I. e., a third eye. —"Virtue. —"Since you set up your rest, I. e., since you have made up your mind that there is no remedy. — An allusion to Daniel judging the two elders. — An allusion to Moses striking the rock in Horeb.

Prefiers, not took, reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is hary'd. It is not so with him that all things knows, As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows; But most it is presumption in us, when The help of heaven we count the act of men. Dear sir, to my endeavors give consent; Of heaven, not me, make an experiment. I am not an impostor, that proclaim Myself against the level of mine name; But know I think, and think I know most sure, My art is not past power, nor you past cure. King. Art thou so confident? Within what space Hop'st thou my cure? Hel. The greatest grace lending grace, Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring; Ere twice in muck and occidental damp Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lump; Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass, What is inform from your sound parts shall fly, Health shall live free, and sickness freely die. King. Upon thy certainty and confidence, What dur'st thou venture? Hel. Tax of impudence, A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame, Traduc'd by odious ballads; my maiden's name Sear'd otherwise; he worse of worst extended, With vilest torture let my life be ended.

King. Methinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth speak, His powerful sound within an organ weak; And what impossibility would stay In common sense, sense saves another way. Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate Worth name of life, in thee hath esti'mate; Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, honor, all That happiness? in prime can happy call? Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate. Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try, That ministers thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property Of what I spoke, un pity'd let me die; And well deser'd. Not helping, death's my foe; But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even? King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kindly hand What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance To choose from forth the royal blood of France, My low and humble name to propagate With any branch or image of thy state; But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the promises observ'd, Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd: So make the choice of thy own time; for I, Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely.

More should I question thee, and more I must, Though more to know could not be more to trust, But such a one, thy vassal, how to teach on; but rest Unquestion'd welcome, and undeceived blest. — Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

4 That is, that pretends to greater things than befits my condition.—"That is, the Divine grace assisting —"Nay!" is an old negative for nor.—"I Hath estimate," I. e., may be accounted among the gifts enjoyed by thee.—Performance.
SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir: I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught. I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt?

But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off’s cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and, indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court. But, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that’s a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber’s chair, that fits all butts; the pin-buttoc, the quach-buttoc, the brawn-buttock, or any buttoc.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffata punk, as Tib’s rush for Tom’s *forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the buckle to his horn, a scolding quern to a wrangling knave, as the nun’s lip to the friar’s mouth; say, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a tripe neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to’t: ask me, if I am a courier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could. I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courier?

Clo. O Lord, sir!—there’s a simple putting off.

More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Nay, put me to’t, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, “O Lord, sir,” at your whipping, and “spare not me”? Indeed, your “O Lord, sir,” is very *sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to’t.

Clo. I need not had worse luck in my life, in my—“O Lord, sir,” I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time, to entertain it so merrily with a fool.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—why, there’s serves well again.

Count. An end; sir: to your business. Give Hel-And urge her to a present answer back: [en this, Commend me to my kinman, and my son.

This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: you under-stand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—Paris. A Room in the King’s Palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

Laf. They say, miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make §modern and fa-miliar things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it, that we make trifles of terrors, entranceing our-selves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown §fear.

Par. Why, ’tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so ’tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,—

Par. So I say; both of Galen and Paracelsus.—

Laf. Of all the learned and §authentic fellows,—

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incorrible,—

Par. Why, there ’tis: so say I too.

Laf. Not to be helped,—

Par. Right; as ’twere a man assured of an—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in,—what do you call there?

Laf. In showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Par. That’s it I would have said; the very same.

Laf. Why, your §dolphin is not lustier: ’fore me, I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, ’tis strange; ’tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most §fancieous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the—

Laf. Very hand of heaven.

Par. Ay, so I say.

Laf. In a most weak—

Par. And debile minister, great power, great trans-ascendence; which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—

Laf. Generally thankful.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Laf. Lustick, as the Dutchman says: I’ll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head.

Why, he’s able to lead her a cometo.

Par. Moris du vinlige! Is not this Helen?

Laf. Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—

[Exit an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient’s side; And with this healthful hand, whose banish’d sense Thou hast repeal’d, a second time receive The confirmation of my promis’d gift, Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel

* "Tib" and "Tom" were names for a lad and lass; a rush ring was a love-token for plighting troth among rustic lovers. — "is very sequent," i. e., very properly follows.
All's well that ends well.

ACT II.

Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing.

[Voice
O'er whom both soveraign power and father's I have to use: thy frank election make.

Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress Fall, when love please,—marry, to each, but one.

Laf. I'll give bay 4 curtal, and his furniture, My mouth no more were broken than these boys', And I with as little beard.

King. Persue me well:

Not one of those but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven hath through me restor'd the king to health. All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest, That I protest, I simply am a maid.

Please it your majesty, I have done already: The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me, "We blush, that thou should'st choose; but, be refused, Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever: We'll never come there again."

Make choice, and see; Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me, Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly, And to imperial Love, that god most high, Do my sighs 3 steam.—Sir, will you hear my suit? 1 Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir: all the rest is mute.

Laf. I had rather be in this choice, than throw away one for my self.

Hel. The honor, sir, that flames in your fair eyes, Before I speak, too threateningly replies: Love make your fortunes twenty times above Her that so wishes, and her humble love!

2 Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive, Which great Love grant! and so I take my leave.

Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to the Turk to make enuchi's of.

Hel. [To 3 Lord.] Be not afraid that I your hand should take;

I'll never do you wrong for your own sake: Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed First flourish fortune, if you ever wish it.

Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got them.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good, To make yourself a son out of my blood.

4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.

Laf. There's one grape yet:—I am sure, thy father drank wine.—But if thou best not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen: I have known thee already.

Hel. [To Bertram.] I dare not say I take you; Me, and my service, ever whilst I live, but I give into your guiding power.—This is the man.

King. Why then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife.

Ber. My wife, my liege? I shall beseech your highness, In such a business give me leave to use. The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram, What she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord; But never hope to know why I should marry her.

They were wards as well as subjects of the king.—"To each, but one," i. e., except one, meaning Bertram.—"Bay curtal," i. e., my bay horse.—"All the rest is mute," i. e., I have no more to say to you.—Aamaze's is the lowest clause of the dice.

King. Thou know'st, she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down Must answer for your raising? I know her well: She had her breeding at my father's charge. A poor physician's daughter my wife!—Didstain Rather corrupt me ever! [which

King. 'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the I can add up. Strange is it, that our bloods. Of color, weight, and heat, pour'd all together, Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off In differences so mighty. If she be All that is virtuous, (save what thou dislik'st, A poor physician's daughter) thou dislik'st Of virtue for the name; but do not so: From lowest place where virtuous things proceed, The place is dignified by the doer's deed:

Where great additions swell's, and virtue none, It is a dropped honor: good alone Is good, without a name; vileness is so: The property by what it is should go, Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair; In these to nature she's immediate heir, And these breed honor: that is honor's scorn, Which challenges itself as honor's born, And is not like the sire: honors thrive, When rather from our acts we then derive, Than our foregoers. The mere word's a slave, Debouch'd on every tomb; on every grave, A lying tyranny, and as oft is damn'd, Where dust, and damn'd oblivion, is the tomb Of honor's bones indeed. What should be said? If thou canst like this creature as a maid, I can create the rest. Virtue, and she Is her own dower; honor, and wealth from me. Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou should'st strive to make her.

Hel. That you are well restor'd, my lord, I am glad. Let the rest go.

King. My honor's at the stake, which to defend, I must produce my power. Here, take her hand, Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift, That dost in vile misprision shackle up My love, and her desert; that canst not dream, What woe is in her, scarce to be comprehended, Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know, It is in us to plant thine honor, where We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt: Obey our will, which travails in thy good: Believe not thy disdain, but presently Do thine own fortunes that obedient right, Which both thy duty owes, and our power claims, Or I will throw thee from my care for ever Into the slanders, and the careless lapse Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate, Loosing upon thee in the name of justice, Without all terms of pity. Speak: thine answer.

Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord, for I submit My fancy to your eyes. When I consider What great creation, and what kind of honor, Flies where you bid it, I find that, which I late Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now The praised of the king; who, so enobled, Is, as 'twere, born so.

King. Take her by the hand, And tell her, she is thine; to whom I promise A counterpoise, if not to thy estate, A balance more replete.
Scene III.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favor of the king,
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the now born brief,
And be performed to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends. As thou lovest her,
Thy love's to me religious, else, does err.

[Execute King, Bertram, Helena, Lords, and Attendants.]

Laf. Do you hear, monsieur? a word with you.
Par. Your pleasure, sir?
Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.
Par. Recantation?—My lord? my master?
Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?
Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master!
Laf. Are you companion to the count Rouillon?
Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.
Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man;
To which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What! when I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two 2 ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel: it might pass; yet the scarts, and the bannets about thee, did manfully dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden.
I have now found thee: when I lose thee again,
I care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that thou'rt scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,—

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for 1 I look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.
Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Yes, good faith, every drachm of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.
Laf. E'en as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf, and beaten, then shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say, in the default, he is a man I know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past, as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave.

[Exit.]

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off, squarly, old, filthy, scurril lord!—Well, I must be patient; there is no lettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double a lord.

*I have no more pity of his age, than I would have of—I'll beat him: as if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Lafue.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married:
there's news for you; you have a new mistress.
Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.
Laf. Who? God?
Par. Ay, sir.
Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou gather up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wast best set thy lower part where thy nose stands.
By mine honor, if I were but two hours younger I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.
Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond, and true traveller. You are more saucy with lords and honorable personages, than the condition of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry.
You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you.

[Exit.]

Enter Bertram.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then:—good, very good. Let it be concealed a while.
Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!
Par. What is the matter, sweet heart?
Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have
I will not bed her.
[sworn,
Par. What? what, sweet heart?
Ber. O, my Parolles, they have married me!
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.
Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits
The tread of a man's foot. To the wars!
Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is,
I know not yet.
Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy! to the wars!
He wears his honor in a box, unseen,
That hags his 'kicksey-wicksey here at home,
Spending his marry money in her arms,
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions!
France is a whirlpool; we, that dwell in't, jades;
Therefore, to the 2 wars!

Par. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my late to her,
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I distrust not speak. His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble fellows strike. War is no strife
To the dark 2 houses, as the detected wife.
Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee, art sure?
Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.
I'll send her straight away: to-morrow
I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.
Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it;
'tis hard.
A young man married is a man that's mar'd:
Therefore away, and leave her: bravely go;
The king has done you wrong; but, hush! 'tis so.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter HELENA and Clov.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly; is she well?
Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing in the world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she ail, that she's not very well?
Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things:
Hel. What two things?
Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!
Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.
Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knife! How does my old lady?
Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and her money, I would she did as you say.
Par. Why, I say nothing.
Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.
Par. Away! thou'rt a knave.
Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou'rt a knave; that is, before me thou'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.
Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool: I have found thee.
Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir, or were you taught to find me?
Par. Go to, I say: I have found thee: no more; I have found thee, a witty fool.

Clo. The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, 't faith, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will go away to-night; A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and rite of love, Which as your due time claims, he does acknowledge, But puts it off to a compell'd restraint; Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets, Which they distil now in the curbed time To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy, And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's his will else?
Par. That you will take your instant leave of the king, And make this haste as your own good proceeding, Strengthen'd with what apology you think May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?
Par. That having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure.
Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.
Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter LAFFEU and BERTRAM.

Laf. But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approb.
Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.
Ber. And by other warranted testimony.
Laf. Then my dial goes not true. I took this lark for him.
Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.
Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valor: and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here I pray you, make us friends: I will pursue the amity.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. [To BERTRAM.] These things shall be done, sir.
Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?
Par. Sir?
Laf. O! I know him well. Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.
Par. [Aside to PAROLLES.] Is she gone to the king?
Laf. She is.
Par. Will she away to-night?
Laf. As you'll have her.
Ber. I have writ my letters, cacketed my treasure, Given order for our horses; and to-night, When I should take possession of the bride, End, ere I do begin.
Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three-thirds, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothing with, should be once heard, and thrice better.—God save you, captain! Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?
Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.
Laf. You have made shift to run into't, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.
Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.
Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur; I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.
Ber. I think so.
Par. Why, do you not know him?
Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

Enter HELENA.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you, Spoke with the king, and have procur'd his leave For present parting; only he desires Some private speech with you.
Ber. I shall obey his will. You must not marvel, Helen, at my course, Which holds not color with the time, nor does The ministration and required office On my particular: prepar'd I was not For such a business; therefore am I found So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you That presently you take your way for home;

BERTRAM: THE BUNTING.
SCENE I.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  245

And rather muse than ask why I entreat you, For my respects are better than they seem; And my appointments have in them a need, Greater than shows itself, at the first view, To you that know them not. This to my mother.

[Giving a letter.

"Tw'll be two days ere I shall see you: so, I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant. Ber. Come, come, now no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall With true observance seek to eke out that, Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd
To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:
My haste is very great. Farewell: he home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I love;
Nor dare I say, 'tis mine, and yet it is,
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much:—nothing, indeed—
I would not tell you what I would, my lord— Faith, Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss. [yes—
Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.

Ber. Where are my other men? monsieur, farewell.

[Exit. Ber. Go thou toward home; where I will never come, Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum.— Away! and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.

ACT III.

FLOURISH. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended; two Frenchmen, and Soldiers.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you The fundamental reasons of this war, heard Whose great decision hath much blood let forth, And more limbs after.

1 Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace's part; black and fearful On the opposer. [France

Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom Against our borrowing prayers.

Fr. Env. Good my lord, The reasons of our state I cannot yield, But like a common and an outward man, That the great figure of a council frames By self-easily motion: therefore, dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fail As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure. Fr. Gent. But I am sure, the younger of our nature, That surfeit on their ease, will day by day
Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be,

And all the honors that can fly from us Shall on them settle. You know your places well; When better fall, for your avails they fell. To-morrow to the field. [FLOURISH. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that here I am not along with her.
Cloe. By my truth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?
Cloe. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend his ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth, and sing. I know a man, that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.
Cloe. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court. Our old ling and our Isbels o' the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' the court: the brains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have you here?
Cloe. E'en that you have there. [Exit. Count. [Reads.] "I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bejewelled her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear, I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you."

Your unfortunate son,

BERTRAM.

This is not well: rash and unbridled boy, To fly the favors of so good a king! To pluck his indignation on thy head, By the misprizing of a maid, too virtuous For the contempt of empire!

Re-enter Clown.
Cloe. O madam! yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Cloe. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort: your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be kill'd?
Cloe. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to: it's that the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come they will tell you more: for my part, I only hear your son was run away.

[Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two French Gentlemen.
Fr. Env. Save you, good madam.
Hel. Madam, my lord is gone; for ever gone.
Fr. Gen. Do not say so. [men—

Count. Think upon patience.—1Pray you, gentle- I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief, That the first face of neither, on the start, [you? Can 't woman me unto?—where is my son, I pray Fr. Gen. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence: We met him thitherward; for thence we came, And, after some despatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here's my pass- port.

[The folding at the top of the boot was called the ruff—

2 Can woman me unto?" i. e., can affect me deeply, as women are usually affected.
[Reads.] "When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a then I write a newer.

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?
Fr. Env. Ay, madam; and,
For the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains.
Count. I pr'ythee, lady, have a better cheer; If thou engrossest all the griefs at thine, Thou rob'st me of a moiety. He was my son, But I do wash his name out of my blood, And thou art all my child. —Towards Florence is he?
Fr. Gen. Ay, madam.
Count. And to be a soldier? Fr. Gen. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe't, The duke will lay upon him all the honor That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither? Fr. Env. Madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. [ing in France.

Hel. [Reads.] "Till I have no wife, I have noth-
'Tis bitter. Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam. Fr. Env. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, haply, Which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife! There's nothing here that is too good for him, But only she; and she deserves a lord, That twenty such rude boys might tend upon, And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

Fr. Env. A servant only, and a gentleman Which I have some time known.

Count. Parolles, was it not?
Fr. Env. Ay, my good lady, he. [ness.
Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wicked-
My son corrupts a well-derived nature With his inducements.
Fr. Env. Indeed, good lady, The fellow has a deal of that much, Which 'hoves him much to leave.

Count. Y' are welcome, gentlemen. I will entreat you, when you see my son, To tell him, that his sword can never win The honor that he loses: more I'll entreat you Written to bear along.

Fr. Gen. We serve you, madam, In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies. Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and French Gentlemen.

Hel. "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

Nothing in France, until he has no wife! Thou shalt have none, Rouillon, none in France; Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is't I That chase thee from thy country, and expose Those tender limbs of thine to the want Of the non-sparing war? and is it I That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou Was shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark Of smoky musquets? O! you leaden messengers, That ride upon the volley speed of fire, Fly with false aim; wound the still-piercing air, That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord! Whoever shoots at him, I set him there; Whoever charges on his forward breast, I am the offi'd that do hold him to it; And, though I kill him not, I am the cause

His death was so effect'd. Better 'twere, I met the ravening lion when he roard With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere That all the miseries which nature owes Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rouillon, Whose honor but of danger wins a scar, As oft it loses all: I will be gone.

My being here it is that holds thee hence: Shall I stay here to do't? no, no, although The air of paradise did fan the house, And angels o'f a'd all: I will be gone, That pitiful rumor may report my flight, To bewitch thine ear. Come, night; end, day; For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Parolles, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we, Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence Upon thy promising fortune.
Ber. Sir, it is A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake, To th' extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth, And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, As on a auspicious mistress! Ber. This very day, Great Mars, I put myself into thy file: Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rouillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and her Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her? Might you not know, she would do as she has done, By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads.] "I am Saint Jaques' pilgrim; thither gone.
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon,
With sauntered vow my faults to have amended.
Write, write, that, from the bloody course of war,
My dearest master, your dear son, may he:
Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far
His name with zealous fervor sanctify.
His taken labors bid me forgive:
I, his despiteful * Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth:
He is too good and fair for death and me,
Whom I myself embrace, to set him free."

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words!—

Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her, I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam: If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes,
Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,

* At Orleans was a church dedicated to Saint Jaques, to which pilgrims used to resort.—Alluding to the story of Hercules,—4 of "Advice," i.e., discretion; thought.
SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A bucket after off. Enter an old Widow of Florence, DIANA, VIOLENTA, MARIANA, and other Citizens.

*Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Dia. They say, the French count has done most honorable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander, and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. We have lost our labor; they are gone a contrary way: barm! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come; let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honor of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbor, how you have been offended by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wrenching of a chaste youthhood, cannot for all that dissipate succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope, I need not to advise you further; but, I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter HELena in the dress of a Pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another.

I'll question her.—God save you, pilgrim! Whither are you bound?

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand. Where do the palmer's lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way?

Wid. Ay, marry, is't.—Hark you! [A march after They come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, But till the troops come by, I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd; The rather, for I think you know my hostess As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself?

---

*"Weigh," I. e., value; esteeom.—Temptations.—"Not the meaner the way go under," I. e., not what they appear to be.—Pilgrims were called palmer, from a staff or bough of palm they were wont to carry.—"As ample," I. e., as well.

Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours, That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

Dia. The count Rossillon: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the car, that bears most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Dia. Whatsoever he is, He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 'tis reported, for the king had married him Against his liking. Think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady. Dia. There is a gentleman, that serves the count, Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O! I believe with him, In argument of praise, or to the worth

Of the great count himself, she is too mean To have her name repeated: all her deserving Is a reserved honesty, and that I have not heard examin'd.

Dia. Alas, poor lady! 'Tis a hard bondage, to become the wife Of a detesting lord.

Wid. I write a good creature: whereas'ere she is, Her heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do A shrewd turn, if she pleas'd. [her

Hel. How do you mean?

May be, the amorous count solicits her In the unlawful purpose.

Wid. He does, indeed; And should he with all that can in such a suit Corrupt the tender honor of a maid: But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard, In honestest defence.

Enter with drum and colors, a party of the Florentine army, BERTRAM, and PAROLLES.

Mar. The gods forbid else!

Wid. So, now they come.—That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;

Thaat, Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. He; That with the plaint: 'tis a most gallant fellow; I would have him for my wife. If he were honest, He were much goodlier: 'tis not a handsome gen-

Hel. I like him well. [leman?

Dia. 'Tis pity, he is not honest. Yond's that same knave, That leads him to these places: were I his lady, I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he?

Dia. That jackasses with scars. Why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt 't the battle.

Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something. Look, he has spied us.

Wid. marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier! [Exit BERTRAM, PAROLLES, Officers, and Soldiers.

Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents

---

Because of mere the truth," I. e., the mere truth.— Questioned.—"Brokers," I. e., deals with panders.
There's four or five, to great saint Jaques bound,

Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you.

Please it this matron, and this gentle maid,

To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking

Shall be for me; and, to requite you farther

I will show some precepts of this virgin,

Worthy the note.

Beth. We'll take your offer kindly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two Frenchmen.

Fr. Env. Nay, good my lord, put him to't; let him have his way.

Fr. Gent. If your lordship find him not a θ hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

Fr. Env. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

Fr. Env. Believe it, my lord: in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as I have seen him, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your lordship's entertainment.

Fr. Gent. It were fit you knew him, lest reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business in a main danger, fail you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Fr. Gent. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

Fr. Env. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him: such I will have, whom, I am sure, he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the θ leager of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination, if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

Fr. Gent. O! for the love of laughter, let him fetch off his drum: he says he has a stratagem for't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ores will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

Fr. Env. O! for the love of laughter, hinder not the honor of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any θ hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

Fr. Gent. A pock on't! let it go: 'tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is't but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command, to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to read our own soldiers.

Fr. Gent. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Fr. Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success: some dishonor we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Fr. Ber. It might; but it is not now.

Par. It is too late to be recovered. But that the merit of some is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or 'tis Jacot.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honor again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on: I will reach the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you spend it well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what farther becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemma, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight look to hear farther from me.

Ber. Nay I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord: but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I do know, a sport valiant, and to the possibility of thy soldier'ship will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words. [Exit.

Fr. Env. No more than a fish loves water.—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done, damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do't?

Fr. Gent. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favor, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

Fr. Env. None in the world, but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies. But we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night; for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.

Fr. Gent. We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we b'case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafaen: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him, which you shall see this very night.

Fr. Env. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

Fr. Gent. As't please your lordship.

Fr. Env. I'll leave you. [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show The lass I spoke of. [You

Fr. Gent. But, you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once, And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, By this same cocusnomb that we have i' the wind, Tokens and letters which she did re-send; And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature: Will you go see her?

Fr. Gent. With all my heart, my lord. [Exeunt.

a"A hilding," i. e., a paltry fellow; a coward. —b"Leager," i. e., from the German Lager. —c"John Drum's entertainment" was a common phrase for ill treatment. —d"in any hand," i. e., at any rate.

"Or his jacon," i. e., or die in the attempt. —"My dilem- ma," i. e., my dilemma and their probable difficulties. —"Em-bossed him," i. e., hunted him down. —"Case him," i. e., unmask him; strip him naked.
SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you mislead me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you further, but I shall lose the grounds I work upon. Wid. Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born, Nothing acquainted with these businesses, and would not put my reputation now in any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you. First give me trust; the count he is my husband, and what to your sworn counsel I have spoken, is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, By the good aid that I of you shall borrow, Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have show'd me that which well approves You are great in fortune. Take this purse of gold, And let me buy your friendly help thus far, Which I will over-pay, and pay again, When I have found it. The county woos your daughter, Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty, Resolved to carry her: let her, in fine, consent, As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it. Now, his important blood will neath come. That she'll demand: a ring the county wears, That downward hath succeeded in his house From son to son, some four or five descents Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire To buy his will, it would not seem too dear, How'er repeated after.

Wid. Now I see The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then. It is no more, But that your daughter, ere she seems as won, Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; In fine, delivers me to fill the time, Herself most chasterly absent. After this, To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded. Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere, That time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Every night he comes, With musics of all sorts, and songs compos'd To her unworthiness: it nothing steals us, To chide him from our caves, for he persists As if 'tis his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then, to-night Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed, Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, And lawful meaning in a lawful act; Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact. But let's about it. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter French Envoy, with five or six Soldiers in ambush.

Fr. Env. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner. When you salary upon him, speak what terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter. Fr. Env. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you. Fr. Env. But what lisy-wooly hast thou to speak to us again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me. Fr. Env. He must think we some band of strangers I the adversary's entertainment. Now, he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore, we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know 'tis to go straight to our purpose: 'tis thought, language, gabbles enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But cough, he! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forgets. [They stand book.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it. They begin to smoke me, and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find, my tongue is too foolhardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the repose of my tongue.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] This is the first truth that ever thine own tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say, I got them in exploit. Yet slight ones will not carry it: they will say, "Come you off with so little?" and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Is it possible, he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say, it was in strategem.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

Fr. Env. [Aside.] How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.

Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear I recovered it.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] You shall hear one anon.

Par. A drum, now, of the enemy's!

[Alarm within.

Fr. Env. Throca moresinus, cargo, cargo, cargo. All. Cargo, cargo, villandiara par corbo, cargo.

4"That is, foreign troops in the enemy's pay."—"So we seem to know is to go straight to our purpose," i. e., if we seem to understand each other, that answers our purpose.

1 A "chough" was a sort of jackal. —"Plausible." —"The instance," I. e., the proof. —"The barings," I. e., the showing.
Par. Of! ransom, ransom!—Do not hide mine eyes.

[They seize and blindfold him.]

1 Sold. Boskos thronumulo boskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos’ regiment; and I shall lose my life for want of language. If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me: I will discover that which shall undo The Florentine.

1 Sold. Boskos vouwado:

I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue.—

Keryglybonte.—Sir, Betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards Are at thy bosom.

Par. O!

1 Sold. O! pray, pray, pray.—

Manco recanto delche.

Fr. Env. Ocorbidulche volitoreho.

1 Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet, and, hoodwink’d as thou art, will lead thee on To gather from thee: haply, thou may’st inform Something to save thy life.

Par. O! let me live,

And all the secrets of our camp I’ll show, Their force, their purposes; nay, I’ll speak that Which you will wonder at.

1 Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damn me.

1 Sold. Acordo linta.—

Come on; thou art granted space.

[Exit with PAROLLES guarded.]

Fr. Env. Go, tell the count Ronsillon, and my brother, [muffled, We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him Till we do hear from them.

2 Sold. Captain, I will.

Fr. Env. A’ will betray us all unto ourselves:

Inform on that.

2 Sold. So I will, sir.

Fr. Env. Till then, I’ll keep him dark, and safely lock’d.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Florence. A Room in the Widow’s House.

Enter BERTRAND and DIANA.

Ber. They told me, that your name was Fontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess, and worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are no maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and 1 stone; And now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got.

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

Diana. No:

My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more o’ that: I pr’ythee, do not strive against my 8 vows. I was compelled to her; but I love thee By love’s own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us, Till we serve you; but when you have our roses, You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves, And mock us with our bareness.

"Against my vows," I. e. never to cohabit with Helen.8

Ber. How have I sworn?

Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth, But the plain single vow, that is vow’d true. What is not holy, that we swear not b, by, [me, But take the Highest to witness: then, pray you, tell If I should swear by Jove’s great attributes, I lov’d you dearly, would you believe my oaths, When I did love you ill? this has no holding, To swear by him, whom I protest to love, That I will work against him. Therefore, your oaths Are words, and poor conditions, but unsaid, At least, in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it. Be not so holy-cred: love is holy, And my integrity o’er knew the crafts, That you do charge men with. Stand no more off, But give thyself unto my sick desires, Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever My love, as it begins, shall so persevere.

Dia. I see, that men make hopes in such a suit, That we’ll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I’ll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honor longing to our house, Bequested down from many ancestors, Which were the greatest obloquy f the world In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honor’s such a ring: My chastity’s the jewel of our house, Bequested down from many ancestors, Which 3 were the greatest obloquy f the world In me to lose. Thus, your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion, honor, on my part Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring: My loose, mine honor, yea, my life be thine, And I’ll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber I’ll order take my mother shall not hear. Now will I charge you in the band of truth, When you have conquer’d my yet maiden bed, Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me. My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them, When back again this ring shall be deliver’d: And on your finger, in the night, I’ll put Another ring; that what in time resembles May token to the future our past deeds. Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won A wife of me, though there my hope be /none. Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

[Exit.]

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven You may so in the end, [and me! My mother told me just how he would woo, As if she sat in’s heart: she says, all men Have the like oaths. He had sworn to marry me, When his wife’s dead; therefore I’ll lie with him, When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so /brayfed, Marry that will, I live and die a maid: Only, in this disguise, I think’t no sin To cozen him, that would unjustly win.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two Frenchmen, and two or three Soldiers.

Fr. Gent. You have not given him his mother’s letter.

Fr. Env. I have delivered it an hour since: there

8 "What is not holy, that we swear not by," I. e. we never swear by what is not holy, but, &c.—"Brayfed," I. e. false; deceitful.
is something in't that stings his nature, for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.

Fr. Gent. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaving off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady.

Fr. Env. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly within you.

Fr. Gent. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Fr. Env. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, here in Florence, of most chaste renown, and this night he flashless his will in the spoil of her honor: he hath given her her monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

Fr. Gent. Now, God delay our rebellion: as we are ourselves, what things are we!

Fr. Env. Merely our own traitors: and as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream overflows himself.

Fr. Gent. Is it not most damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night.

Fr. Env. Not till after midnight, for he is dicted to his hour.

Fr. Gent. That approaches space: I would gladly have him see his companion anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgment, wherein so seriously he had set this course.

Fr. Env. We will not meddle with him till he come, for his presence must be the whip of the other.

Fr. Gent. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

Fr. Env. I hear there is an outbreak of peace.

Fr. Gent. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Fr. Env. What will count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

Fr. Gent. I perceive by this demand you are not altogether of his council.

Fr. Env. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.

Fr. Gent. Sir, his wife some two months since felt the loss of his house: her pain was a pilgrimage to Saint Jacques le Grand, which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony she accomplished; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

Fr. Env. How is this justified?

Fr. Gent. The stranger part of it by her own letters, which make her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say, lies come, and faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.

Fr. Env. Hath the count all this intelligence?

Fr. Gent. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Fr. Env. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.

Fr. Gent. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses.

Fr. Env. And how mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears. The great dignity, that his valor hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

Fr. Gent. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

Fr. Env. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can command.

Enter BERTHAN.

Fr. Gent. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now.—How now, my lord! it's not after midnight!

Ber. I have to-night despatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have cong'd with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ to my lady mother I am returning, entertained my convey; and between these main parcels of despatch effect'd many nicer deeds: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

Fr. Env. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit 'medal'; he has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophetess.

Fr. Env. Bring him forth. [Exeunt Soldiers.] He has sat i' the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

Fr. Env. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But, to answer you as you would be understood, he weeps, like a wench that had shed her milk. He hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his sitting 'i' the stocks, and what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has he?

Fr. Env. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Re-enter Soldiers, with PAROLLES.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled? lie can say nothing of me: 'shush! 'shush!

Fr. Gent. * Hoodman comes!—Portotetarossa.

1 Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

1 Sold. Bosko chimurke.

Fr. Gent. Boblibido chierumurco.

1 Sold. You are a merciful general.—Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

1 Sold. "First, demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?

Par. Five or six thousand: but very weak and

* An allusion to the degradation of a knight by hacking off his spurs. — Blind man's buff was formerly called Hoodman blind.
unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live. 1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so? Par. Do: I'll take 1 my sacrament o'n, how and which way you will. 1 Sold. All's one to him. Ber. What a past-saving slave is this! Fr. Gent. Ye're deceived, my lord: this is monsieur Parolles, the gallant militistor, (that was his own phrase) that had the whole theory of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the shape of his dagger. Fr. Ean. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have everything in him by wearing his apparel neatly. 1 Sold. Well, that's set down. Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down,—for I'll speak truth. Fr. Gent. He's very near the truth in this. Ber. But I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it. Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say. 1 Sold. Well, that's set down. Par. I humbly thank ye, sir. A truth's a truth: the rogues are marvellous poor. 1 Sold. Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot! What say you to that? Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spario a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Corambus so many, Jaques so many: Guittian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Berti, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chipher, Vaumond, Benti, two hundred fifty each: so that the master-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces. Ber. What shall be done to him? Fr. Gent. Nothing, but let him have thanks.—Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke. 1 Sold. Well, that's set down. "You shall demand of him, whether one captain Durnaine be i' the camp, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke, what his valor, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks, it were not possible with well-weighting sums of gold to corrupt him to a revolt." What say you to this? what do you know of it? Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly. 1 Sold. Do you know this captain Durnaine? Par. I know him: he was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's foot with child; a dunc, i' innocence, that could not say him nay. [Durnaine lifts up his hand in anger. Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though, I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls. 1 Sold. Well, is this the captain in the duke of Florence's case? Par. Upon my knowledge he is, and louzy. Fr. Gent. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon. 1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke? *Thory.—The shape is the point of the scabbard, by which it is buckled to the back-sstrap: "I con him no thanks," i. e., I'm not beholden to him.—4 A cassock was a soldier's cloak or overcoat.—Disposition; character.—5 Interrogatories.—6 Innocent, i. e., natural fool.

Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' the band: I think, I have his letter in my pocket. 1 Sold. Marry, we'll search. Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent. 1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper: shall I read it to you? Par. I do not know if it be, or no. Ber. Our interpreter does it well. Fr. Gent. Excellently. 1 Sold. [Reads.] "Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold,"— Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one count Rossillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish. I pray you, sir, put it up again. 1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favor. Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whole to virginity, and devours all the fry it finds. Ber. Darnnable, both-sides rogue! 1 Sold. [Reads.] "When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it: After he scores, he never pays the score: [54] Half won is match well made; match, and well make he nor pays after debts; take it before, And say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this. Men are to 'well with, boys are not to kiss: For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it, Who pays before, but not where he does owe it. "Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine ear, " Paroles." Par. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in's forehead. Par. To this is your devoted friend, sir; the manifold linguis, and the armipotent soldier. Ber. I can endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me. 1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by our general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you. Par. My life, sir, in any case! not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would prove the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, if the stocks, or any where, so I may live. 1 Sold. Well: we'll see what may be done, so you confess freely: therefore, once more to this captain Durnaine. You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valor: what is his honesty? Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parliets Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool. Drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has everything that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing. [54] That is, a match well made is half won; make your match, therefore, but make it well.—Middle. —That is, he will steal anything; however trifling, from any place, however holy.—The Centaur killed by Hercules.
SCENE V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Fr. Gent. I begin to love him for this.
Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him! for me he is more and more a cat.
Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?
Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to belch him, I will not,—and more of his soldiership I know not; except, in that country, he had the honor to be the officer at a place there called *Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honor I can, but he is not certain.
Fr. Gent. He hath out-villain'd villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.
1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.
Par. Sir, for a *quart d'eau he will sell the freemiple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.
1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Du-

Maine?
Fr. Evan. Why does he ask him of me?
1 Sold. What's he?
Par. Even a crow of the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in will. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he out-runs any lackey: marry, in coming on he has the cramp.
1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betry the Florentine?
Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Rousillon.
1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. [Aside.] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush, when I was taken?
1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die.
The general says, you, that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headman; off with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!
1 Sold. That shall you; and take your leave of all your friends.
[Unmuffling him.]
So, look about you: know you any here?
Ber. Good-norrow, noble captain.
Fr. Evan. God bless you, captain Parolles.
Fr. Gent. God save you, noble captain.
Fr. Evan. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lafeu? I am for France.
Fr. Gent. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the somet you writ to Diana in behalf of the count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.
[Exeunt BERTRAM, Frenchmen, &c.
1 Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your seat; that has a knot on't yet.
Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?
1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were, that had received so much shame, you might find an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there.
Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great, I would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more; But I will eat, and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart, Let him fear this; for it will come to pass, That every braggart shall be found an ass. Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and Parolles, live Safely in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive! There's place and means for every man alive. I'll after them.

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter HELENA, Widow, and DIANA.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you, One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be my sonry; 'tis whose throne, 'tis needful, Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel. Time was I did him a desired office, Dear almost as his life; which gratitude Through flitty Tartar's bosom would peep forth, And answer, thanks: I duly am inform'd. His grace is at Marseilles, to which place We have convenient convoy. You must know I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband lies him home; where, heaven aiding, And by the leave of my good lord the king, We'll be before our welcome.

Wild. Gentle madam, You never had a servant, to whose trust Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress, Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labor To recompense your love: doubt not, but heaven Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower, As it hath fated her to be my 4 motive, And helper to a husband. But O, strange men! That can such sweet use make of what they hate, When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts Defiles the pitchy night! so lust doth play With what it loathes, for that which is away, But more of this hereafter.—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions, yet must suffer Something in my behalf.
Disa. Let death and honesty Go with your impositions, I am yours Upon your will to suffer.
Hel. Yet, I pray you: But with the world the time will bring on summer, When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns, And be as sweet as sharp. We must away; Our waggon is prepar'd, and time 4 reviles us: "All's well that ends well!" still the 5 fine's the crown; Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Coun-tess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS, LAFEU, and CLOWN.

Laf. No, no, no; your son is mislaid with a snip-tailin follow there, whose villainous suffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy

4 "My motive," i. e., my money. — Wanton; lascivious.
— The sense is, Let death and honesty accompany your commands, still I am yours, &c. — "The fine," i. e., the end: from the Latin proverb, Finis coronat opus.
youth of a nation in his color: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, more advanced by the king; than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him. It was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever nature had praise for creating; if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I could not have owed her a more royal love.

Laf. Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salons, ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not 'pot-herbs, you knife; they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am not a great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knife, or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knife at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knife at his service, indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my humble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knife and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, a' has an English name; but his phisonomy is more hotter in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince; sir alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of: serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world; let the nobility remain in's court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may; but the many will be too chill and tender, and they'll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a weary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be jades' tricks. which are their own right by the law of nature.

Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So 'tis. My lord, that's gone, made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no place, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death, and that my lord, your son, was upon his return home, I moved the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose. His highness hath promised me to do it; and to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord; and I wish it happily effected.

Laf. His highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty: a' will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

Count. It rejoices me that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship, to remain with me till they meet together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

Count. You need but plead your honorable privilege.

Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but, I thank my God, it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O, madam! yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on's face: whether there be a scar under it, or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet. His left cheek is a check of two pike and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honor; so, belike, is that.

Clo. But it is your 4 carbonadoed face.

Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Clo. 'Faith, there's a dozen of 'em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A Street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting, day and night, Must wear your spirits low: we cannot help it; But, since you have made the days and nights as one, To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs, Be bold, you do so grow in my requital, As nothing can unroot you. In happy time, Enter a Gentleman, a Stranger.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear, If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir. Gent. And you. Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France. Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen From the report that goes upon your goodness; And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankfull.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king, And aid me with that store of power you have, To come into his presence. [Giving it to him. Gent. The king's not here.

4 "Carbonadoed," i. e., scotched, scored, like a place of meat for cooking.
SCENE III.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Hel. Not here, sir?  Gent. Not indeed: He hence remov'd last night, and with more haste Than is his use.

Wel. Lord, how we lose our pains!  Hel. All's well that ends well yet, Though time seem so adverse, and means unfit.— I do beseech you, whither is he gone?  Gent. Marty, as I take it, to Rousillon; Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir, Since you are like to see the king before me, Command the paper to his gracious hand; Which, I presume, shall render you no blame, But rather make you thank your pains for it. I will come after you, with what good speed Our means will make us * means.

Gent. This I'll do for you.  Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank'd, Whate'er falls more.— We must to horse again:— Go, go, provide.

[Exeunt.

Par. Good monsieur Lavatch, give my lord Lafeu this letter. I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarly with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, muddied in fortune's * mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as then speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Prythee, allow the * wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir: I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or again any man's metaphor. Prythee, get thee farther.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh! prythee, stand away: a paper from fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

Enter Lafeu.

Here is a pur of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat, (but not a musk-cat) that has fallen into the unclean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal. Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may, for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingeniou, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my * smiles of comfort, and leave him to your lordship.

[Exit Clown.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady, and would not have knaves thrive long under her? There's a * quart d'ecou for you. Let the justices make you and fortune friends; I am for other business.

Par. I beseech your honor to hear me one single word.

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall quit; save your word.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than one * word, then.—Cox! my passion! give me your hand.—How does your drum?

Par. O, my good lord! you were the first that found me.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost thee.

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sounded.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets.—Sirrah, inquire farther after me: I had talk of you last night. Though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat: go to, fellow.

Par. I praise God for you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.  A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafeu, Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her, and our * esteem Was made much poorer by it; but your son, As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know Her estimation * home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege: And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done 't' the blaze of youth; When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force, O'erbear's, and burns on.

King. My honored lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all, Though my revenges were high bent upon him, And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say,— But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady, Offence of mighty note, but to himself The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive; Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost Makes the remembrance dear.—Well, call him hither. We are reconcil'd, and the first * view shall kill All * repetition.—Let him not ask our pardon: The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper than oblivion we do bury The incensing relics of it: let him approach, A stranger, no officer; and inform him, So 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege, [Exit Gentleman.

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me, That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of * season, For thou may'st see a sunshine and a hail In me at once; but to the brightest beams

---

1. "Will make us means," i. e., will enable us.
2. "Lavatch," a corruption of La Fache.
3. "Fortune's mood," i. e., the caprice of fortune.
4. "Allow the wind," i. e., stand to leeward of me.
5. "Smiles" is probably used for similes.

1 a quibble on the word Parolles, which in French signifies words.—"Our esteem," i. e., the esteem in which we are held.— "Home," i. e., completely; in its full extent.—* Interview.—* "All repetition," all recollection of the past.—* A day of season, i. e., a reasonable day; a day of uninterrupted change, other fair or foul.
Distracted clouds give way: so stand thou forth;
The time is fair again.

Ber. My high repeated *blames,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;

Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top,
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Snatch, ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord.

Ber. Admiringly.

My liege, at first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eye infixing,
Contempt his sorrowful perspicacity lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favor,
Scorn'd a fair color, or express'd it stolen,
Extended or contracted all proportions,
To a most hideous object. Thence it came,
That she, whom all men prais'd, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

Well excus'd:
That thou didst love her strikes some scores away
From the great 1compt. But love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence,
Crying, that good's that's gone. Our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we offence,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave:
Of our displeasures, to ourselves unjust.
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust:
Our own love, waking, cries to see what's done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our whilome's second marriage-day. [Mess!
Lof. Which better than the first, O, dear heaven,
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cease!
1Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be 2disgested, give a favor from you,
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter.
That she may quickly come.—By my old beard,
And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,
Was a sweet creature; such a ring as this,
The last time ere she took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.
King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't.—
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitated to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Had you that craft to 4reave her
Of what should stand her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,
How'er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I have seen her wear it; and she reckond it
At her life's rate.

Lof. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd: my lord, she never saw it.
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought
I stood 6engag'd; but when I had subscrib'd

To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully
I could not answer in that course of honor
As she had made the overture, she coais'd,
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Phatus himself,
That knows the tinct and multiplying 1medicine,
Hath not in nature's mystery more science,
Than I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's,
Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted 3with't yourself,
Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call'd the saints to scrutiny,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it. [honor.

King. Thou speakest it falsely, as I love mine
And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou art so inhuman,—'twill not prove so;—
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead—what, nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself; could win me to believe
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.—

[Guards seize BERTRAM.

My forepast proofs, bow'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.—Away with him!
We'll sift this matter farther.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit BERTRAM, guarded.

Enter 4 the Gentleman, a Stranger.

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thoughts.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame, or no, I know not:
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath, for four or five & removes, come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the faire grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] "Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rousillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and my honor's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a sederer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone." [DIANA CAPILET."

Lof. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and 3tell him: for this, I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, LaV.
To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these authors.—Go speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exeunt Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afeard, the life of Helen, lady,
Was fouly snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Re-enter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, 1for wives are monsters to you,

That is, the tincture which transmutes base metals to gold, and the matter by which gold is multiplied.—"Removes." I. e. journeys; post-stages.—"Toll him," I. e. pay toll for him.—For is used here for since.
And that you fly them *as you swear them lordship, Yet you desire to marry.—What woman's that! *Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and DIANA. Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine, Derived from the ancient Capitol: [Kneeling. My suit, as I do understand, you know, And therefore know how much I may be pitied. Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honor Both suffer under this complaint we bring, And both shall cease, without your remedy. King. Come hither, 2 county. Do you know these women? Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny But what I know them. Do they charge me farther? Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife? *2[Rising. Ber. She's none of mine, my lord. Dia. If you shall marry, You give away this hand, and that is mine; You give away heaven's own, and those are mine; You give away myself, which is known mine; For by vow am so embodied yours, That she which marries you must marry me; Either both, or none. Laj. [To BERTRAM.] Your reputation comes too short for my daughter: you are no husband for her. Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature, Whom sometime I have laugh'd with. Let your highness Lay a more noble thought upon mine honor, Than so to think that I would stink it here. King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend, Till your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honor, Than in my thought it lies. Dia. Good my lord, Ask him upon his oath, if he do think He had not my virginity. King. What say'st thou to her? Ber. She's impudent, my lord; And was a common gamester to the camp. Dia. He does me wrong, my lord: if I were so, He might have bought me at a common price: Do not believe him. O! behold this ring, Whose high respect, and rich *validity, Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that, He gave it to a commoner o' the camp, If I be one. Count. He blushes, and *tis his. Of six preceding ancestors, that gem Confer'd by testament to the sequel issue, Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife: That ring's a thousand proofs. King. Methought, you said, You saw one here in court could witness it. Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am I to produce So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles. Laj. I saw the man to-day, if man he be. King. Find him, and bring him hither. Ber. What of him? He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debauch'd, Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth. Am I or that, or this, for what he'll utter, That will speak anything? King. She hath that ring of yours. Ber. I think she has; certain it is, I lik'd her, And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth. She knew her distance, and did angle for me, Mudding my eagerness with her restraint, *As," i.e., as soon as.—Decease; die.—Value.—Noted, 17

As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine, Her *infinite cunning, with her *modern grace, Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring, And I had that, which any inferior might At market-price have bought. Dia. I must be patient: You first turn'd o' a first so noble wife, May justly dye me. I pray you yet, (Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband) Send for your ring: I will return it home, And give me mine again. Ber. I have it not. King. What ring was yours, I pray you? Dia. Sir, much like The same upon your finger. King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of late. Dia. And this is it I gave him, being a-bed. King. The story then goes false, you throw it him Out of a casement. Dia. I have spoke the truth. Enter PAROLLES. Ber. My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers. King. You haggle shrewdly, every feather starts Is this the man you speak of? [You.— Dia. Ay, my lord. King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you, Not fearing the displeasure of your master, (Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off) By him, and by this woman here, what you know? Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honorable gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentleman have. King. Come, come; to the purpose. Did he love this woman? Par. 'Faith, sir, he did love her; but how? King. How, I pray you. Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman. King. How is that? Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not. King. As thou art a knife, and no knave.— What an equivocal *companion is this! Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command. Laj. He's a good drunk, my lord, but a naughty orator. Dia. Do you know, he promised me marriage? Par. 'Faith, I know more than I'll speak. King. But wilt thou speak all thou know'st? Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her,—for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of limbo, and of furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me ill will to speak of: therefore, I will not speak what I know. [canst King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou say they are married. But thou art too *fine In thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.— This ring, you say, was yours? Dia. Ay, my good lord. King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you? Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it. King. Who lent it you? Dia. It was not lent me neither. King. Where did you find it then? Dia. I found it not? *Common; ordinary.—"Dict me," i.e., make me fast.— Fellow.—"Too fine," i.e., too full of finesse.
King. If it were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dia.  I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman’s an easy glove, my lord: she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine: I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours, or hers, for ouch I know.

King. Take her away: I do not like her now.

To prison with her; and away with him.—

Unless thou tell’st me where thou had’st this ring,

Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I’ll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I’ll put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, ’twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus’d him all this while?

Dia. Because he’s guilty, and he is not guilty.

He knows I am no maid, and he’ll swear to’t:

I’ll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life!

I am either maid, or else this old man’s wife.

King. [Pointing to Laf.eu.] Stay, royal sir:

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for,

And he shall surely me. But for this lord,

Who hath abused me, as he knows himself,

Though yet he never harm’d me, here I quit him.

He knows himself my bed he hath defil’d,

And at that time he got his wife with child:

Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick:

So there’s my riddle, one that’s dead is quick;

And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exorcist

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is’t real, that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord:

’Tis but the shadow of a wife you see;

The name, and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both! O, pardon! [Kneeling.

Hel. O! my good lord, when I was like this maid, I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;

And, look you, here’s your letter: this it says:

“When from my finger you can get this ring,

And are by me with child,” &c.—This is done:

Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,

I’ll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,

Deadly divorce step between me and you!—

O! my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions, I shall weep anon.

—Good Tom Drum, [To Parolles.] lend me a handkerchief: so, I thank thee. Wait on me home, I’ll make sport with thee: let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones.

King. Let us from point to point this story know,

To make the even truth in pleasure flow.—[er,

[To Diana.] If thou best yet a fresh unscorched flow.

Choose thou thy husband, and I’ll pay thy dower;

For I can guess, that by thy honest aid

Thou kept’st a wife herself, thyself a maid.

Of that, and all the progress, more and less,

Resolvedly more leisure shall express:

All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,

The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish.

3EPilogue BY THE KING.

The king’s a beggar, now the play is done.

All is well ended, if this suit be won,

That you express content; which we will pay,

With strife to please you, day exceeding day:

Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;

Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exeunt omnes.

* Common woman.—* Owner.—* Conjurer; enchantress.

4 That is, hear us without interruption, and take our parts.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Act II.—Scene 3.

Dramatis Personæ.

Orsino, Duke of Illyria.
Sebastian, ¹ Brother to Viola.
Antonio, a Sea Captain, Friend to Sebastian.
A Sea Captain, Friend to Viola.
Valentine, ² Gentlemen attending on the Duke.
Curio, ³ Sir Toby Belch, Uncle to Olivia.
Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Malvolia, Steward to Olivia.
Fabian, ⁴ Servants to Olivia.
Clown, ⁵

Olivia, a rich Countess.
Viola, in love with the Duke.
Maria, Olivia's Woman.

Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and ⁶ Attendants.

Scene, a City in Illyria; and the Sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords. ² Music playing.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on:
Give me excess of it; that surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die:
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
O! it came o’er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Scanning, and giving odor.—Enough! ’tis more: ⁴ [Music ceases.

¹ Value. ² Fantastical to the height. ³ Heated.

Duke. What, Curio?
Cur. The hurt.
Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have.
O! when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she purg’d the air of pestilence:
That instant was I turn’d into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds, [her?
E’r since pursue me.—How now! what news from Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:—
The clement itself, till seven years’ ⁶ heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloistress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother’s dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.
Duke. O! she that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill’d the flock of all affections else
That live in her: when liver, brain, and heart, These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd, (Her sweet perfections) with one self king.—
Away, before me to sweet beds of flowers; Love-thoughts lie rich, when canopied with bowers.

SCENE II.—The Sea-coast.

Enter VIOLA, Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
    Cap. This is Illyria, lady.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, and MARIA.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care’s an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o’ nights: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I’ll confine myself no finer than I am. These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here to her wood.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-cheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He’s as tall a man as any’s in Illyria.

Mar. What’s that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he’ll have but a year in all these ducats: he’s a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie, that you’ll say so! he plays o’ the voile-de-gamboy, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—all most natural; for, besides that he’s a fool, he’s a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to alloy the gust he hath in quarrelling, ’tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels, and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add, moreover, he’s drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece. I’ll drink to her health as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria. He’s a coward, and a coxcomb, that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o’ the toe like a parish-top. What, wench! Castilian vulgo: for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby Belch?

Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew.

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

Sir And. What’s that?

Sir To. My niece’s chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistress Mary Accost,—
Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like mistress' Mall's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galiard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jest; I would not so much as continue water, but in a sink-a-pace. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galiard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a dun-colored stock. Shall we set about some revels?

Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus? that's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper. [Sir And. dances again.] Ha! higher: ha, ha!—excellent! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favors towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humor, or my negligence, that you can in question the continuance of his love Is he inconsistent, sir, in his favors?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter DUKE, CURIO, and ATTENDANTS.

Vio. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile abasho. [Curio, &c., retire.]

—Cesario,
Thou know'st no less but all: I have unchas'd To thee the book even of my secret soul; Therefore, good youth, address thy' gift unto her: Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow, As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous, and keep all civil bounds, Rather than make unprofitable return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then? Duke. Oh! then unfold the passion of my love: Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my woes; She will address it better in thy youth, Than in a mimic of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it, For they shall yet believe thy happy years, That say thou art a man; Diana's lip Is not more smooth, and rubious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill, and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know, thy constellation is right ample. For this affair.—Some four, or five, attend him: All, if you will, for I myself am best, When least in company.—Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord To call his fortunes thine.

T. The "mistress' Mall" of Shakespeare was Mary Frith, a low woman, notorious for her shamelessness, who died in 1659.— Quick dance. Cinque-pace, the name of a dance. Stocking. Alluding to the medical acrostics of the almanacs. Address thy guilt, i.e., go thy way. —Ruddy—Resembling.

*Hilarious triceps.—Sprightly dance.
I'll do my best,
To woo your lady: [Aside.] yet, O, a barful strife! Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in Olivia’s House.

Enter Maria, and Clown.

Mar. Nay; either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colors.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He'll make you want to fear.

Mar. A good b) lenten answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born, of, I fear no colors.

Clo. Where, good mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents. Verily, thou wilt be hanged for being so long absent; or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Mar. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Mar. That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your g) gaskins fall.

Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way: if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve’s flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o’ that. Here comes my lady: make your excuses wisely: you were best. [Exit.

Enter Olivia and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, an’t be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.—God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you’re a dry fool; I’ll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, e) madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest: if he cannot, let the butcher mend him. Any thing that’s mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calumny, so beauty’s a flower.—The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away her.

Oli. Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, e) our counsel r) faciæ monstrosæ: that’s as much as we say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

a) “Barful strife,” i.e., a struggle full of impediments.

b) “Lenten,” i.e., short; Inconic.

c) “Polute” were laces which fastened the hose or breeches.

d) “Gaskins” were large vests, or hose; “Madonna” (fah), i.e., mistress; dames. — That is, The cow does not make the monk.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my monse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness I’ll hide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn’st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother’s death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother’s soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not grow mad?

Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox, but he will not pass his word for twopence, that you are no fool.

Oli. How do you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal! I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he’s out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that now so at these set kind of fools, to be no better than the fools’ e) zanies.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guileless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for g) bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets. There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now, Mercury endue thee with blessing, for thou speakest well of fools.

Re-Enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, which desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the count Orsino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam: ’tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman. Fie on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove crams with brains; for where comes one of thy kin, that has a most weak pli) mater.

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oli. By mine honor, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! What gentleman?

Sir To. ’Tis a gentleman here.—A plague o’ these pickle-bottoms!—How now, sot?

Clo. Good sir Toby,—

f) Daddles.—g) “Bird-bolts” were short thick arrows for shooting birds.—Lying.—The pli mater is a membrane that covers the brain.
Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy.

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery. There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry; what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit Oli.]

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat makes him a fool, the second mads him, and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my cox, for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drown'd: go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit Clown.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Madam, yond' young fellow sweats he will speak with you. 'Tis told me you were sick: he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep: he seems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he's fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, or be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of man kind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner: he'll speak with you, will you, or no?

Oli. Of what personage, and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a 'squad' is before 'tis a peascod, or a 'cooling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him o' e'en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-flavored, and he speaks very shrivishly: one would think, his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach. Call in my gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit.

Re-enter MARRY.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Vio. The honorable lady of the house, which is she?

Oli. Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty: I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that, it is exceedingly well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very disputable even to the least sinister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart; and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

*The sheriff's formerly had *poste at their doors, on which proclamations, &c., were affixed. — A "squad" here means an unripe pod of peas. — A "cooling" is a green unripe apple. — To con it, L. e., to commit it to memory. — Sensitive. — Bad; unfair.

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself: for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission. I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas! I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so a skipping of a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to hulk here a little longer. — Some mollification for your' giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage. I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? What would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appear'd in me, have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as midsummer: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone. We will hear this divinity. [Exit MARRY.] Now, sir; what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady.

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O! I have read it: it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir; such a one! I am at this present: is't not well done?

Unveiling.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on. Lady, you are the cruelest she alive. If you will lead these graces to the grave, and leave the world no copy.

Oli. O! sir, I will not be so hard-hearted. I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will; as, item, two lips indifferent red; item, two grey eyes with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. 'Tis what you are: you are too proud; But, if you were the devil, you are fair.

* Wild; mad. — "To hull here." I. e., to remain here. — An allusion to the diminutive size of Maria. — Blend'd. — To praise," I. e., to approve.
Act II.

Scene I.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly over me: the malignity of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore, I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, sooth, sir. My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy; but I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in: therefore, it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom, I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, we had had so end; but, you, sir, altered that: for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with self-estimation so far to believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish here—she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio! forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orsino’s court: farewell.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino’s court. Else would I very shortly see thee there; But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go.

Scene II.—A Street.

Enter Violante; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Vio. Even now, sir: on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him. And one thing more: that you be never so hardly to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord’s taking of this: receive it so.

Vio. She took no ring of me!—I’ll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir; you peevishly threw it to her

The text contains dialogue between characters from the play "Twelfth Night." The scene focuses on the character of Sebastian, who is introduced and speaks of his journey and past. Antonio and Sebastian discuss their leave-taking, with Sebastian expressing regret and Antonio showing concern for Sebastian’s fate. The scene also includes a brief exchange between Malvolio and Violante, where Malvolio receives a ring from Violante and expresses his displeasure with the situation. The text is a dialogue rich in character development and contains references to earlier events in the play.
Scene III. TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

and her will is, it should be so returned: if it be worth stowing for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it.

Vio. I left no ring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charm'd her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That, methought, her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distinctly. She loves me, sure: the cunning of her passion Invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord's ring? why, he sent her none. I am the man:—if it be so, 'tis, Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it, for the proper 2 false

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-

Cheek.

Sir To. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight is to be up betimes; and dili\nculo 2 surgere, thou know'st,—

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not; but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir To. A false conclusion: I hate it as an un-filled can. To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. 2 Does not our life consist of the four elements?

Sir And. 'Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink. —Marian, I say!—a steed of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, 'tis faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts? Did you never see the picture of we e three?

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spokest of Pigrogromus, of the Vapians passing the equinocial of Quibus: 'twas very good, 'tis faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy lemon; hast it?

Clo. I did impecitoce thy gratitude; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on: there is sixpence for you; let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me, too: 5 if one knight give away sixpence so will I give another: go to, a song.

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good 6 life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

song.

Clo. O, mistress mine! where are you roaming? 6 O! stay, for here your true love's coming,

That can sing both high and low.

Trip no further, pretty sweeting;

Journeys end in lovers' meeting,

Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, 'tis faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 'tis not hereafter;

Present mirth hath present laughter;

What's to come is still unsure:

To-day there lies no plenty;

Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty.

Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, 'tis faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? Shall we raise the night-owl in a catch, that shall draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am a dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our cast be, "Thou Knave."

Clo. "Hold thy peace, thou knave," knight! I shall be constrained't not to call it the knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins, "Hold thy peace."

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good 'faith. Come, begin.

[They sing a catch.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwauling do you keep here? If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a 1 Catinan; we are politicians; Malvolio's a 2 Peg-a-Ramsay, and "Three merry men be we." Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? 'Tilly-valley, lady! "There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!"

[Sing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I: too he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. "O! the twelfth day of December."

[Sing.

Mar. For the love o' God, peace!

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but 7 1 A song of good life; 5 , i.e., a civil and virtuous song.— 2 A Catinan; i.e., a sharper.— 3 Name of an obscene old song.— Fiddle-faddle.

to gable like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your 'coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, or time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she barbers you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorder. If you can separate yourself and your misdeemors, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. " Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone."

[Singing.]

Mar. Nay, good sir Toby.

Clo. " His eyes do show his days are almost done."

[Singing.]

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. " But I will never die."

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. " Shall I bid him go?"

Clo. " What an if you do?"

Sir To. " Shall I bid him go, and spare not?"

Clo. " O! no, no, no, you dare not."

Sir To. Out o' time!—Sir, ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clo. Yes, by saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou art i' the right.—Go, sir: rub your chain with crumbs:—A stoop of wine, Martin!—

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favor at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule: she shall know of it by this hand.

[Exit.]

Mar. Go shake your ears.

Sir And. "Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do't knight: I will write thee a challenge, or I will deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night. Since that youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a byword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know, I can do it.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us: tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O! if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What! for being a Puritan? thy excessive reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no excessive reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time pleaser; on an addicted ass, that conceals state without book, and utters it by great swhats: the best persuaded of himself; so crammed, that's it, that always makes a good voyage of nothing.—Farewell.

Duke. Let all the rest give place.—

[Exeunt Claudio and Attendants.]

Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to yond' same sovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands:
The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her,
Tell her, I hold as gladly as fortune:
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature & pranks her in, attracts my soul.
Vio. But, if she cannot love you, sir?
Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.
Vio. Sooth, but you must. Say, that some lady, as perhaps there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia; you cannot love her;
You tell her so; must she not then be answer'd?
Duke. There is no woman's sides
Can bite the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart
So big to hold so much: they lack retention.
Alas! their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the livid blood, but
That suffers surfeit, cloyment, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much. Make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Duke. Ay, but I know,—
Vio. What dost thou know?
Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?
Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love,—
But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought:
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief. Was not this love, indeed?
We men may say more, swear more; but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will, for still we prove
Much in our vows, but little in our love.
Duke. But did thy sister of her love, my boy?
Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house,
And all the brothers too; and yet I know not—
SIR, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.
To her in haste: give her this jewel; say,
My love can give no place, bide no demay.—[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Olivia's Garden.
Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, signior Fabian.
Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly, rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?
Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favor with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again, and we will fool him black and blue:—shall we not, Sir Andrew?

*4 To the seat," &c., to the heart.—By "favor" the Duke means countenance; but Viola uses the word ambiguously.—"Free maid," i. e., charwomen employed in making lace.—"Silly sooth," i. e., e'en sooth, or simple truth.—"The old age, i. e., the age past.—"The opal is a gem which varies its hue, according to the light in which it is viewed.
Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain.—How now, my boy, for my Indiaman?—

Mal. Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun, practising behavior to his own shadow, this half hour. Observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of Jesting! [The men hide themselves.] Lie thou there; [T' drops a letter] for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit Maria.]

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune: all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?

Sir To. Here's an over-wearing rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkeyscock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue.—

Sir To. Peace! I say.

Mal. To be count Malvolio.—

Sir To. Ah, rogue!—

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace! peace!—

Mal. There is example for't: the lady of the Stracy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Tie on him, Jezebel.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my estate,—

Sir To. O, for a stone bow, to hit him in the eye!—

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown, having come from a day-bed, where I have left Oliva sleeping:—

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!—

Fab. O, peace! peace!—

Mal. And then to have the honor of state; and after a demure travel of regard,—telling them, I know my place, as I would they should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby:—

Sir To. Bolts and shackles!—

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him. I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with my rich jewel. Toby approaches; court'sies there to me.

Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us by th' ears, yet peace!

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow of the lips then?

Mal. Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes, having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech."—

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. "You must amend your drunkenness."—

Sir To. Out, scab!—

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. "Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight."

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. "One sir Andrew."

Sir And. I know 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. [Seeing the letter.]

[Exit Malvolio.

Mal. "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes!"—By your leave, wax.—Soft! — and the impression her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reads.] "I love knows, I love;

But who?

Lips do not move:

No man must know."

"No man must know."—What follows? the number's altered.—"No man must know:"—if this should be thee, Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, b'rock!

Mal. [Reads.] "I may command, where I adore;

But silence, like a Lucrece knife,

With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore:

M, O, A, I, doth sway my life,"

Fab. A fustian riddle.

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.

Mal. "M, O, A, I, doth sway my life."—Nay, but first, let me see,—let me see,—let me see:—

Fab. What a dish of poison has she dressed him?

Sir To. And with what wing the 4stamnyel checks at it!

Mal. "I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no obstruction in this.—And the end,—what should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me,—Sadly!

—M, O, A, I—

Sir To. O, ay, make up that. He is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sir Sowter will cry upon't, for all this, though it be not as rank as a fox.

Mal. M,—Malvolio:—M,—why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say, he would work it out? the cur is excellent at faults.

Mal. M.—But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cudgel O!

Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.

Mal. M, O, A, I,—this simulation is not as the

"The number's altered," i.e. the number of the metrical foot is altered.—"Badger; a term of contempt."—The stamnyel is a species of hawk.—"Any formal capacity," i.e., any one in his sense.—"Sowter" is used here for the name of a hound.
former:—and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft! here follows prose.—[Reads.] "If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinman, surly with servants: let thy tongue tangle arguments of state: put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee, that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desires to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortune’s fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,

'The fortunate-unhappy,'

Day-light and champaign discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read political authors, I will battle sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-device the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me, for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late; she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove, and my stars be praised!—Here is yet a postscript. [Reads.] "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou be not in my love, let it appear in thy smiling: thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I pr’ythee."—Jove, I thank thee.—I will smile: I will do every thing that thou wilt have me.

[Exit.]

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Enter MARIA.

Mar. Nay, but say true: does it work upon him? Sir To. Like aquavitae with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and ’tis a color she abhors; and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. If you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Purgatory, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir And. I’ll make one too. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—OLIVIA’s Garden.

Enter VIOLA, and Clown playing on pipe and tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music. Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, sir; I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir; I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou mayst say, the king lives by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him: or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit; how quickly this latter side may be turned outward!

Vio. Nay, that’s certain: they, that daily nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name’s a word; and to daily with that word, might make my sister wanton. But, indeed, words are very morsels, since bonds disgraced them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the lady Olivia’s fool?

Clo. No, indeed, sir; the lady Olivia has no folly: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands, as pilchards are to herrings, the husband’s the bigger. I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the count Orsino’s.

Clo. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb, like the sun: it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as off with your master, as with my mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I’ll no more with thee. Hold; there’s expenses for thee.

[Giving money.

Clo. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard.

Vio. By my troth, I’ll tell thee: I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of these have breed, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.

Clo. I would play lord Pandar of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vio. I understand you, sir: ‘tis well begg’d.

[Giving more.

"A cheveril glove,“ I. e., a kid glove; an easy-fitting glove.—See the play of Troilus and Cressida.

---

"Stoleth," i. e., skin of a snake.—Adverse; hostile.

"Tang," i. e., with. —It was once the fashion to wear the garters crossed on the leg.—"Champaign," i. e., open country.—"Stake,"—alluding toSir Robert Sidney, who had just returned as ambassador from the Sophy.—Stake.

—Tray-trip was a game of dice.
Vio. This fellow's wise enough to play the fool, and to do that well craves a kind of wit: he must observe their mood on whom he jests, the quality of persons, and the time. Not, like the "haggard," check at every feather that comes before his eye. This is a practice as full of labor as a wise man's art; for folly, that he wisely shows, is fit, but wise men's folly fall'n quite taints their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Sir To. Save you, gentlemen.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Sir And. I hope, sir; you are; and I am yours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should eat, if your trade be to her. Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir: put them to motion. Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter. Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odors on you! Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier. "Rain odors!" well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own best "pregnant" and "vouchsafed" car.

Sir And. "Odors," "pregnant," and "vouchsafed!"—I'll get 'em all three ready.

[Writing in his table-book.

Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess. Oli. My servant, sir? 'Twas never merry world, since lowly frigging was call'd compliment. You're servant to the count Orsino, youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours: Your servant's servant is your servant, madam. Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts, 'Would they were blank, rather than fill'd with me!' Vio. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts on his behalf.

Oli. O! by your leave, I pray you: I bade you never speak again of him; but, would you undertake another suit, I had rather hear you to solicit that, than music from the spheres. Vio. Do, lady. Oli. Give me leave, 'beseech you. I did send, after the last enchantment you did here, a ring in Chase of you: so did I abuse myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you. Under your hard construction must I sit, to force that on you, in a sham'ded-c'd cunning, Which you knew none of yours: what might you have not set mine honor at the stake, [think] and baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving Enough is shown; a spruce, not a bosom, hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak.

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a degree; for 'tis a vulgar proof, that very oft we pity enemies.

Oli. Why then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again. O world, how apt the poor are to be proud! If one should be a prav, how much the better To fall before the lion, than the wolf. [Clock strikes. The clock upbraids me with the waste of time,—Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you; and yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest, Your wife is like to reap a proper man.

There lies your way, due west, Vio. Then westward he!

Gracious and good disposition 'tend your ladyship. You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay:

I pray thee, tell me, what thou think'st of me.

Vio. That you do think you are not what you are. Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Vio. Then think you right: I am not what I am. Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be! Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am? I wish it might; for now I am your fool.

Oli. O! what a deal of scorns looks beautiful In the contempt and anger of his lip! A murderous guilt shows not itself more soon Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon. Cesario, by the roses of the spring, By malice, honor, truth, and every thing, I love thee so, that, maugre all my pride, Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide: Do not extort thy reasons from this clause, For, that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause; But rather, reason thus with reasonetter: Love sought is good, but given unsought is better. Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth, I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth, And that no woman has; nor never none Shall mistress be of it, save I alone. And so adieu, good madam: never more Will I my master's tears to you deplore. [Move Oli. Yet come again; for thou, perhaps, may'st That heart, which now abhors, to like his love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek, and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom: give thy reason. Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favors to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me: I saw't in the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.

* A "haggard" is a hawk not well trained.—\( \text{Lim.} \) — "We are prevented," I. e., our purpose is anticipated.—\( \text{Pregnant:} \) I. e., ready: apprehensive.—\( \text{The last enchantment you did here,} \) I. e., the enchantment your presence worked in my affections.
SCENE III.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.
Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.
Sir And. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me?
Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.
Sir To. And they have been grand jury-men since before Noah was a sailor.
Fab. She did show favor to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormant love, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver. You should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jets, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was wailed: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now still in the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt, either of valor, or policy.
Sir And. An't be any way, it must be with valor, for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a policy.
Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valor: challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; but him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valor.
Fab. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.
Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?
Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou dost him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and many fellows as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down. Go, about it. There be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it.
Sir And. Where shall I find you?
Sir To. We'll call thee at the 4 cubiculo. Go.
[Sir And. Enter Sir Andrew.
Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby.
Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.
Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver it.
Sir To. Never offer me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think, ozen and wain-ropes cannot hale them together. For sir Andrew, if he were open, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.
Feb. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.
[Enter Maria.
Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.
Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond 2 gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegade; for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?
Mar. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school! the church.—I have dogged him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I desire, and villainously. I have seen smile his face into more lines, than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies. You have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hating things at him. I know, my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile, and tak't for a great favor.
Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.

SCENE III.—A Street.
Enter Sebastian and Antonio.
Seb. I would not, by my will, have troubled you; but, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.
Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire, more sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth; and not all love to see you, (though so much, as might have drawn one to a longer voyage) but jealousy what might befall your travel, being skillless in these parts; which to a stranger, unguided, is often rough and unhospitable: my willing love, The rather by these arguments of fear, Set forth in your pursuit.
Seb. My kind Antonio, I can no other answer make, but, thanks, 2 And thanks, still thanks; and very oft good turns Are shuffled off with such uncourteous pay; But, were my 3 wealth, as is my conscience, firm, You should find better dealing. What's to do? Shall we go see the relics of this town?
Ant. To-morrow, sir; best first go see your lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night. I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials, and the things of fame, That do renown this city.
Ant. Would, you'd pardon me. I do not without danger walk these streets. Once, in a sea-fight 'gainst the 4 country's galleys I did some service; of such note, indeed, That were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answer'd.
Seb. Belike, you slew great number of his people.
Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature, As yet at the quality of the time, and quarell, Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answer'd in repaying What we took from them: which, for trafficke's sake, Most of our city did: only myself stood out; For which, if 1 be 4 hasted in this place, I shall pay dear.
Seb. Do not, then, walk too open.
Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir; here's my purse. In the south suburbs, at the Elephant, Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet.
[Enter Tedge.
Whileas you beguile the time, and feed your knowl With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.
Seb. Why your purse?
Ant. Hallo! your eye doth all light upon some toy You have desire to purchase; and your story, I think, is not for idle markets, sir.

2 An allusion to a Map engraved for Linschoten's voyage, the first in which the Eastern Islands are included; published in 1598. — Lopping; transgresing.
SCENE IV.—Olivia's Garden.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says, he'll come. How shall I feast him? what bestow of him? For what he bought more off, than begg'd, or borrow'd. I speak too loud.—Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and a civil, and suits well for a servant with my fortunes.—

Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He is coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is sure possess'd, madam.

Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave? Mar. No, madam; he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come, for sure the man is tainted in's wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.]—I am If sad and merry madness equal be. — [To mad as he, Enter Malvolio 2 and Maria.

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet 'hath it,' "Please one, and please all."

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? Mal. To bed? ny, sweet-heart, and I'll come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Mal. At your request! Yes; nightingales answer daws.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. "Be not afraid of greatness:"—'Twas well writ.

Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. "Some are born great,"—

Oli. Ha?

Mal. "Some achieve greatness,"—

Oli. What say'st thou?

Mal. "And some have greatness thrust upon them."

Oli. Heaven restore thee!

Mal. "Remember, who commended thy yellow stockings?":—

Oli. Thy yellow stockings?

Mal. "And wished to see thee cross-gartered."

Oli. Cross-gartered?

Mal. "Go to: thou art made, if thou desirest to be so;"

Oli. Am I made?

Mal. "If not, let me see thee a servant still."

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer's madness.

[Enter Servant.

Scr. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino's is returned. I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I think to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him. I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry. [Exit OLIVIA and Maria.

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than sir Toby to look to me? This concurs exactly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that he may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble slough," says she:—"be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants, let thy tongue hang with arguments of state,—put thyself into the trick of singularity:"—and consequently sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have "limed her;" but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, "Let this fellow be looked to:" 'fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, everything adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulity, under the circumstances,—but can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me, and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the door of this, and he is to be thanked.

Recuerter Maria, with Sir TODY BELCH, and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possess him, yet I'll speak to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is.—How is't with you, sir? how is't with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my privacies: go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to: peace! peace! we must deal gently with him; let me alone.—How do you, Malvolio? how is't with you? What, man! defy the civil: consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La, you! an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God, he be not bewitched!

Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mar. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. P'r'rythee, bold thy peace: this is not the way. Do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my lackawock? how dost thou, sweet heart?

Mal. Sir!

Sir To. Ay, Birdly, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at 1 cherry-pit with Satan. Hang him, foul 'collier!

*4 "Limed her," I. e., caught her as a bird with bird-lime. — "Fellow" was used for companion, as well as in a derogatory sense.—"My beau cox," I. e., my fine follower.—"Chuck," is a term of endearment.—"Cherry-pit" was played by pitching cherry-stones into a hole.—"Collier," in Shakespeare's time, was a term of the highest reproach,
Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good sir Toby, get him to pray.
Mal. My prayers, minx!
Mar. No, I warrant you; he will not hear of good
Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element. You shall know more hereafter. [Exit.

Sir To. Is't possible?
Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.
Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the disease, man.
Mar. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air, and taint.
Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.
Mar. The house will be the quieter.

SCENE II.
[Enters Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.]

Sir And. Here's the challenge; read it: I warrant, there's vinegar and pepper in't.
Fab. Is't so saucy!
Sir And. Ay, it's, I warrant him: do but read.
Sir To. Give me. [Reads.] "Youth; whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurril fellow."
Sir To. Good, and valiant.
Sir To. "Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't."
Fab. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of the law.
Sir To. "Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for."
Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense.
Sir To. "I will way-lay thee going home; where, if it be thy chance to kill me,"—
Sir To. Good.
Sir To. "Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain."
Fab. Still you keep o' the windy side of the law: good.
Sir To. "Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou seest him, and thy sworn enemy, Andrew Ague-cheek." If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. I'll give 't him.
Mar. You may have very fit occasion for't: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.
Sir To. Go to, sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-baile. So soon as ever thou seest him, draw, and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent, sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away!
Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.

Sir To. Now, will not I deliver his letter; for the behavior of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less; therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a cuphole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheek a notable report of valor, and drive the gentleman, (as, I know, his youth will aptly receive it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuousity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cock-atrixes.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece. Give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.
Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Execut Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria. Recenter Olivia, with Viola.

Ol. I have said too much unto a heart of stone, And hid mine honor too unchary on't.

There's something in me that reproves my fault. But such a headstrong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Via. With the same bavior that your passion bears, Go on my master's griefs.

Ol. Here; wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture: Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you. [Ture. And, I beseech you, come again to-morrow. What shall you ask of me, that I'll deny, That honour saith, may upon asking give? Via. Nothing but this; your true love for my master. Ol. How with mine honor may I give him that, Which I have given to you?

Via. I will acquit you.

Ol. Well, come again to-morrow. Fare thee well: A fend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.

Rec. Sir Toby Belch, and Fabian.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.
Via. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interpreter, full of despight, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Dismount thy suit; be yare in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.
Via. You mistake, sir: I am sure, no man hath any quarrel to me. My remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wraith, can furnish man withal.

Via. I pray you, sir, what is he?
Sir To. He is a knight, dubbed with unhatch'd rapier, and on carpet consideration, but he is a devil in private brawl: souls and bodies hath he disrobed three, and his incensement at this moment is so implaceable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hob, 'tob, is his word; give't, or take't.

Via. I will retire again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrels purposely on others to taste their valor; belike, this is a man of that quick.
Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury: therefore, get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore, on, strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that’s certain, or forwear to iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Toby.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrament, but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valor. He is, indeed, sir, the most skillful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk with me here? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for’t: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew hanging back.

Sir To. Why, man, he’s a very devil, I have not seen such a flegato. I have a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stick in, with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say, he has been fencing to the Soply.

Sir And. Pox on’t, I’ll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on’t, if I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I’d have seen him damn’d ere I’d have challenged him. Let him let the matter alip, and I’ll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I’ll make the motion. Stand here; make a good show on’t. This shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside.] Marry, I’ll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola, unwittingly.

I have his horse [*To Fab.] to take up the quarrel. I have persuaded him, the youth’s a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; [To Sir Toby] and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There’s no remedy, sir; [To Viola] he will fight with you for oath’s sake. Marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce be worth talking of: therefore, draw for the supportance of his vow: he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside.] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there’s no remedy: the gentleman will, for his honor’s sake, have one

*Decision. — Adversary. — Virago. — The stack in,
1 e., the stocatto, an Italian fencing-term. — "He pays you,
1 e., he hits you, — "is as horribly conciliated," 1 e., has as horrible a conception.

boon with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to’t.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath!

Vio. I do assure you, ‘tis against my will.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Put up your sword.—If this young gentleman have done offence, I take the fault on me:

If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing.

Sir To. You, sir? why, what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more, Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Drawing.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O, good sir Toby, hold! here come the officers.

Sir To. I’ll be with you anon.

Vio. Pray, sir; put your sword up, if you please.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir;—and, for that I promised you, I’ll be as good as my word. He will be more easily, and reign well.

1 Off. This is the man: do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot: I know your favor well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.—

Take him away, he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey: [To Viola.] This comes with seeking you;

But there’s no remedy: I shall answer it.

What will you do? Now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse. It grieves me Much more for what I cannot do for you, Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz’d, But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have shew’d me here, And part, being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my lean and low ability, I’ll lend you something. My having is not much: I’ll make division of my present with you.

Hold, there’s half my coffers.

Ant. Will you deny me now? Is’t possible, that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, Lest that it make me so unsound a man, As to upbraid you with those kindnesses That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none; Nor know I you by voice, or any feature. I hate ingratitude more in a man, Than lying vaine, babbling drunkenness, Or any inti of vice whose strong corruption Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O, heavens themselves!

2 Off. Come, sir: I pray you, go. [See here, Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth, that you I snatch’d one half out of the jaws of death; Reliev’d him with such sanctity of love, And to his image, which, methought, did promise Most veritable worth, did I devotion. [Away]

1 Off. What’s that to us? The time goes by:

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!—

"By the duello," L. e., by the laws of the duell.—"An undertaker," i.e., one who undertakes the quarrel of another. — Face; countenance. — Fortune; possessions.
Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
In nature there's no blemish, but the mind;
None can be call'd deformed, but the unkind:
Virtue is beauty; but the beastious evil
An empty trunk; "o' furn'ious'd' it by the devil.
1 Off. The man grows mad: away with him!
Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exit Officers, with Antonio."
Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly,
That he believes himself; so do not I.
Prove true, imagination, O! prove true,
That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!
Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian;
we'll whisper o'er a couple or two of most sage saws.
Vio. He nam'd Sebastian; I my brother know
Yet living in my glass; even such, and so,
In favor was my brother; and he went
Still in this fashion, color, ornament,
For him I imitate. O! if it prove,
Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love!
[Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears, in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him, and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward; religious in it.

Sir And. "Sli'd, I'll after him again, and beat him.
Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thine sword.
Sir And. An I do not,—
[Exit.

Fab. Come, let's see the event.
Sir To. I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to; thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither.—Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pr'ythee, vent thy folly somewhere else:
Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool.
Vent my folly! I am afraid this great labourer will prove a cockney. I pr'ythee now, angir'd thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Seb. I pr'ythee, foolish 'Greek; depart from me.
There's money for thee: if thou tarry longer,
I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand.—These wise men, that give fools money, get themselves a good report after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby, and Fabian.

Sir And. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's for you. [Striking Sebastian.

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there.
Are all the people mad? [Beating Sir Andrew.
Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw thy dagger o'er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight. I would not be in some of your coats for two-pence.

[Exit Clown.

Sir To. Come on, sir! hold! [Holding Sebastian.
Sir And. Nay, let him alone; I'll go another way to work with him: I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria.
Though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, Sir, I will not let you go. Come, your young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed. Come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?

[Breaking away.

Sir To. What, what, Sir? Nay then, I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

[They draw and fence.

Enter Olivia.

Oli. Hold, Toby! on thy life, I charge thee, hold!
Sir To. Madam—

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch!
Fit for the mountains, and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Out of my
Be not offended, dear Cesario.— [sight!—

Tudesby, begone!—I pr'ythee, gentle friend, [Exit Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivill, and unjust e xtent
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby May'st smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go:
Do not deny. He shew'd his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.

Seb. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?
Or I am mad, or else this is a dream.

Let fancy still my sense in Lethe steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep.

Oli. Nay, come, I pr'ythee. Would thou'dst be ru'd by me!

Oli. Madam, I will.

Oli. O! say so, and so be. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard: make him believe thou art sir Topas, the curate: do it quickly; I'll call sir Toby the whilst.

[Exit Maria.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will m' dissemble myself in': and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. [Putting it on.] I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student; but to be said an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as a say a careful man, and a great scholar.
The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. Love bless thee, master parson.

Clo. Bonas dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very witty

"Radesby," I e., rude fellow.—"Violence." — "Botch'd up," i.e., made up.—"I'll betide." - Heart and heart were formerly written alike.— "What relish is in this?" I e., what judgment am I to make of it?—Disguise.— Con-competitors.

said to a niece of king Gorboede, "That, that is, is;" so I, being master parson, am master parson, for what is that, but that? and is, but is?
Sir To. To him, sir Topas.
Clo. What, ho! I say.—Peace in this prison.
Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.
Mal. [Within.] Who calls there?
Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.
Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.
Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man. Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?
Sir To. Well said, master parson.
Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged. Good sir Topas, do not think I am mad: they have laid me here in hideous darkness.
Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Saturn! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones, that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Say'st thou that house is dark?
Mal. As hell, sir Topas.
Clo. Why, it hath 4 bay-windows transparent as barriacades, and the clear stories towards the south-north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?
Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas. I say to you, this house is dark.
Clo. Madman, thou erectest: I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are: make the trial of it in any constant b question.
Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild-fowl?
Mal. That the soul of our grandam might happily inhabit a bird.
Clo. What thinkest thou of his opinion?
Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.
Clo. Fare thee well: remain thou still in darkness. Thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
[Closing the door.
Mal. Sir Topas! sir Topas!—
Sir To. My most exquisite sir Topas.
Clo. Nay, I am for all 4 waters.
Mar. Thou might'st have done this without thy beard, and gown: he sees thee not.
Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would, we were 3 all well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now as far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue without any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.
Clo. "Hoy Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does." [Singing.
Mal. Fool!
Clo. "My lady is unkind, perdy."
Mal. Fool!
Clo. "Alas, why is she so?"

ACT IV.

Mal. Fool, I say.
Clo. "She loves another"?—Who calls, ha?
[Opening the door.
Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper. As I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.
Clo. Master Malvolio!
Mal. Ay, good fool.
Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?
Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.
Clo. But as well then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.
Mal. They have here 4 propounded me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, assess! and do all they can to face me out of my wits.
Clo. Advise you what you say: the minister is here. 5[Speaking as sir Topas.]—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavor thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bubble bubble.
Mal. Sir Topas,—
Mal. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.
—Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God b' wi' you, good sir Topas.—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.
Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say.
Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am about for speaking to you.
Mal. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper: I tell thee, I am as well in my wits, as any man in Ilyria.
Mal. Well-a-day, that you were, sir!
Mal. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady: it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.
Clo. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit it?
Mal. Believe me, I am not: I tell thee true.
Clo. Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.
Mal. Fool, I'll require it in the highest degree: I pr'ythee, be gone.
Clo. 6[Speaking.] I am gone, sir,
And anon, sir,
I'll be with you again,
?With a trice,
Like the old wise,
Your need to sustain;
Who with danger of balth,
In his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil:
Like a mad lad,
Pore thy nails, and,
Aid, Goodman Driple.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—OLIVIA'S Garden.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun;
This pearl she gave me, I do feel't, and see't;
And though 'tis wonder that envelops me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then?
I could not find him at the Elephant;
There he was, and there I found this 1 credit,
That he did range the town to seek me out.
His counsel now might do me golden service:

* * *
5[Speaking as sir Topas.]—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavor thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bubble bubble.

Scene 1.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes, And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad; Or else the lady’s mad: yet, if ’twere so, She could not away her house, command her follow—Take, and give back; and thus despatch affairs, With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, As, I perceive, she does. There’s something in’t, That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Olivia and a Priest.

Olt. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean Now go with me, and with this holy man, [well, Into the chantry by; there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Purgit me the full assurance of your faith; That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace: he shall conceal it, While you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth.—What do you say? Scb. I’ll follow this good man, and go with you, And having sworn trueth, ever will be true. Olt. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens shine, That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exit Clown.

ACT V.

Scene I.—The Street before Olivia’s House.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter. Clo. Good master Fabian, grant me another request. Fab. Any thing. Clo. Do not desire to see this letter. Fab. This is, to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends? Clo. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings. Fab. Do you know thee well: how dost thou, my good fellow? Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends. Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be? Clo. Marry, sir, they persuade me, and make an ass of me; now, my foes tell plainly I am an ass; so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused; so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then, the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, sir; no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

a Ressam. — b Servants. — c Deceptive. — d The “chantry” was a little chapel, or particular altar in some cathedral or parochial church, endowed for the purpose of having masses sung therein for the souls of the founders. — e Until. — f Troth; fidelity. — g Four negatives make your two affirmatives. — h Selden’s kisses are accompanied by “No” and “Don’t,” negatives which, by repetition, constitute an affirmative.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me: there’s gold.

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O! you give me ill counsel.

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double dealer: there’s another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the trip, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of St. Bennett, sir, may put you in mind—one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty, till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think, that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness; but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me. Duke. That face of his I do remember well: yet, when I saw it last, it was bosom’d. As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war. A hawling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught and bulk unprizable, With which such a scathful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy, and the tongue of loss, Cried fame and honor on him.—What is the matter?

1 Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio, That took the Phoenix, and her freight, from Candy; And this is he, that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg, Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state, In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side, But, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me; I know not what ’twas, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate, thou salt-water thief, What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. — Orsino, noble sir, Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me: Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate, Though, I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino’s enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither: That most ingrateful boy there, by your side, From the rude sea en’s enraged and foamy mouth Did I redeem: a wreck past hope he was. From the rude sea en’s enraged and foamy mouth Did I redeem: a wreck past hope he was.

Clown. Duke, I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him, when he was beset: Where being apprehended, his false cunning (Not meaning to partake with me in danger) Taught him to lose his use out of his quittance, And grew a twenty-years-removed thing, While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use Not half an hour before.

b Contemptible. — c Mischief; destructive. — d Freight.

— e — "Desperate of shame and state," i.e., forgetful of his character and condition. — f Brabble, i.e., brawl; squabbly. — g Dire.
Duke. When came he to this town?
No interim, not a minute's vacancy,
Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth!—
But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are madness:
Three months this youth hath tended upon me;
But more of that anon.—Take him aside.
Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?—
Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Duke. Still so cruel?
Oli. Still so constant, lord.
Duke. What, to perverseness? you uncivil lady,
To whose ingrate and unsuspicious altar
My soul the faithful'st offerings hath breathed out,
That 'er devotion tender'd. What shall I do?
Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall become him.
Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to the Egyptian chief at point of death,
Kill what I love? a savage jealousy,
That sometimes savors nobly.—But hear me this:
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And that I partly know the instrusive
That screws me from my true place in your favor,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still;
But this my minion, whom, I know, you love,
And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly,
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye,
Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.—
Come boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mischief:
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spite a raven's heart within a dove.
[Going.
Oli. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly,
To do you rest a thousand deaths would die.
[Following.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?
Oli. More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all inore, than 'er I shall love wife.
If I do feign, you witnesses above
Punish my life for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ah me! detested? how am I beguil'd!
Oli. Who does beguile you? who does you wrong?
Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?—
Call forth the holy father?
[Exit Attendant.
[To Viola.
Oli. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay.
Duke. Husband!
Oli. Ay, husband: can he that deny?
Duke. Her husband, sirrah?
Oli. No, my lord, not I.
Oli. Alas! it is the baseness of thy fear,
That makes thee strangle thy proprety.
Fear not, Cesario: take thee fortunes up;
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.—O, welcome, father!

Re-enter Attendant with the Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold (though lately we intimated
To keep in darkness, what occasion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe) what thou dost know,
Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract 4 and eternal bond of love,
Confirm'd by mutual joiner of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips,
Strengthen'd by interchanges of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Seal'd in my function, by my testimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have travelled but two hours.

Duke. O, thou dissembling emb! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.
Oli. My lord, I do protest,—
Oli. O! do not swear:
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew Auge-cheek, with his head broken.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon! send one presently to sir Toby.
Oli. What's the matter?
Sir And. He has broke my head across, and has given sir Toby a bloody cocxcomb too.
For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, sir Andrew?
Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario.
We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil himself.

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

Sir And. Oli's liftings! here he is.—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by sir Toby.
Oli. Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you:
You drew your sword upon me, without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir And. If a bloody cocxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me! I think you set nothing by a bloody cocxcomb.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, drunk, led by the Clown.

Here comes sir Toby halting; you shall hear more:
but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you 'othergates than he did.
Duke. How now, gentleman; how 'is't with you?
Sir To. That's all one: he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sot, did'st see Dick surgeon, so't?
Clo. O! he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago, his eyes were set at eight 'z the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue, and a passey-measures, pavin.
I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?
Sir And. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help? an ass-head, and a cocxcomb, and a knife! a thin-faced knave, a gull!
Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.
[Exeunt Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian 5 (all start).

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;

1 in ancient espousals the man received as well as gave a ring—"Thy case," i. e., thy exterior. —Otherwise,—The "passe-measures pavin" was a grave, solemn dance; and sir Toby means that the surgeon is a rogue, and a grave, solemn cocxcomb.
But had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:
Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two
A natural 3 perspective, that is, and is not.
[person;

Seb. Antonio! O, my dear Antonio!
How have the hours rack’d and tortured me,
Since I have lost thee!

Ant. Sebastian are you?

Seb.

Ant. How have you made division of yourself?—
An apple cleft in two is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

Oli. Most wonderful!

Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and everywhere. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour’d.—
[To Viola.] Of 3 charity, what kin are you to me?
What countryman? what name? what parentage?

Vio. Of Messaline; Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too;
So went he 5 suited to his watery tomb,
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to right us.

Seb. A spirit I am indeed;
But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the tomb I did partake.
When have you a woman, as the rest goes even;
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say—thrice welcome, drowned Viola!

Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine.

Vio. And died that day, when Viola from her birth
Had number’d thirteen years.

Seb. O! that record is lively in my soul.
He finished, indeed, his mortal act
That day that made my sister thirteen years.

Vio. If nothing 7 lets to make us happy both,
But this my masculine usurp’d attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere, and jump,
That I am Viola: which to confirm,
I’ll bring you to a 4 captain’s in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; and, by whose gentle help
I was preserve’d to serve this noble count.
All the occurrences of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady, and this lord.

Seb. So comes it, lady, [To Olivia.] you have
But nature to her bias 2 true in that. [been mistook;
You would have been contracted to a maid,
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv’d;
You are betroth’d both to a maid and man.

Duke. Be not amaz’d; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, and yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck.

Boy, [To Viola.] thou hast said to me a thousand
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me. [times,
Vio. And all those sayings will I ever-swear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that o’erd continent, the fire
That severs day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman’s weeds.

Vio. The captain, that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my maid’s garments: he, upon some action,
Is now in durance at Malvolio’s suit,

* A “perspective” formerly meant a glass that assisted the sight in any way.

* Of charity; i.e., out of charity, tell me. Dressed.—Hindes.

A gentleman, and follower of my lady’s.
Oli. He shall embrace him.—Fetch Malvolio
And yet, alas! now I remember me,
[heigh—They say, poor gentleman, he’s much distract.
A most 4 distracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish’d his—

Re-enter Cloten, with a letter.

How does he, sirrah?

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Beezlebub at the stave’s end, as well as a man in his case may do.
He has here writ a letter to you: I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman’s epistles are no gospel, so it 5 skills not much when they are delivered.

Oli. Open it, and read it.

Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman:—[Reads.] “By the Lord, madam,

Oli. How now? art thou mad?

Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must al

too—

Oli. Pr’ythee, read i’ th’ right wits.

Clo. So I do, madam; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore 6 perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah.

[To Fabian.

Fab. [Reads.] “By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cous-lin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please.
I leave my duty a little unhought of, and speak out of my injury.

“The madly-used Malvolio.”

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savors not much of distraction.

Oli. See him deliver’d, Fabian: bring him hither.

[Exit Fabian.

My lord, so please you, these things farther thought
To think me as well a sister as a wife,
One day shall crown the 4 alliance, and so please you,
Here at my house, and at my proper cost. [offer.—

Duke. Madam, I am most apt t’ embrace your [To Viola.] Your master quits you; and, for your service done him.

So much against the 5 mettle of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call’d me master for so long,
Here is my hand; you shall from this time be
Your master’s mistress.

Oli.

A sister,—you are she.

Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio, with straw about him, as from prison.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oli. Ay, my lord, this same.

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Oli.

Have I, Malvolio? no.

Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you peruse that letter:
You must not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase;
Or say, ‘tis not your seal, nor your invention:

It skills not much,” i.e., it matters not much.—

You must allow eez,” i.e., you must allow me to assume the voice, or tone of a madman.—Consider.—Disposition; constitution.
You can say none of this. Well, grant it then, And tell me, in the modesty of honor, Why you have given me such clear lights of favor, Bade me come smiling, and cross-garter'd to you, To put on yellow stockings, and to frown Upon sir Toby, and the *lighter people? And, acting this in an obedient hope, Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd, Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest, And made the most notorious *geck, and gull, That e'er invention play'd on? Tell me why. Oli. Alas! Malvolio, this is not my writing, Though, I confess, much like the character; But, out of question, 'tis Maria's hand: And now I do be think me, it was she [ing, First told me thou wast mad; thou cam'st in smil- And in such forms which here were *preimpos'd Upon thee in the letter. Pr'ythee, be content: This *practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee; But when we know the grounds and authors of it, Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge Of thine own cause. Fab. Good madam, hear me speak; And let no quarrell, nor no brawl to come, 'Taint the condition of this present hour, Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby, Set this device against Malvolio here, Upon some stubborn and uncountenace parts We had conceived against him. Maria writ The letter at sir Toby's great importance; In recompense whereof he hath married her. How with a sportful malice it was follow'd, May rather pluck on laughter than revenge, If that the injuries be justly weigh'd, That have on both sides past. Oli. Alas, poor soul, how have they *baffled thee! Clo. Why "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them," I was one, sir, in this interlude; one sir Topas, sir; but that's all one.---*By the Lord, fool, Inferior.---"Geck," i. e., but for ridicule.---*"Practiser," i. e., joke; hom.---*Importunacy.---Chanted.

I am not mad;"—But do you remember? "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagg'd:" And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be reveng'd on the whole pack of you. [Exit. Oli. He hath been most notoriously abus'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entertain him to a peace. He hath not told us of the captain yet; When that is known and golden time "convents, A solemn combination shall be made Of our dear souls:—mean time, sweet sister, We will not part from hence.—Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man, But when in other liabits you are seen, Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen. [Exeunt. Clown sings, 5 to pipe and tabor.

When that I was and a little tiny boy, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, A foolish thing was but a toy, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, Against knaves and thieves men shut their gate, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wife, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, By swaggering could I never thrive, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, With toss-pots still I had drunken head, For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, But that's all one, our play is done, And we'll strive to please you every day.

*"Convents," i. e., shall serve, agree, be convenient.

SCENE, sometimes in Sicilia, sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves: for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been so royally attorney'd, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies, that they have seemed to be to—

"Royally attorney'd," i.e., nobly supplied by substitution of embassies.
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month behind the gest
Prefix'd for parting: yet, good deeds, Leontes,
I love thee not a jot of the clock behind
What lady should her lord. You'll stay?

Pol. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not, verily.

Pol. Verily!

You put me off with limber vows; but I,
Counsels, Though you would seek t' unsphere the stars with Should yet say, "Sir, no going;" Verily,
You shall not go: a lady's verily is
As potent as a lord's! Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner,
Not like a guest, so you shall pay your fees, [you?
When you depart, and save your thanks. How say
My prisoner, or my guest? by your dread verily,
One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest then, madam:
To be your prisoner should import offending:
Which is for me less easy to commit,
Than you to punish.

Her. Not your jailor, then,
But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys;
You were pretty lordlings then.

Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two lads, that thought there was not more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the verier wag o' the two?
Pol. We were as twin'd lambs, that did frisk t' the sun,
And blest the one at th' other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
That any did. Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rear'd
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven
Boldly, "not guilty!" the impostion clear'd,
Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O! my most sacred lady,
Temptations have since then been born to's; for
In those ungod'd days was my wife a girl:
Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to 'boot!

Of this make no conclusion, lest you say,
Your queen now I am devilish yet, go on;
Th' offences we have made you do, we'll answer;
If you first sin'd with us, and that with us
You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not
With any, but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet? [Coming forward.
Her. He'll stay, my lord.
At my request he would not.
Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok't
To better purpose.

Her. Never!

Leon. Never, but once.

Her. What? have I twice said well? when was't before?
I pr'ythee, tell me. Gram's with praise, and make's

"Over a vast," i. e., over a vast sea, or a wide space.—
"Play't," i. e., given the subject of the king health and joy.—
"Seeping," i. e., sprinking.
As fast as tame things: one good deed, dying tongue —
Slainkters a thousand wanting upon that.
[Less.]
Our praises are our wages: you may ride's.
With one soft kiss a thousand forloons, ere
With spar we clear an acre. But to the 2 good: —
My last good deed was to cut my hat's stay.
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace!
But once before I spoke to the purpose: When?
Nay, let me have it; I long.

Leon. Why, that was when
Three crabb'd months had sound'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And say, and thou my love? then didst thou utter
"I am yours for ever" — It is Grace, indeed.

Her. Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice:
The one for ever cudn't a royal husband,
Th' other for some while a friend.

[Giving her hand to Polixenes.]

Leon. To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods.
I have temper cordis on me: — my heart dances,
But not for joy, — not joy. — This entertainment
May a free face put on; derive a liberty
From heartlessness, from bounty's fertile bosom,
And well become the agent: 't may, I grant;
But to be paddling palms, and pinchling fingers,
A dust to dust, and turn it the slovenliest smile's —
As in a looking-glass — and then to sigh, as twere
The b mot of the deer: O! that is entertainment
My bosom likes not, nor my brows. — Mamillius,
Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Why, that's my 4 cock. — 'T feaks!
They say, it is a copy out of mine. [thy nose —]
Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain;
And yet the steer, the helier, and the calf,
Are all calld 4. — Neat. — Still viginalling

[Observing Polixenes and Hermione.]

Upon his palm — How now, you wanton calf?
Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough 4 push, and the 4 shoots
That I have,
To be full like me: — yet, they say, we are Almost as like as eggs: women say so,
That will say anything: but were they false
As 'four dead dogs, as wind, as waters; false
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true
To say this boy were like me. — Come, sir page,
Look on me with your wellkin eye: sweet villain!
Most dear'st! my 4 collop! — Can thy dam? — may't be
The affection? thy intention stabs the 4 centre:
Thou dost make possible things not so bold,
Commodious to our dreams: — (how can this be?)
With what's unreal thou coextive art,
And follow'st nothing. Then, 'tis very 4 credent,
Thou mayst cojoin with something; and thou dost,
And that by combination; and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brains,
And hardening of my brows.

What means Sicilia?

Pol. What something seems unsettled.

Her. How, my lord?

Leon. What cheer? how is't with you, best brother? [Holding his forehead.

Her. As if you held a brow of much distinction:

Pol. Are you moved, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest. —
How sometimes nature will betray its folly, [Aside.

Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines! [To them.

Of my boy's face, my thoughts I did recoll
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbearech'd,
In my green velvet, in my half, my young mistress,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.

How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This 4 square, this gentleman. — Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for 4 money?

Mam. No, my lord, I' ll fight. [My brother.

Leon. You? why? happy man be his 4 pole! —

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir,
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all.
He makes a July's day short as December;
And with his varying childhood curces in me
Thoughts that would thick my blood.

Leon. So stands this square office'd with me. We two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your graver steps. — Hermione,
How thou lov'st us, show in our brother's welcome:

Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap.

Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's 4 Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,
We are yours: the gard'en: shall'st attend you there?

Leon. To your own beets dispose you: you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky. — [Aside. I am angling now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line,
Go to, go to!
How she holds up the 4 neb, the bill to him;
And arms her with the boldness of a wife
To her 4 allowing husband. — Gone already!

[Excust Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.

inch-thick, kace-decap, o'er head and ears a fork'd one

Go play, boy, play; — thy mother plays, and I
Play too, but so disgraced a part, whose issue
Will biss me to my grave: contempt and clamor
Will be my knell. — Go play, boy, play. — There have Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckoldes ere now; [Been.
And many a man there is, (even at this present,
Now, while I speak this) holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been shrew'd in his absence,
And his pond fish'd by his next neighbor, by Sir Smile, his neighbor. Nay, there's comfort in't, Whiles other men have gates, and those gates open'd,
As mine, against their will. Should all despair
That have revoluted wives, the teath of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physic for't here is none:
It is a lowdy planet, that will strike
Where 'tis, and so prostrate and 'tis powerful, think it,
From east, west, north, and south: be it concluded,
No barricado for a belly: know it;

"Squash," here means an unripe pea-pod. — [Will you take eggs for money? i. e., Will you suffer yourself to be imposed upon? — Puck is in his happiness by his portion?

— Heir apparent; next claimant. — Mouth. — Approving.

— A forfed one, i. e., a horned one; a cuckold.
It will let in and out the enemy,
With bag and baggage. Many a thousand on's
Have the disease, and feel't not.—How now, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.—

What! Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamillius. 'Tis not an honest man.

[Exit Mamillius.

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold:
When you cast out, it still came a home.

Leon. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made
His answerless more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?—
They're here with me already; whispering, round—
Sicilia is a' so—forth. 'Tis far gone, [ing,
When I shall <& gust it last.—How can't, Camillo,
That he did stay?

Cam. At the great queen's entertainment.

Leon. At the queen's, be't; good should be part—
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken [next;
By any understanding pate but thine!
For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in
More than the common blocks:—not noted, isn't,
But of the finer natures? by some several,
Of head-piece extraordinary? lower messes,
Perchance, are to this business parblind: say,

Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most understand Bohemia stays here longer.

Leon. Ha?

Cam. Stays here longer.

Leon. Ay, but why?

Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entertainment
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy The entertainment of your mistress?—satisfy?—
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils, wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleans'd my bosom: from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd; but we have been Deceive'd in thy integrity, deceiv'd
In that which seems so.

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To bide upon't,—thou art not honest; or,
If thou inclin' st that way, thou art a coward,
Which boxes honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd; or else thou must be counted
A servant grafted in my serious trust,
And therein negligent; or else a fool,
That setst a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And takst it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful:
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the infinite doings of the world,
Sometimes is forlorn, as of their affairs, my lord,
If ever I were well-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. These, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of: but, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage; if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leon. Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that's past doubt; you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn) or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumor
Cannot be mute) or thought, (for cogitation
Resides not in that man that does not think it)
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impatiently negative.
To hasten in your car, no, nor thought, then say,
My wife's a hobby-horse; deserves a name
As rank as any flux-wench, that puts to Before her troth-plight: say't, and justify.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present veneration taken. 'Shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning check to check? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sigh? (a note infallible
Of breaking honesty) horsing foot on foot?
Slacking in corners? wishing checks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind
With the pin and web, but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
Why, then the world, and all that is in't, is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothings
If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my lord, be cur'd Of this discase'd opinion, and betimes;
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leon. Say, it be; 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my lord.

Leon. It is; you lie, you lie: I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
Pronounce thee a gross, a mendacious, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering tormentor, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both: Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.

Cam. Who does infect her?

Leon. Why he, that wears her like a medall, hang-
About his neck, Bohemia: who—if I [ing
Had servants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine honor as their profits,
Their own particular thralls, they would do that
Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer,—whom I from meaner form [see
Have bench'd, and rear'd to worship, who may'st
Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven,
How I am galled,—might'st beseech a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink,
Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam. Sure, my lord,
I could do this, and that with no rash potion,
But with a lingering dram, that should not work
Maliciously, like poison; but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honorable.
I have lov'd thee.——
Scene II.

The Winter's Tale.

Leon. Make that thy question, and go rot!
Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sally
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
(Which to preserve is sleep; which, being spotted,
Is goats, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps,)
Give scandal to the blood o' the prince, my son,
(Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine)
Without ripe moving to't? Would I do this?
Could man so bleach?
Cam. I must believe you, sir: I do;
and will fetch off Bohemia for't.
Provided, that when he's removed, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.
Leon. Thou dost advise me, even so as I mine own course have set down.
I'll give no blemish to her honor, none.
Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia,
And with your queen. I am his cupbearer
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.
Leon. This is all:
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st thine own.
Cam. I'll do't, my lord.
Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me. [Exit.

Cam. O, miserable lady! — But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do't
Is the obedience to a master; one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his so too.—To do this deed,
Promotion follows: if I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings,
And flourished after, I'd not do't; but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villainy itself forswear't. I must Forsake the court: to do't or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange. Methinks,
My favor here begins to warp. Not speak?—
Good-day, Camillo.
Cam. Well, what's the news t' the court?
Cam. None rare, my lord.
Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region
Lov'd as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Waiting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me, and
So peruses me to consider what is breeding
That changes thus his manners.
Cam. I dare not know, my lord. [dare not Pol. How! dare not? do not! Do you know, and
Be intelligent to me? *'Tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your churlish complexions are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too; for I must be A party in this alteration, finding

* "Make that thy question," | *c. if you doubt that Hermi-
one's dissility, go rot!" — *So bleached," | *c. so start off from propriety.

Myself thus alter'd with t.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.
Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman thence:
Clerk-like, experienced, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you,
If you know aught which does beseem my knowledge
Thereof to be informed, imprison it not
In ignorant concealment.
Cam. I may not answer.
Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well?
I must be answer'd.—Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honor does acknowledge,—whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare
What incidence thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.
Cam. Sir, I will tell you; Since I am charg'd in honor, and by him
That I think honorable. Therefore, mark my counsel,
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and I
Cry, 'lost,' and so good-night.
Pol. On, good Camillo.
Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.
Pol. By whom, Camillo?
Cam. By the king.
Pol. For what?
Cam. He thinks, any, with all confidence he swears,
As he had sent't, or been an instrument
To vice you to—that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly.
Pol. O! then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly, and my name
Be yok'd with his that did betray the Best!
Turn then my frailest reputation to
A savor, that may strike the dullest nostril
Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great s infection
That e'er was heard, or read!
Cam. Swear this though over
By each particular star in heaven, and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As, or by oath, remove, or counsel, shake,
The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is pill'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body.
Pol. How should this grow?
Cam. I know not; but, I am sure, *'tis safer to Avoid what's grown, than question how *'tis born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,
That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you
Shall bear along impartial, all way tonight.
Your followers I will whisper to the business;
And will, by two and threes, at several posterns, Clear them o' the city. For myself, I'll put
My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honor of my parents, I you, — With | *c. with that of Judas,— *Upon his faith," | *c. upon his settled belief.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Hermione, Mamilius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord:
Shall I be your play-fellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if I were a baby still.—I love you better.

1 Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because
Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say,
Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle,
Or a half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught this?

Mam. I learnt it out of women's faces.—Pray
What color are your eye-brows?

[Now.

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's
That has been blue, but not her eye-brows.

[Now.

2 Lady. Hark ye.

The queen, your mother, rounds space: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days, and then you'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late
Into a goodly bulk: good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, sir;
I am for you again: pray you, sit by us,
And tell's a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall it be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter.

Her. I have one of sprites and goblins.

Mam. Let's have that, good sir.

Come on; sit down:—come on, and do your best
To fright me with your sprites: you're powerful at it.

Mam. There was a man,—

Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a church-yard.—I will tell it softly;
Yond! crickets shall not hear it.

Her. Come on then,

And give't me in mine ear.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillus with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them: never Saw I men scorn so on their way. I eyed them
Even to their ships.

Leon. How bless'd am I

[Aside.

In my past censure! in my true opinion!—

Alack, for lesser knowledge!—How accrues'd,
In being so blest!—There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink a part,
And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge
Is not infected; but if one present
The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides,
With violent hefts.—I have drunk, and seen the Camillus was his help in this, his pander.—[spider.
There is a plot against my life, my crown:
All's true that is mistrusted:—that false villain,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him.
He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a 'pinch'd thing'; yea, a very trick
For them to play at will.—How came the postern

[To them.

So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevail'd than so,
On your command.

Leon. I know't too well.—

Give me the boy. [To Hermione.] I am glad, you
Did not turn me:
Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. Whata this? sport?

Leon. Bear the boy hence; he shall not come about
Away with him: and let her sport herself—[her.
With that she's big with; for his Polixenes
Has made me thee swell thus.

Her. But, I'd say he had not,
And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
Hoe' er you lean to the wayward.

Leon. You, my lords,
Look on her, mark her well; be but about
To say, "she is a goodly lady," and

The justice of your hearts will thereto add,
"Tis pity she's not honest, honourable;

Praise her but for this her without-door form, [straight (Which, on my faith, deserves high speech) and
The shrug, the hum, or ha (these petty brands,
That calumny doth use,—O, I am out!
That mercy does, for calumny will scarce
Virtue itself)—These shrugs, these hums and ha's,
When you have said, "she's goodly," come between,
Ere you can say "she's honest." But be't known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adul'tress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady.
Scene 1. The Winter's Tale.

Polixenes for Leontes. O, thou thing! Which I'll not call a creature of thy place, least barbarism, making me the precedent, Should a like language use to all degrees, And mannerly distinction leave out Betwixt the prince and beggar:—I have said She's an adultress; I have said with whom:—

More, she's a traitor; and Camillo is A feedory with her, and one that knows What she should shame to know herself. But with her most vile prince, that she's

A bed-sweerer, even as bad as those That vulgar gives bold'ast titles; ay, and privy To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life.
Privy to none of this. How will this grieve you, When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You this have publish'd me? Gentle my lord, You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say You did mistake.

Leont. No; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon, The centre is not big enough to bear A schoolboy's top.—Away with her to prison! He, who shall speak for her, is afof guilty, But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look With an aspect more favorable.—Good my lords, I am not prone to weeping, as our sex Commonly are, the want of which vain dew, Perchance, shall dry your pitties; but I have That honorable grief lodg'd here, which burns Worse than tears drown. Beseech you all, my lords, With thoughts so qualified as your charities Shall best instruct you, measure me; —and so The king's will be performed.

Leont. Shall I be heard? [To the Guards. Her. Who is that goes with me!—beseech your My women may be with me; for, you see, [highness, My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools; There is no cause: when you shall know, your mis-

Has deserv'd prison, then aloud in tears, [tress
As I come out: this action, I now go eon, Is for my better grace.—Adieu, my lord: I never wish'd to see you sorry; now, I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have leave.

Leont. Go, do our bids; and make no tress.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

1 Leont. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice Prove violence; in which the three great ones suffer, Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Leont. For her, my lord, I dare my life lay down, and will not, sir, Please you 't accept it, that the queen is spotless I the eyes of heaven, and to you: I mean, In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove She's otherwise, I'll keep the stable where I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her; Than when I feel, and see her, no further trust her; For every inch of woman in the world Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false, If she be.

Leont. Hold your peace!

1 Leont. Good my lord,—

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves. You are abus'd, and by some putter-on, That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain, I would 'lamback him. Be she honest—fole—

I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven, The second, and the third, nine, and some e five; If this prove true, they'll pay for't: by mine honor, I'll gend them all: fourteen they shall not see, To bring false genealogies: they are co-heirs, And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

1 Leont. Cease! no more. You smell this business with a sense as cold As is a dead man's nose; but I do see't, and feel't, As you feel doing thus, and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so, We need no grave to bury honesty: There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten Of the whole dandy earth.

1 Leont. What! lack I credit?

1 Leont. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord, Upon this ground; and more it would content me To have your honor the thing than your suspicion, Be blamed for't how you might.

1 Leont. Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow Our forcible [instigation? Our prerogative Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness Imports this; which, if you (or stupid, Or seeming so in skill) cannot, or will not, Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves, We need no more of your advice: the matter, The loss, the gain, the ordering out, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it, Without more overture.

1 Leont. How could that be?

Either thou art most ignorant by age, Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight, Added to their familiarity,

(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture, That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation But only seeing, all other circumstances [ing:

Made up to the deed) doth push on this proceed-
Yet, for a greater confirmation,

(For in an act of this importance 'twere Most piteous to be wild) I have despatch'd in post, To sacred Delphos, to Apollo's temple, Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know Of stuff'd [sufficiency. Now, from the oracle They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had, Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Leont. Well done, my lord.

1 Leont. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle Give rest to the minds of others; such as he, Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth. So have we thought it good, From our free person she should be confin'd, Least she show the tenacious of the two fed hence Be left her to perform. Come, follow us;
We are to speak in public; for this business Will raise us all.

* An accomplice.—b But with," i.e., even with; merely with. The sense is, "What she should shame to share the bedchamber with the prince." Sc. "That is, no foundation can be trusted.—c It is afar off guilty. But that he speaks," i.e., is remotely guilty, in merely speaking.

"This action, I now go on," i.e., what I am now about to do.—d I'll keep me stable," i.e., I'll take up my abode.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—The Same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Paulina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison.—call to him:

[Exit on Attendants.

Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady! No court in Europe is too good for thee, What dost thou then in prison?—Now, good sir, Re-enter Attend, with the Jailor.

You know me, do you not?

Jailor. For a worthy lady, And one whom much I honor.

Paul. I pray you then, Conduct me to the queen.

Jailor. May I not, madam: to the contrary I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado, To lock up honesty and honor from Th' access of gentle visitors!—Is't lawful, pray you, To see her women? any of them? Emilia? Jailor. So please you, madam, To put apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her.— Withdraw yourselves. [Exit Attend. Jailor. And, madam, I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be't so, pr'ythee. [Exit Jailor. Here's such ado to make no stain a stain, As passes coloring.

Re-enter Jailor, with EMILIA.

Dear gentlewoman, How fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorn, May hold together. On her frights, and griefs, (Which never tender lady hath borne greater) She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter; and a goodly babe, Lusty, and like to live: the queen receives Much comfort in't, says, "My poor prisoner, I am innocent as you."

Paul. I dare be sworn: [them! These dangerous, unsane b'hunes! the king, beseech He must be told on't, and he shall: the office Becomes a woman's best; I'll take't upon me. If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister, And never to my red-look'd anger be The trumpet any more.—Pray you, Emilia, Command my best obedience to the queen: If she dares trust me with her little babe, I'll show't the king, and undertake to be Her advocate to the loud'st. We do not know How he may soften at the sight o' the child: The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam, Your honor, and your goodness, are so evident, That your free undertaking cannot miss A lasting issue: there is no lady living So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer, Who, but to-day, 'hammer'd of this design,

But durst not tempt a minister of honor, Less she should be denied. Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it, As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall do good.

Emil. Now, be you blest for it! I'll to the queen.—Please you, come something nearer. Jailor. Madam, it's please the queen to send the I know not what I shall incur to pass it, [babe, Having no warrant. Paul. You need not fear it, sir: The child was prisoner to the womb, and is, By law and process of great nature, thence Freed and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen. Jailor. I do believe it.

Paul. Do you not fear: upon mine honor, I Will stand betwixt you and danger. [Exeunt.}

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and other Attendants.

Leoni. Nor night, nor day, no rest. It is but weakness To bear the matter thus, mere weakness. If The cause were not in being, part o' the cause, She th'adultress; for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she I can look to me: say, that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest Might come to me again.—Who's there? I Atten. My lord.

Leoni. How does the boy?

1 Atten. He took good rest to-night: 'Tis hop'd, his sickness is discharg'd.

Leoni. To see his nobleness! Conceiving the diabolish of his mother, He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply, Fasen'd and fix'd the shame o'nt in himself, Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep, And downright languish'd. Leave me solely:—go, See how he fares. [Exit Atten. Fic! fie! no thought of him. The very thought of my revenges that way Recall upon me: in himself too mighty, And in his parties, his alliance; let him be, Until a time may serve: for present vengeance, Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter Paulina, behind, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter. Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me. Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul, More free than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough. 1 Atten. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded None should come at him. Paul. Not so hot, good sir; I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,— That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh At each of his needless heavings,—such as you

Ⅳ "The blank and level," i. e., the mark and aim. — s "Leave me solely," i. e., leave me alone. — "Of no thought of him," i. e., of Polixenes.— Chaste; pure.
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humor,
That presses him from sleep.
I'Coming forward.
About some gossips for your highness.
Leon. How—
Away with that andurious lady. Antigonus,
I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me:
I knew she would.
Ant. I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure's peril, and on mine,
She should not visit you.
Leon. What canst not rule her?
Paul. From all dishonesty he can; in this,
(Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honor) trust it,
He shall not rule me.
Ant. Lo, you now! you hear.
When she will take the rein, I let her run;
But she'll not stumble.
Paul. Good my liege, I come,—
And, I beseech you, hear me, who professes
Myself your loyal servant, your physician,
Your most excellent counsellor, yet that dares
Leon. Appear so in conforming your evil,
Than such as most seem yours,—I say, I come
From your good queen.
Leon. Good queen! Paul. Good queen, my lord, good queen: I say, good queen;
And would by combat make her good, so were I
A man, the worst about you.
Leon. Force her hence.
Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes
First hand me. On mine own accord I'll off,
But first I'll do my errand.—The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.
[Leaving down the Child.
Leon. Out! A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' door:
A most intelligencing bawd! Paul.
Not so:
I am as ignorant in that, as you
In so entitling me, and no less honest
Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant,
As this world goes, to pass for honest.
Leon. Traitors! Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard.—
Thou, dotard, [To Antonius.] thou art a woman,
'tid, unrooted
By thy dame Partlet here.—Take up the bastard:
Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone.
Paul. For ever
Unrecoverable be thy hands, if thou
Take'st up the princess by that forced baseness
Which he has put upon't:
Leon. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So I would you did; then, 'twere past all You'd call your children yours. [doubt.
Leon. A nest of traitors!
Ant. I am none, by this good light.
Paul. Nor I; nor any,
But one that's here, and that's himself; for he

The sacred honor of himself, his queen's,
His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander,
Whose sting is sharper than the sword's, and will not (For, as the case now stands, it is a curse
He cannot be compell'd to) once remove
The root of his opinion, which is rotten
As ever oak, or stone, was sound.
Leon. A callat,
Of boundless tongue, who late hath beat her husband,
And now baits me!—This brat is none of mine:
It is the issue of Polixenes.
Hence with it; and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire.
Ant. It is yours;
And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worse.—Behold, my lords,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip,
The trick of his frown, his forehead: say, the valley,
The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles;
The very mould and frame of hand, nail, figner.—
And, thou, good goddess Nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colors
No 'yellow in't; lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's.
Leon. A gross bag!—
And, 'lozel, then art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.
Ant. Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.
Leon. Once more, take her hence.
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.
Leon. I'll ha' thee burn'd.
Paul. I care not:
It is an heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in't. I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen
(Not able to produce more accusation
Than your own weak king'd fancy) something savors
Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, scandalous to the world.
Leon. On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant, Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her!
Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.
Look to your limbs, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit!—What need these hands?—
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so:—farewell; we are gone.
Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife, to this:—
My child? away with it!—even thou, that hast
A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire:—
Even thou, and none but thou.' Take it up straight.
Within this hour bring me word 'tis done,
(And by good testimony) or I'll seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st thine. If thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard-brains with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire,
For thou set'st on thy wife.
Ant. I did not, sir;
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Can clear me in't.
1 Lord. We can: my royal liege,
These are Leontes, Dixon.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate’s delicate, the air most sweet.
Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing.
The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the celestial habits,
(Methinks, I so should term them) and the reverence
Of the grave weavers. O, the sacrifice!

How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthy
It was I the offering!

Cleo. But, of all the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o’ the oracle,
Kin to Jove’s thunder, so surpris’d my sense,
That I was nothing.

Dion. If th’ event o’ the journey
Prove as successful to the queen,—O, be’t so!—
As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use’son.

Cleo. Great Apollo,
Turn all to the best! These proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,
I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it
Will clear, or end, the business: when the oracle,
(Thus by Apollo’s great divine seal’d up)
Shall the contents discover, something rare, some;
Even then, will rush to knowledge.—Go, fresh hon.
And gracious be the issue.

SCENE II.—The same. A Court of Justice.

Enter Leontes, Lords, and Officers.

Leon. This session (to our great grief we pronounce)
Even pushes’gainst our hearts: the party tried,
The daughter of a king; our wife, and one
Of us too much belov’d. Let us be clear’d
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice, which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt, or the purgation.—
Produce the prisoner.

Off. It is his highness’s pleasure, that the queen
Appear in person here in court.

[Silence.

Enter Hermione, to her trial, guarded; Paulina
And Ladies attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Off. “Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.”

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation, and
The testimony on my part no other
But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boast me

A just and open trial. While she lives,
My heart will be a burden to me.
Leave me, and think upon my bidding."
To say "Not guilty!" mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd. But thus:—If powers divine
Behold our human actions, (as they do)
I doubt not, then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Trouble at patience.—You, my lord, best know,
(Who least will seem to do so) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devils' d,
And play'd to take spectators. For behold me,
A fellow of the royal bed, which *owe
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince, here standing
To prate and talk for life, and honor, *Ere
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it
As I weigh grief, which I would *spare; for honor,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so Uncertain I
Have Stray'd, I appear'd that if one jot beyond
The bound of honor, or, in act, or will,
That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st kin
Cry "Fie!" upon my grave.
Leon.
I ne'er heard yet,
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gain my what they did,
Than to perform it first.
Her.
That's true enough:
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.
Leon. You will not own it.
Her.
More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
(With whom I am accus'd) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honor be requir'd,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude [spoke,]
To you, and toward your friend, whose love had Even since it could speak from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conscience,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.
Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta'en to do in's absence.
Her. Sir,
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll by down.
Leon.
Your actions are my dreams:
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And but dream'd it.—As you were past all shame,
(Those of your fact are so) so past all truth,
Which to deny concerns more than avails; for as

That is, my virtue being accounted wickedness, my assertion of it will pass but for a life.—* Own, possess. — That is in my life, which is only grief, I would willingly spare, or lay down.—Uncertain, I. e., unlawful.— To stand in the hand, (a metaphor from cunning), joy, is to be the object which direct sim is taken.—* Those of your fact, I. e., they who have done like you.— Concerns more than avails, *I. e., will be useless; will prove nothing.

Thee brat hath been cast out, like to itself.
No father owning it, (which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee than it) so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats:
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me call life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favor,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am bar'd, like one infectious. My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Hailed out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet: with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs
To women of all fashion: lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 't the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die! Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not.—No: life,
I prize it not a straw; but for mine honor,
(Which I would free) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake, I tell you,
'Tis rigor, and not law.—Your honors all,
I do refer me to the oracle:
Apollo be my judge.

I. Lord.
This your request
Is altogether just. Therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle. [Exeunt 2 Officers.
Her. The emperor of Russia was my father:
O! that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial; that he did but see
The flatness of my misery, yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.
Off. You here shall swear upon this sword of jus-
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have [tice.
Been both at Delphos; and from thence have brought
This seal'd oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not dar'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in't.

Cleo. Dion.
All this we swear.
Leon. Break up the seals, and read.

Off. [Reads.] 'Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless, Camillo a true subject, Leontes a jealous tyrant, his innocent wife truly begotten, and the king shall live without an heir, if that which is lost be not found.'

Lords. Now, blessed be the great Apollo!
Her. Praise!
Leon. Hast thou read truth?
Off. Ay, my lord; even so
As it is here set down.
Leon. There is no truth at all? the oracle
The sessions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, in haste.
Serv. My lord the king, the king's Leon. What is the business?
Serv. O sir! I shall be hated to report it:
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, *I. e., of the event of the queen's trial.

Bugbear. — "Starr'd most unluckily," I. e., ill-starred—Dragged,— "Strength of limit," I. e., strength sufficient to go abroad after accomplishment.—* Completeness,— "Of the queen's speed," *I. e., of the event of the queen's trial.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT III.

Leon. Apollo's angry, and the heavens themselves Do strike at my injustice. How now there! Paul. This news is mortal to the queen. Look and see what death is doing. [down.

Leon. Take her hence; her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover. I have too much believ'd mine own suspicion: Beseech you, tenderly apply to her Some remedies for life. Apollo, pardon [Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Herm.

My great proneness 'gainst this time oracle — I'll reconcile me to Polixenes, New woo my queen, recall the good Camillo, Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy; For, being transported by my jealousies To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chase Camillo for the minister, to poison My friend Polixenes; which had been done, But could not stay his mind of Camillo tardish My swift command; though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him, Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane, And tall'd with honor, to my kindy guest Unclasp'd my practice; quit his fortunes here, Which you knew great, and to the hazard Of all uncertainties himself & commanded, No richer than his honor. — How he glisters Thorough my rust! and how his pisty Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while! O, cut my lace, lest my heart, cracking it, Break too! 1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady? Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, last for me? What wheels, rack? fires? What playing? burning, boiling In lead, or oil? what old, or newer torture Must receive, whose every word deserves To taste of thy most woe! Thy tyranny, Together working with thy jealousies, — Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle For girls of nine, — O! think what they have done, And then run mad, indeed; stark mad, for all Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. That thou hast betray'd the Polixenes, twice nothing; That did but show thee of a foul, inconsistent, And damnable ungrateful: nor was't much, Thou would'st have poison'd good Camillo's honor, To have him kill a king; poor trespasses, More monstrous standing by! whereof I reckon The casting forth to crows thy baby daughter, To be or none, or little; though a devil Would not have shed water out of fire, ere don't: Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death Of the young prince, whose honorable thoughts (Thoughts high for one so tender) left the heart That could conceive a gross and foolish sire Blemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no, Laid to thy answer: but the last, — O, lords! When I have said, cry, woe! — the queen, the queen, The sweetest, dearest creature's dead; and weep Not drop'd down yet. 1 Lord. The higher powers forbid! Paul. I say, she's dead: I'll swear: if word, nor prevail not, go and see. If you can bring [outh, Tincture, or lustre, in her lip, her eye, Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you

As I would do the gods. — But, O thou tyrant! Do not repeat these things, for they are heavier Than all thy woes can stir; therefore, betake thee To nothing but despair. A thousand knees Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting, Upon a barren mountain, and still winter, In storm perpetual, could not move the gods To look that way thou wert.

Leon. Go on; go on; Thou canst not speak too much: I have descend All tongues to talk their bitterness. Say no more: How'er the business goes, you have made fault I the boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for't: All faults I make, when I shall come to know them, I do repent. Ails! I have show'd too much The rashness of a woman. He is touch'd [help. To the noble heart. — What's gone, and what's past Should be past grief: do not receive affliction At repetition, I beseech you; rather, Let me be punish'd, that have minded you Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege, Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman: The love I bore your queen, — to, fool again! — I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children; I'll not remember you of my own lord, Who is lost too. — Take your patience to you, And I'll say nothing.

Leon. Thou didst speak but well, When most the truth, which I receive much better, Than to be pitted of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me To the dead bodies of my queen, and son. One grave shall be for both: upon them shall The causes of their deaths appear, unto Our shame perpetual. Once a day I'll visit The chapel where they lie; and tears shall there Shall be my recreation: so long as nature Will bear up with this exercise, so long I daily vow to use it. Come, and lead me To these sorrows. [Exeunt SCENE III.—Bohemia. A Desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antigonus, with the Babe; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect, then, our ship hath touch'd The deserts of Bohemia? [upon Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly, And threaten present blusters. In my conscience, The heavens with that we have in hand are angry, And from upon us. Ant. Their sacred wills be done! — Go, get aboard; Look to thy bark: I'll not be long, before I call upon thee. Mar. Make your best haste, and go not Too far the land; 'tis like to be loaded weather: Besides, this place is famous for the creatures Of prey that keep upon't.

Ant. I'll follow instantly. Mar. I am glad at heart To be so rid o' the business. [Exit.

Ant. Come, poor babe: I have heard, (but not believ'd) the spirits o' the dead May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother Appear'd to me last night, for ne'er was dream So like a waking. To me comes a creature, Sometimes her head on one side, sometimes another; I never saw a vessel of like sorrow.

"Thou art perfect," i. e., thou art well assured.
So fill'd, and so o'er-running: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay, thrice how'd before me,
And, gumming to begin some speech, down eyes
Become two spots: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her:—"Good Antigonus,
"Since fate, against thy better disposition,
"Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
"Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,
"Places remote enough in Bohemia,
"There we may leave it very well; and, for the babe
"Is counted lost for ever, Perdita.
"I pr'ythee, call't: for this ungentle business,
"Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shall see
"Thy wife Paulina more:—" and so, with shrieks
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself, and thought
This was no, and no slumber. Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, ye, superstitiously,
I will be squar'd by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that
Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of king Polixenes, it should here be laid,
Either for life or death, upon the earth
Of its right father.—Blossom, speed thee well!
There lie; and there thy character: there these,
[laying down the babe.
Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee, pretty,
And still rest thine.—The storm begins.—Poor wretch!
That for thy mother's fault art thus expos'd [Thunder. To loss, and what may follow. — Weep. I cannot.
But my heart bleeds, and most accurs'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.— Farewell!
The days freerows and more: thou art like to have
A hulaby too rough. I never saw [clamor? —
The heavens so dim by day. [bear roars.] A savage
Well may I get abroad! — This is the chase;
I am gone for ever. [Exit, pursued by a bear.

Enter old Shepherd.
Shep. I would there were no age between ten and three-and-twenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest; for there is nothing in the between but getting wrenches with child, wronging the ancestry, stealing, fighting. — Thank you now! — Besides, but these boiled-brains of nineteen, and two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear, the wolf will sooner find, than the master: if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing of ivy. Good luck, an't be thy will! what have we here? [Taking up the Babe.] Mercy on 't, a 'born; a very pretty brave! A boy, or a child, I wonder? A pretty one; a very pretty one. Sure some scope: though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the scope. This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door-work: they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity; yet I'll tarry till my son come: he halloed and even now.—When, ho hoa!

Enter Clown.
Clo. Hillow, loa!
Shep. What! art so near? If thou'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither. What all'st thou, man?
Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land! — but I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky: betwixt the firmament and it you cannot thrust a bodkin's point.
Shep. Why, boy, how is it?
Clo. I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore! but that's to the point. O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls! sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em:
now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast;
and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. And then for the land service,—to see how the bear tore out his shoulder bone. Shep. Look to this boy, Perdita, and said, his name was Antigonus, a nobleman. — But make an end of the ship: — to see how the sea a flapdragoned it; — but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them; and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mocked him, both tooring louder than the sea, or weather.
Shep. Name of mercy! when was this, boy?
Clo. Now, now: I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half dined on the gentleman: he's at it now.
Shep. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!
Clo. I would you had been by the ship's side, to have helped her: there your charity would have lacked footing.
Shep. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look thee here, boy. Now bless thyself: thou met'st with things dying, I with things new born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee: a bearing-cloth for a squire's child! Look thee here: take up, take up, boy; open, open. So, let's see. It was told me, I should be rich by the fairies: this is some changeling.
Open': what's within, boy?
Clo. You're a made old man: if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold! all gold!
Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 'twill prove so:
up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way.
We are lucky, boy; and to be so still requires nothing but secrecy. — Let my sheep go. — Come, good boy, the next way home.
Clo. Go you the next way with your findings: I'll see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never 'curst, but when they are hungry. If there be any of him left,
I'll bury it.
Shep. That's a good deed. If thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.
Clo. Marry, will I; and you shall help to put him
't the ground.
Shep. Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exit."

ACT IV.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I, that please some, try all; both joy, and terror,
Of good and bad; that make, and unfold error,
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings. Impute it not a crime.

* * * * *

"Flap-dragoned it," l. e., swallowed it, as the ancient topers swallowed flap-dragons. — A "bearing-cloth" was a mantle of fine cloth in which a child was carried to be hapstized. — "Some changing," l. e., a child left behind by the fairies, in the small of one which they had stolen. — Neeset.
— Mischiefous.
To me, or my swift passage, that I slide
O'er sixteen years; and leave the growth untir'd
Of that wide gap: since it is in my power
To o'erthrow law, and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient's order was,
Or what is now receiv'd: I witness to
The times that brought them in; so shall I do
To the freshest thing in now reigning, and make stale
The glistening of this present, as my tale
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I turn my glass, and give my scene such growing,
As you had slept between. Leonato leaving
Th' effects of his fond jealousies, so grieving
That he shuts up himself, imagine *me,
Genteel spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well,
I mention'd a son o' the king's, which Florizel
I now name to you: and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wondering: What of her causes,
I list not expressly; but let Time's news [daughter,
Be known, when 'tis brought forth. A shepherd's
And what to her adherers, which I now offer,
Is th' argument of Time. Of this allow,
If ever you have spent time worse ere now:
If never, yet that Time himself doth say,
He wishes earnestly you never may.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more important:
'tis a sickness denying thee any thing, a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years, since I saw my country:
though I have, for the most part, been abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me; to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so, which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe out not the rest of thy services, by leaving me now. The need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made: better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee. Thou, having made me businesses, which none without thee can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done; which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot) to be more thankful to thee shall be my study, and my profit therein, the keeping friendships of that fatal country, Sicilia, pr'ythee speak no more, whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou cal'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen, and children, are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the prince Florizel, my son? Kings are not less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days, since I saw the prince.
What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown; but I have musings noted, he is of late much retir'd from court, and is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo, and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his remov'dness: from whom I have this intelligence; that he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbors, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence, but, I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place, where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity, I think it not easy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Pr'ythee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command. [Exeunt.

Pol. My best Camillo!—We must disguise our-

SCENE II.—The Same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When defraud'st begin to peer,—

With, high! the doxy over the dale,—

Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;

For the red blood reigns in the winter's pace.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedges,—

With, high! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!—

Doth set my prigging tooth on edge;

For a quart o' ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirro-libra chants,—

With height! with height! the thresh and the jay,

Are summer songs for me and my bants.

While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pipe; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear?*

The pale moon shines by night;

And when I wander here and there,

I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,

Then my account I well may give,

And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheaves; when the kite builds, look to lesser thieving; my father named me, Autolycus; who, being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. With die, and Idrab, I purchased this caparison, and my revenue is the silly thieving; Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway: beating, and hanging, are terrors to me: for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see!—Every 'leven wether tods:

* "The angle," i. e., the bait; the line and hook.—Autolycus, in mythology, was the son of Mercury, and famous for the arts of fraud and thievish.—"The red blood reigns in the winter's pace," i. e., the spring blood reigns where was late the domination of winter.—"Prigging," i. e., thieving, cheating.—"Aunt!" was a cant word for a band or trull.—
"Three-pipe!" was a rich velvet.—Autolycus means that he steals sheaves, and leaves the lesser pieces for the kite to line their nests with.—"With die and drab," i. e., with dicing and necocking.—"The silly cheat," i. e., picking of pockets.—"Tods," i. e., will produce a toss, or twenty-eight pounds of wool.
every tod yields—pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shillings, what comes the wool to?

Aut. [Aside.] If the spindle hold, the cock's mine.

Clo. I cannot do without counters.—Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast?

"Three pound of sugar; five pound of currants; rice.

What will this weight of doe with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she says it on. She hath made me four-and-twenty nosegays for the shearmen; three-man song men all, and very good ones, but they are most of them mean and bases; but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must have two sullen, to color the 'warden pies; mace, dates, plums, prunes, and spices, seven; a race or two of ginger;" but that I may beg:—"four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins of the sun."*

Aut. O, that ever I was born!

[Growling on the ground.

Clo. I the name of me!—

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags, and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O, sir! the loutishness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones, and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a greater matter.

Aut. I am robbed, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel taken from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

*Aut. A foot-man, sweet sir, a foot-man.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a foot-man, by the garrisons here; but he's out of my mind. A horse-man's cost, it hath seems very hot service. I lend thee thy hand, I'll help thee: come; lead me thy hand.

[Helping him up.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir. I have a kinsman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going: I shall there have money, or any thing I want. Offer me no money, I pray you: that kills my heart.

Clo. What manner of fellow was he that robbed you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with 'trol-My-dames: I knew him once a servant of the prince. I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say: there's no virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish it, to make it stay there, and yet it will no more but abide.

*Aut. Vices you would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; then a process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed a *motion of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown over many knavish professions, he settled only in rogue: some call him Antolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! Frig, for my life, prig: he haunts wakes, fairs, and beaat-baitings.

Aut. Very true, sir, he is: that's the rogue, that put me into this apparel.

Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Bohemia; if you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you, sir, I am noighter: I am false of heart that way, and that he knew, I warrant him. Clo. How do you now?

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was: I can stand, and walk. I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly toward my kinsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good-fooled sir; no, sweet sir. Clo. Then fare thee well. I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing here.

[Exit Clo. Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir!—Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too. If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearmen prove sheep, let me be enrolled, and my name put in the book of virtue!*

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way, And merrily bent thestile—a

A merry heart goes all the day, Your and tires in a mile-a.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Fio. These, your unusual weeds, to each part of Do give a life: no shepherdbess, but Flora [You Peering in April's front. This, your sheep-shearing, Is as a meeting of the petty gods, And you the queen on't. Per. Sure, my gracious lord, To chide at your extremes it not becomes me; O! pardon, that I name them: your high self, The gracious 'mark of the land, you have obscur'd With a swain's wearing, and me, poor lowly maid, Most godless-like prank'd up. But that our faults In every mess have folly, and the feeders Disgust it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attir'd, so worn, I think, To show myself a glass.

Fio. I bless the time, When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father's ground.

Per. *Now, Jove afford you cause! To me the *difference forges dread; your greatness Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble To think, your father, by some accident, Should pass this way, as you did. O, the fates! How would he look, to see his work, so noble, Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold The sternness of his presence?

Fio. Appreach'd Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves, Humbled their deities to love, have taken

* "Counters," i. e., pieces of metal for reckoning with.—

*That is, singers of catches in three parts.—Tenors.—

*Hardens are large pears, now called baking pears.—

"Trol-My-dames" was a name for the game of pigeon-holing." A huck, with a bat, able, i. e., only sojourn or need for a time.—"Compass a fashion," i. e., obtained a puppet show.—

*Thief.—To "bent the stile," is to take the stile.—

*Your extremities," i. e., your extravagant conduct, in disguising yourself and adorning me.—*The gracious mark of the land," i. e., the object of all men's notice and expectation.—*To show myself a glass," i. e., to show her how she ought to be dressed.—*The difference," i. e., the difference in rank between them.—Ornaments.
Do you neglect them?

Per. *For I have heard it said, there is an art which, in their piedness, shares with great creating nature.

Pol. Say, there be; yet nature is made better by no mean, but nature makes that mean: so, o'er that art, which you say, adds to nature, is that art which nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry a gentler sciens to the wildest stock, and make conceive a bank of bazer kind by bud of nobler race: this is an art which does mend nature; change it rather; but the art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gilly-flowers, and do not call them bastards.

Per. I'll not put the dibble in earth to set one slip of them: no more than, were I painted, I would wish this youth should say, were well, and only therefore desire to breed me.—Here's flowers for you; a lavender, litits, savour, marjoram; the mown end, that g' more to bed of the sun, and with him rises weeping: these are flowers of middle summer, and, I think, they are given to men of middle age. You are very welcome. Cam. I should leave gazing, were I of your flock, and only live by gazig.

Per. Out, alas! You'd be so lean, that blasts of January Would blow you through and through.—Now, my fair'st friend, I would, I had some flowers o' the spring, that might become your time of day; and yours, and yours, that wear upon your virgin branches yet your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina! For the flowers now, that, frightened, thou let'st fall From Da's waggon; daffodils, that come before the swallow daries, and take The winds of March with beauty; violet din, but sweeter than the lides of Juno's eyes, Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses, That die unmarrried ere they can behold Bright Phoebus in his strength, a malady Most incident to maid's; bold oxlips, and The crowen imperial; lilies of all kinds, The flower-de-luce being one. O! these I lack, To make you garniards of, and, my sweet friend, To strew him o'er and o'er.

Flo. What! like a corse? Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on, Not like a corse; or if,—not to be buried, [ers. But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your flow—Methinks, I play as I have seen them do In Wiltsum-postumals: sure, this robe of mine Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do Still better's what is done. When you speak, sweet, I'd have you do it ever: when you sing, I'd have you buy and sell so; so give aims; Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs, To sing them too. When you do dance, I wish you A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do Nothing but that; move still, still so, And own no other function: each your doing, So singular in each particular.

* Because,—There is an art," i.e., the art of producing varieties of colors on flowers.—"Gilly-flowers" was the old name for the whole class of carnations, pinks, and sweet-williams. Perdita considers them an emblem of a painted or immodest woman; and therefore declines to meddle with them.
SCENE III.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

297

Crowns what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles!
Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
The true blood, which peeps so fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstained shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You wo'd me the false way.

Flo. I think, you have
As little skill to a fear, as I have purpose
To put to't.—But, come; our dance, I pray.
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. 1'll swear for 'em.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran on the green-sward: nothing she does, or says,
But snarcks of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something,
That wakes her blood:—look on't. Good sooth,
The queen of curds and cream.

[Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn, as white as driven snow;—
Cyprus, black as 'er was crose;—
Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;—
Masks for faces, and for noses;—
Ringlets, and hair-bracelet amber;—
Periwigs for lady's b chamber;—
Golden quofins, and stomachers;—
For my lads to give their dears;—
Pins and pokinking-sticks of steel;—
What maids lack from head to hel;—
Come, bye of me, come; come bye; come buy;—
Buy, lads, or else your lasses erg;—
Come, bye.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou should'st take no money of me; but being entrilled as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribands and gloves.

Mop. I was promised them against the feast, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you:
may be, he has paid you more, which will shame
you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their plackets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking time, when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to whisper off these secrets, but you must be little-bitting before all our guests? 'Tis well they are whispering. 1 Charm your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace, and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?

Ant. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore, it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Ant. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

1 The burden of an old ballad.—k Points" were faces with tags.—t Kiln-hole, to whisper off these secrets; but you must be little-bitting before all our guests: 'Tis well they are whispering. 1 Charm your tongues, and not a word more.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT IV.

Mep. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print o'life; for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune. How a usurer's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a birth; and how she longed to eat adders' heads, and toads carbonadoed.

Mep. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true; and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here's the midwife's name to't, one mistress Talker, and five or six honest wives' that were present. Why should I dare lie abroad? Mep. Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by; and let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad, of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the land hearts of maids: it was thought she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her. The ballad is very pitiful, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Aut. Five justices' hands at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mep. Let's have some merry ones.

Aut. Why this is a passing merry one, and goes to the tune of, "Two maids woeing a man." There's scarce a maid westward but she sings it: 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mep. We can both sing it: if thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear it: 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune o'it a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, tis my occupation: have it with you.

SONG.

Aut. Get you hence, for I must go.

Whither fits not you to know.

Dor. Whither?

Mep. O! whither?

Dor. Whither?

Mep. It becomes thy oath full well,

Thou to me thy secrets tell.

Dor. Me too: let me go thither.

Mep. Or thou go'st to the grange, or mill:

Dor. If to either, thou dost ill.

Aut. Neither.

Dor. What, neither?

Aut. Neither.

Dor. Thou hast sworn my love to be;

Mep. Thou hast sworn it more to me:

Then, whither go'st? say, whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves.

My father and my gentlemen are in 'said talk, and we'll not trouble them: come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenchers, I'll buy for you both. Pedler, let's have the first choice.—Follow me, girls.

[Exeunt Clown, Dorcas, and Mopsa.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Aside.

Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cope, my dainty duck, my dear-a? Any silk, any thread, any toys for your head,

Of the new'st, and fin'st, fin'st wear a?—

Clo. Come to the pedler;

Mep's a miller,

That doth after all men's care-a. [Exit after them.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all of 'thair: they call themselves saltiers; and they have a dance which the wenchers say is a gallimaudy of gambols, because they are not in't; but they themselves are o' the mind, (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowling) it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away! we'll none o't: here has been too much homely foolery already. —I know, sir, we were you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us. Pray, let's see these four threes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the 'squire.

Shep. Leave your prating. Since these good men are pleased, let them come in: but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Re-enter Servant, with Twelve Rustics, habited like Satyrs. They dance, and then exeunt.

Pol. O father! you'll know more of that hereafter.—

Is it not too far gone?—'Tis time to part them.

He's simple, and tells much. How now, fair shep. Your heart is full of something, that does take [herd]? Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young, And handled love as you do, I was wont [sack'd] To load my she with knacks: I would have ran—

The pedler's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance; you have let him go, And nothing [mattered] with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse, and call this Your lack of love, or bounty, you were [straited] For a reply, at least, if you make a care

Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are. The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd Up in my heart, which I have given already, But not deliver'd.—O! hear me breathe my life Before the ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometimes lovd': I take thy hand; this hand, As soft as dove's down, and as white as it, Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the faun's snow, that's bolted By the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this?— How prettily the young swain seems to wash The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out.— But, to your protestations: let me hear

What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't.

Pol. And this my neighbor too?

Flo. And he, and more

Then he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all; That were I crown'd the most imperial monarch, Thev'rof most worthy; were I the fairest youth That ever made eye swerve; had [sense, and knowledge,

More than was ever man's, I would not prize them, Without her love: for her employ them all, Command them, and condemn them, to her service,

Serv. —That is, dressed themselves in goat-skins.— Satyrs.—'Foot rule.'—Bought; trafficked. —Straitened.— Sifted.
SCENE III.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

Or to their own perdition.

Pol.  Fairly offer'd.

Cam.  This shows a sound affection.

Sed.  But, my daughter,

Say you the like to him?

Per.  I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out
The spirit of his.

Sed.  Take hands; a bargain:—
JOINING THEIR HANDS.

And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to't.
I give my daughter to him, and will make
Her portion equal his.

Flo.  Of that must be
The virtue of your daughter: one being dead,
I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder. But, come on.
Contact us 'fore these witnesses.

Sed.  Come, your hand;
And, daughter, yours.

Pol.  Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you.

Have you a father?

Flo.  I have; but what of him?

Pol.  Knows he of this?

Flo.  He neither does, nor shall.

Pol.  Methinks, a father
Is at the nuptial of his son a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more:
Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid
With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? disposses his own estate?
Lies he not bed-rid? and again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish?

Flo.  No, good sir:
He has his health, and ample strength, indeed,
Than must have of his age.

Pol.  By my white beard,
You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unfailing. Reason, my son,
Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason,
The father, (all whose joy is nothing else
But fair postivety) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Flo.  I yield all this;
But for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business.

Pol.  Let him know't.

Flo.  He shall not.

Pol.  Pr'lythee, let him.

Flo.  No, he must not.

Sed.  Let him, my son: he shall not need to grieve
At knowing of thy choice.

Flo.  Come, come, he must not.—

Mark our contract.

Pol.  Mark your divorce, young sir,
DISCOVERING HIMSELF.

Whom son I dare not call: thou art too base
To be acknowledg'd. Thou a sceptre's heir,
That thus affect's a sheep-hook!—Then old traitor,
I am sorry, that by hanging thee I can
But shorten thy life one week. —And thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with—

Per.  O, my heart!

Pol.  I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with briers, and made
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh never
That thou no more shalt never see this 3snack, (as

Toy.

I mean thou shalt) we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, no not our kin,
Far than Deucalion off:—mark thou my words.
Follow us to the court.—Thou, churl, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,— Worthy enough a heraldman; yes, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honor thine,
Unoverlay thee,—if ever henceforth thou
These rural hatches to his entrance open,
Or hoist his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to'.

[Exit.

Per.  Even here undone!
I was not much afeard; for once, or twice,
I was about to speak, and tell him plainly,
The self-same sun that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.—Will't please you, sir, be gone?

[To Florizel.

I told you, what would come of this. Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But wilt my eyes, and weep.

Cam.  Why, how now, father!
Speak, ere thou diest.

Sed.  I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir!

[To Florizel.

You have undone a man of fourscore three,
Thought to fill his grave in quiet; yes,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones: but now,
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust.—O cursed wretch!

[To Perdita.

That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst ad-ventur'd
To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To die when I desire.

[Exit.

Flo.  Why look you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not afraid; delay'd,
But nothing alter'd. What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly.

Cam.  Gracious my lord,
You know your father's temper: at this time
He will allow no speech, (which, I do guess,
You do not purpose to him) and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.

Flo.  I not purpose it.

I think, Camillo?

Cam.  Even he, my lord.

Per.  How often have I told you 'twould be thus?
How often said my dignity would last
But till 'were known?

Flo.  It cannot fail, but by
The violation of my faith: and then
Let nature crush the sides of the earth together,
And mar the seeds within.—Lift up thy looks:—
From my succession wipe me, father; I Am heir to my affection.

Cam.  Be advis'd.

Flo.  I am; and by my fancy: if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness,

1Farther,—It was ancienly the custom for the priest to throw earth on the coffin in the form of a cross, and then to sprinkle it with holy water.—

2Leash, 1. e., leading-string.

Low.
Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate, sir.

Flo. So call it; but it does fulfill my vow: I needs must think it honestly. Camillo, Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may Be thereat gleam’d: for all the sun sees, or The close earth wombs, or the profound seas hide In unknown fathom’d, will I break my oath To this my fair belov’d. Therefore, I pray you, As have ever been my father’s honor’d friend, When he shall miss me, (as, in faith, I mean not To see him any more) cast your good counsels Upon his passion: let myself and fortune Tug for the time to come. This you may know, And so deliver.—I am put to sea With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore; And, most opportune to our need, I have A vessel rides fast by, but not prepar’d For this design. What course I mean to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.

Cam. O, my lord! I would your spirit were easier for advice, Or stronger for your need.

Flo. Hark, Perdita.—

[To Camillo.] I'll hear you by and by.

[They talk apart.]

He’s irremovable;

Cam. Resolv’d for flight. Now were I happy, if His going I could frame to serve my turn; Save him from danger, do him love and honor, Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia, And that unhappy king, my master, whom I so much thirst to see. Now, good Camillo, I am so fraught with a serious business, that I leave out ceremony. [Going.]

Cam. Sir, I think, You have heard of my poor services, ’tis the love That I have borne your father?

Flo. Very nobly. How you deserve’d: it is my father’s music, To speak your deeds; not little of his care To have them recompens’d, as thought on.

Cam. Well, my lord, If you may please to think I love the king, And, through him, what’s nearest to him, which is Your gracious self, embrace but my direction, (If your more ponderous and settled project May suffer alteration) on mine honor I’ll put you where you shall have such receiving As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress; (from the whom, I see, There’s no disposition to be made, but by, As heavens forefend, your ruin) marry her; And (with my best endeavors in your absence) Your discontented father strive to qualify, And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo, May this, almost a miracle, be done? That I may call thee something more than man, And, after that, to trust thee.

Cam. Have you thought on A place whereto you’ll go?

Flo. Not any yet; But as th’ unthought-on accident is guilty To what we wildly do, so we proceed Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies Of every wind that blows.

Cam. Then list to me: This follows. If you will not change your purpose, But undergo this flight, make for Sicilia, And there present yourself, and your fair princess, (For so, I see, she must be) to Leonato: She shall be habit’d, as it becomes The partner of your bed. Mythinks, I see Leonato, opening his free arms, and weeping His welcomes forth; asks thee, the son, forgiveness, As ’twere the father’s person; kisses the hands Of your fresh princess; o’er and o’er divides him Twist his unkindness and his kindness; ’th one He obliges to hell, and bids the other grow Faster than thought, or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo, What color for my visitation shall I Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king, your father, To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir, The manner of your bearing towards him, With what you, as from your father, shall deliver, Things known betwixt us three, I’ll write you down: The which shall point you forth at every sitting What you must say, that he shall not perceive, But that you have your father’s bosom there, And speak his very heart.

Flo. There’s some sop in this.

Cam. A course more promising Than a wild dedication of yourselves To unapt’d waters, undream’d shores; most certain, To miseries enough: no hope to help you, But, as you shake off one, to take another: Nothing so certain as your anchors, who Do their best office, if they can but stay you Where you’ll be loath to be. Besides, you know, Prosperity’s the very bond of love, Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together, Affliction alters.

Per. One of these is true: I think, affliction may subdue the check, But not take “in the mind.”

Cam. Yea, say you so?

There shall not, at your father’s house, these seven Be born another such. [Years,]

Flo. My good Camillo, She is as forward of her breeding, as She is i’ the rear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, ’tis pity She lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir; for this I’ll blush you thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita.—

But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camillo, Preserver of my father, now of me, The medicine of our house, how shall we do? We are not furnish’d like Bohemian’s son, Nor shall appear in Sicily—

Cam. My lord, Fear none of this. I think, you know, my fortunes Do all lie there: it shall be so my care To have you royally appointed, as if The scene you play were true. For instance, sir, That you may know you shall not want,—one word. [They talk 5 apart.

Enter Autolycus.

Act. Ha, ha! what a fool honesty is! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery: not a counterfeit stone, not a
He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have no hat.—

[Given it to Perdita.

Come, lady, come.—Farewell, my friend.

Ant. Alienate, sir.

Flo. O Perdita! what have we twain forgot?

Pray you, a word.

[They 3 talk apart.

Cam. What I do next shall be to tell the king
Of this escape, and whither they are bound;
Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after: in whose company
I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight
I have a woman's longings.

Flo. Fortune speed us!—
Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed the better.

[Exeunt Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Ant. I understand the business; I hear it. To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble head, is necessary for a cut-purse: a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been without boot! what a boot is here with this exchange! Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing extemore. The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity; stealing away from his father, at this close on his heels. If I thought it were a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would not do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it, and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside,—here is more matter for a hot brain. Every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

Clo. See, see, what a man you are now! There is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changeling and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Clo. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to, then.

Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her; those secret things, all but what she bears within her. This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the deceiver, by I know how much an ounce.

Ant. [Aside.] Very wisely, puppies! Shep. Well, let us to the king: there is that in this b fardel will make him scratch his head.

Ant. [Aside.] I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Clo. Pray heartily he be at palace.

Ant. [Aside.] Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—let me pocket up my pedlar's excrement,— [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rustic! whither are you bound? Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.

Ant. Your affairs there? what with whom? the condition of that b fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what b having, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known discover.

* A pomander was a ball of perfumes, worn in the pocket or about the neck.
- A foot. [-] Hubub. [-] Birds. [-] Some boot. [-] Stripped.
Act V.

Cleo. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Ant. A lie: ye are rough and hoary. Let me have no lying: it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie; but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel: therefore, they do not give us the lie.

Cleo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shep. Are you a counsellor, not like you, sir?

Ant. Whether it like me, or no, I am a counsellor. Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings hath not my gait in it the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-odor from me? reflect not on thy baseness court-contempt? Think'st thou, for that I simulate, or 'touze from thee thy business, I am therefore no counsellor! I am counsellor, capable; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there; whereupon, I command thee to open thy affair.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Ant. What advocate hast thou to him?

Shep. I know not, an't like you.

Ant. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant: say, you have none.

Shep. None, sir: I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen.

Ant. How bless'd are we that are not simple men! Yet nature might have made us these are, Therefore I'll not disdain.

Cleo. This cannot but be a great counsellor.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Ant. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the picking on'th's teeth.

Ant. The fardeI there? what's I the fardeI? Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lie such secrets in this fardeI, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Ant. Assy, thou hast lost thy labor.

Shep. Why, sir?

Ant. The king is not at the palace: he is gone aboard a new ship to purge melancholy, and air himself: for, if thou be'ast capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Ant. If the shepherd be not in 'hand-fast', let him fly: the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Cleo. Think you so, sir?

Ant. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter, but those that are 'germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the ahtogham: which, though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say, he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I. Draw our throne into a sheep-cote? all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Cleo. Hither old man o'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Ant. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive, then, 'pointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; there stand, till he be three quart-ters and a drum dead; then recovered again with aqua-vite, or some other hot-infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these tritulory rascals, whose miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, (for you seem to be honest plain men) what you have to the king? I being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and, if it be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Cleo. He seems to be of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with a gold. Show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Remember, stoned, and flayed alive!

Shep. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawn, till bring it you.

Ant. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. Ay, sir.

Ant. Well, give me the moiety.—Are you a party in this business?

Cleo. In some sort, sir; but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Ant. O! that's the case of the shepherd's son: hang him, he'll be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the king, and show our strange sights: he must know, 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, 'till it be brought you.

Ant. I will trust you. Walk before toward the seaside: go on the right hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you.

Cleo. We are blessed in this man, as I may say, even blessed.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids us. He was provided to do us good. [Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.

Ant. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me: she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion—gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: if he think it fit to shoo them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me rogue for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to't. To him I will present them: there may be matter in it. [Exit.

Act V.

Scene I.—Sicilia. A Room in the Palace of Leontes.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and Others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed

[The hottest day fortold in the almanack.—Being something gently considered, I. e., for a gentlemanly consideration, or a handsome bribe.]
A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make
Which you have not redeem'd: indeed, paid down
More penitence than done trespass. At the last,
Do, as the heavens have done, forget your evil;
With them, forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember
Her, and her virtues, I cannot forget
My blinthishes in them, and so still think of
The wrong I did myself: which was so much,
That heilless it hath made my kingdom, and Destroy'd the sweet'nest companion, that o'er man
Bred his hopes out of: true.

Paul. Too true, my lord:
If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or from the all that are taken something good,
To make a perfect woman, she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd.

Leon. I think so. Kill'd!
She I kill'd? I did so; but thou strik'st me sorely, to say I did: it is as bitter Upon my tongue, as in my thought. Now, good now, Say so but seldom.

Cleo. Not at all, good lady:
You might have spoken a thousand things that would Have done the time more benefit, and grace'd
Your kindness better.

Paul. You are one of those,
Were have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so,
You pity not the state, nor the remembrance
Of his most sovereign name: consider little,
What dangers, by his highness' fall of issue,
May drop upon his kingdom, and devour
Incertain lookers-on. What were more holy,
Than to rejoice the former queen is well?
What holier than, for royalty's repair,
For present comfort, and for future good,
To bless the bed of majesty again
With a sweet fellow to 't?

Paul. There is none worthy,
Respecting her that's gone.Besides, the gods
Will have fulfilled their secret purposes;
For has not the divine Apollo said,
Is't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? which, that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason,
As my Antigonus to break his grave,
And come again to me; who, on my life,
Did perish with the infant. 'Tis your counsel,
My lord should to the heavens be contrary,
Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue;
The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest, so his successor
Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,—
Who hath the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honor,—O, that care
Had squar'd me to thy counsel!—then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes,
Have taken treasure from her lips,—

Paul. And left them
More rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak'st truth.
No more such wives; therefore, no wise: one worse,
And better us', would make her saint'd spirit
Again possess her corpse; and, on this stage,
(Where we offenders now appear) soul-veck'd,
Begin, "And why to b' me?"

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would 'incease me
To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so:
Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what what part in't
You chose her? then I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should 'riff to hear me, and the words what follow'd
Should be, "Remember mine."

Leon. Stars, stars!
And all eyes else dead Souls.—Fear thou no wife;
I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry, but by my free leave?
Leon. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit!
Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.
Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another,
As like Hermione as is her picture,
*Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam, I have done.

Paul. Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will—give me the office
To choose you a queen. She shall not be so young As was your former; but she shall be such
As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy
To see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bidd'st us.

Paul. That
Shall be when your first queen's again in breath:
Never till then.

*Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she
The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires access
To your high presence.

Leon. What! with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd
By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
And those but mean.

Leon. His princes, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay: the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That e'er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione! As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better, gone, so must thy grace
Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that etsmene She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd:—thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once: 'tis shrewdly elli'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam:
The one I have almost forgot, (your pardon)
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make proselytes
Of whom she but did follow.

Paul. How! not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomences;
Yourself, assisted with your honor'd friends,
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT V.

Bring them to our embracement.—Still 'tis strange,
[Exit Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentlemen.]

He thus should stand upon us.

Paul. Had our Prince
(Jovel of children) seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well with this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Py'th'ce, no more: cease! thou know'st,
He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—
Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Others.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince,
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you. Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him; and speak of something, wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess, goddess!—O, alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might then have stood, butゲetting wonder us,
You, gracious couple, do. And then I lose
(All mine own folly) the society,
Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here brought Sicilia; and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother; and, but inurnity
(Which waits upon worn times) hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measure'd to look upon you, whom he loves
(He bade me say so) more than all the sceptres,
And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother!
Good gentleman, the wrongs I have done thee stir
Afresh within me; and these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness.—Welcome bither,
As is the spring to th' earth. And bath he, too,
Exped'd this paragon to the fearful usage
(At least ungentle) of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
'Tis adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord,
She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smailus,
That noble, honor'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclim'd him, parting with her: thence (A prosperous south-wind friendly) we have cross'd,
To execute the charge my father gave me,
For visiting your highness. My best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd,
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify,
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety
Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here! You have a noble father,
A gentleman, against whose person,
So sacred as it, I have done sin;
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father's bless'd

[As he from heaven merits it] with you,
Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
Bohemia greets you from himself by me;
Desires you to beatach his son, who has (His dignity and duty both cast off)
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
A shepherd's daughter.

Lord. Here in your city: I now came from him:
I speak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. To your court
While he was hastening (in the clane, it seems,
Of this fair couple) meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady, and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me
Who is his honor, and whose honesty, till now,
Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay'st so to his charge:
He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?
Lord. Camillo, sir: I spake with him, who now
Has these poor men in question. Never saw I
Wretches so quak'd: they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak:
Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!—
The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.
Leon. You are married!
Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:
The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king?
Flo. She is,
When once she is my wife.
Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's speed,
Will come on very slowly. I am sorry,
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty; and as sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up:
Though fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us with my father, power no jot
Hatth she to change our loves.—Beweeth you, sir,
Remember since you ow'd no more to time
Than I do now; with thought of such affections,
Step forth mine advocate: at your request,
My father will grant precious things as trifles.
Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mis-
Which he counts but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a mouth
'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such
Than what you look on now.

Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition
[To Florizel.
Is yet unanswered. I will to your father:
Your honor not o'ershown by your desires,

*Graceful," i.e. full of grace.
I am a friend to them, and you; upon which errand
I now go toward him. Therefore, follow me,
And mark what way I make. Come, good my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter AULUS CYCUS and a Gentleman.

Aul. Beweest you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aul. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

2 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business; but the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration; they seemed almost with staring on one another, to bear the cases of their eyes: there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed. A notable passion of wonder appeared in them; but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow, but in the extremity of the one it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, haply, knows more. The news, Sir Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires. The oracle is fulfilled; the king's daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina's steward: he can deliver you more. How goes it now, sir? This news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion. Has the king found his heir?

3 Gent. Most true; if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance: that which you'll hear you'll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs. The mantle of queen Hermione—her jewel about the neck of it:—the letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his character:—the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother:—the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding, every great affluence, I proclaim her with all certainty to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.

3 Gent. Then you have lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seemed, sorrow went to take leave of them, for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garment, not by favor. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, "O my mother, thy mother?" then asked Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries his daughter with "clipping her: now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-beaten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which} James report to follow it, and undoes description to show it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep, and not an ear open. He was torn to pieces with a heart this avouches the shepherd's son, who has not only his innocence (which seems much) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings of his that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?

3 Gent. Wrecked, the same instant of their master's death, and in the view of the shepherd: so that all the instruments, which aided to expose the child, were even then lost, when it was found. But, of the noble combat, that 'twixt joy and sorrow was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing her.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes, for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish) was, when at the relation of the queen's death, (with the manner how she came to't,) heavily confessed, and lamented by the king how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of colour to another, she did, with an alms! I would fain say, bleed tears, for, I am sure, my heart was blood. Who was most marble there changed color; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the wo had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

3 Gent. Not: the princess hearing of her mother's statute, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer. Though with all greendness of affection, are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

2 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand, for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company piece the rejoicing?

3 Gent. I would be thence; that has the benefit of access. Every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born: our absence makes us unprofitable to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exeunt Gentlemen.

Aut. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son abroad the prince; told him I heard them talk of a fardel, and I know not what: but he at that time, over-pond of the shepherd's daughter, (so he then took her to be,) who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me; for had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discords.

"Who was most marred," i.e., those who had the hardest hearts. — Immortality. — Remote.
Enter Shepherd and Clown, in new apparel.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past more children; but thy sons and daughters will be all gentleman born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born: see you these clothes? say, you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say, these robes are not gentleman born. Give me the lie, do, and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have—but I was a gentleman born before my father, for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the prince, my brother, and the princess, my sister, called my father, father; and so we wept; and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Pr'ythee, son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince, thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know, thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I'll swear it, and I would thou woldst be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow: if I do not wonder how thou darest venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not.—[Trumpet.

Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Chapel in Paulina's House.

Enter Leonato, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O! grave and good Paulina, the great comrade that I have had of thee! [fort Paul.

What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well. All my services, you have paid home; but that you vouchsaft, With your crown'd brother, and these your contracted Hiers of your kingdom, my poor house to visit, It is a surplus of your grace, which never

My life may last to answer.

Leon. O Paulina! We honor you with trouble. But we came To see the statue of our queen! in your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities, but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Exceals whatever you look'd upon, Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold! and say, 'tis well. [Paulina undraws a curtain, and discovers a statue.}

3 Music playing.—A pause.

I like your silence: it the more shows off Your wonder: but yet speak:—first you, my liege. Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture. Chide me, dear stone, that I may say, indeed, Thou hast Hermione; or, rather, thou art she In thy not chiding, for she was as tender As infancy, and grace.—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems.

Pol. O! not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence; Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O! thus she stood, Even with such life of majesty, (warm life, As now it coldly stands) when first I woo'd her. I am ashamed: do not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it?—O, royal piece! There's magic in thy majesty, which has My evils conjur'd to remembrance; and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee.

Per. And give me leave,

And do not say 'tis superstition, that 'Karelina,' I kneel, and thus implore her blessing.—Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but began,

Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

Paul. O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd, the color's Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore hid on, Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers dry: scarce any joy Did ever so long live; no sorrow, But 'll itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear brother, Let him that was the cause of this have power To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord, If I had thought, the sight of my poor image Would thus have 'wrought you, (for the stone is mine) I'd not have show'd it.

Leon. Do not draw the curtain.

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't, lest your May think anon it moves. [fancy Leon. Let be, let be! Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already I am but dead, stone looking upon stone.— What was he that did make it?—See, my lord, Would you not deem it breath'd, and that those veins

* A "franklin" was a freecelder, or yeoman. — Bold; courageous.

* Agitated.
THE WINTER’S TALE.

SCENE III.

Didst verily bear blood?
Pol. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon. The figure of her eye has motion *in't,
  As we are mock'd with art.
Paul. I'll draw the curtain.
My lord's almost so far transported, that [Offers again to draw.
He'll think anon it lives.
Leon. O, sweet Paulina!
Make me to think so twenty years together:
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let 't alone. [but Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you;
I could afflict you farther.
Leon. Do, Paulina,
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: what fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.
Paul. Good my lord, forbear. [She stays him.
The redness upon her lip is wet:
You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own
With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain?
Leon. No, not these twenty years.
Per. So long could I Stand by, a looker on.
Paul. Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement. If you can behold it,
I'll make the statute move indeed; descend,
And take you by the hand; but then you'll think,
(Which I protest against) I am assisted
By wicked powers.
Leon. What you can make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak,
I am content to hear; for 'tis as easy
To make her speak, as move.
Paul. It is requir'd,
You do awake your faith. Then, all stand still.
On, those that think it is unlawful business
I am about; let them depart.
Leon. Proceed:
No foot shall stir,
Music awake her. Strike!—[Music.
'Tis time; descend; be stoe no more; approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come;
I'll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeems you.—You perceive, she stirrs.
[HERMIONE descends 2 slowly from the pedestal.
Start not: her actions shall be holy,
As you hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again, for then
You kill her double. Nay, present your hand:
 When she was young you wou'd her; now, in age,
Is she become the suitor?
Leon. O! she's warm. [Embracing her.
If this be magic, let it be an art
Lawful as eating.
Pol. She embraces him.
Cam. She hangs about his neck.
If she pertain to life, let her speak too.
Pol. Ay; and make it manifest where she has liv'd,
Or how stol'n from the dead?
Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hoisted at
Like an old tale: but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.—
Please you to interpose, fair madam: kneel,
And pray your mother's blessing.—Turn, good lady,
Our Perdita is found. [PERDITA kneels to HERMIONE.
Her. You gods, look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter's head!—Tell me, nine own, Where hast thou been preserv'd? where lived? how found
Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear, that I,
Knowing by Paulina that the oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserv'd
Myself to see the issue.
Paul. There's time enough for that,
Lost they desire upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation.—Go together,
You precious 'winners all: your exaltation
Portake to every one. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.
Leon. O peace, Paulina!
 Thou shoul'dst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match,
And made between's by vows. Thou hast found mine;
But how is to be question'd, for I saw her,
As I thought, dead; and have in vain said many
A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek far
(For him, I partly know his mind) to find thee
An honorable husband.—Come, Camillo,
'And take her hand, whose worth, and honesty,
Is richly noted, and here justified
By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.—
What!—Look upon my brother:—both your pardons,
That e'er I put between your holy looks
My ill-suspicion.—This your son-in-law,
And son unto the king, (whom heavens directing)
Is truth-plighted to your daughter.—Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence, where we may leisurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were desirer'd. Hastily lead away. [Exeunt.

* "You precious winners," i.e., you who by this discovery have gained what you desired.—Participate. — "Whose" relates to Camillo.

SCENE, sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and Others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of In my "behavior," i.e., in the words and actions I am now going to use.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this? Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king’s defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace. Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard. So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

\[\text{Footnote:} \text{"Proud control," i.e., constraint; compulsion.}\]

To this fair island, and the territories, To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine; Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways usurpingly these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur’s hand, Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this? Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king’s defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace. Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard. So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

\[\text{Footnote:} \text{"Proud control," i.e., constraint; compulsion.}\]
And sudden presage of your own decay.—
An honorable conduct let him have:
Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon.
[Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke.

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,
How that ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son?
This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right,
Or else it must go wrong with you, and me:
So much my conscience whispers in your ear,
Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controverty,
Come from the country to be judg'd by you,
That 'er I heard: shall I produce the men?

Our abbeyes, and our priories, shall pay
Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Faulconbridge,
And Philip, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I; a gentleman
Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge,
A soldier, by the honor-giving hand
Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?
You came not of one mother, then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king;
That is well known, and, as I think, one father:
But, for the certain knowledge of that truth,
I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother:
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honor with this difference.

Bast. I, madam! no, I have no reason for it:
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pounds a year.
Heaven guard my mother's honor, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow.—Why, being younger born,

Doth he not claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with basterdy:
But wher's he be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But, that I am as well begot, my liege,
(For fain the bones that took the pains for me!)
Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If any Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this son like him,
O! old sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He hath a trick of Cœur-de-lion's face;
The accent of his tongue affecteth him.
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?

* Conduct; administration. — "A trick," i. e., a peculiar cast of the features.

K. John. Mio ey hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak;
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father,
With that half-face would he have all my land:
A half-face'd great five hundred pound a year!

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.

Bast. Well, sir; by this you cannot get my land:
Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time.
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail I shame to speak,
But truth is true: large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay,
As I have heard my father speak himself,
When this same lusty gentleman was got.
Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That this, my mother's son, was none of his:
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
And if she said phye false, the fault was hers,
Which she doth live on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives; Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This calf; bred from his cow, from all the world;
In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother's,
My brother might not claim him, nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him.—This concludes,
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall, then, my father's will be of no force
To dispossess that child which is not his?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossesses me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
And, like thy brother, to enjoy thy land,
Or the royal son of Cœur-de-lion?
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, sir Robert's his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-rods,
My arms such cel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,
That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose,
Lest men should say, "Look, where three-fourths goes.

And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face:
I would not be sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well. Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year,
Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.

* A "half-face" is a profile.—"This concludes," i. e., this is the conclusion to be drawn.—"Lord of thy presence," i. e., of the respect due to thy rank.—"Sir Robert's—is used for Sir Robert's.—The "three-fourths" pieces of Queen Elizabeth had a rose on the reverse side.—"To," i. e., in addition to.—Robert.
KING JOHN.

Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

[Enter Nay, I would have you go before me thisher.

K. John. What is thy name?

Phil. Philip, my liege; so is my name beget;

K. John. For henceforth bear his name whose form thou bearest.

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great:

[Enter kneels and rises.

Arise sir Richard, and Plunganet.

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand: I

My father gave me honor, yours gave land.

Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,

When I was got sir Robert was away.

[Enter the very spirit of Plunganet!—

I am thy grandson, Richard: call me so. [though?

[Enter Madam, by chance, but not by truth: what

Something about, a little from the right,

In the window, or else o'er the hatch:

Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night,

And have is, however men do catch.

Near or far off, well won is still well shot,

And I am, how'er I was begot.

K. John, Go, Faulconbridge: now hast thou thy desire;

A handless knight makes thee a landed 'squire—

Come, manum, and come, Richard, we must speed

For France, for France, it is for more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee,

For thou hast got: i' the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.

A foot of honor better than I was,

But many, 'ah, many foot of land the worse.

Well, now can I make any Joan a lady—

"Good day, and sir Richard,"—"Bed, mercy, fellow;

"And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter;

For new-born honor doth forget men's names:

'Tis too 'respective, and too sociable,

For your="conversion. Now your traveller,

He and his tooth-pick at my worship's 'mess,

And when my knighting stomach is sufficed, I

When I sink my teeth, and catechize

My picked man of countries; they say dear sir,

Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,

"I shall beseech you"—that is question now;

And then comes answer like an ABC-book:

"O sir," says answer, "at your best command;

At your employment; at your service, sir;"

"No, sir," says question, "I, sweet sir, at yours:"

And so, ere answer knows what question would,

Saving in dialogue of compliment,

And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,

The Pyrenees, and the river Po,

It draws toward supper, in conclusion so.

But this is worshipful society,

And fits "a mounting spirit, like myself;

For he is but a bastard to the time,

That doth not smack of observation;

And so am I, whether I smack, or no;

And not alone in habit and device,

Exterior form, outward accoutrement,

But from the inward motion to deliver

Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:

Which, though I will not practise to deceive,

Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn,

For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.—

But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?

What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,

That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney.

O me! it is my mother.—How now, good lady!

What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he,

That holds in chase mine honor up and down?

Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert's son?

Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man?

Is it sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Lady Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend

Sir Robert's son: why scorns' thout at sir Robert?

He is sir Robert's son, and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile?

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip!—spare!—James,

There's toys abroad: anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son:

Sir Robert might have eat his part in me

Upon Good-Friday, and never broke his fast.

Sir Robert could do well: marry, to confess,

'Could not get me; sir Robert could not do it:

We know his handy-work.—Therefore, good mother,

To whom am I beholding for these limbs!

Sir Robert never holp to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother, too,

That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honor?

What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilisco like.

What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

But, mother, I am not sir Robert's son;

I have disclaimer'd sir Robert, and my land;

Legitimation, name, and all is gone.

Then, good my mother, let me know my father:

Some proper man, I hope; who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself Sir Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father.

By long and vehement suit I was seduced

To make room for him in my husband's bed.—

Heaven! lay not my transgression to my charge.

Thou art the issue of my dear offence,

Who was by strong my urg'd, and my love's defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,

Madam, I would not wish a better father.

Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,

And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:

Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,

Subjected tribute to commanding love,

Against whose fury and unmatched force

The swellest lion could not wage the fight,

Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.

He, that perforce robs lions of their hearts,

May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,

With all my heart I thank thee for my father.

Who lives, and dares but say thou didst not well

When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.

Come, lady, I will show thee to my kins;

And they shall say, when Richard me begot,

If thou hastid said him nay, it had been sin:

Who says it was, he lies: I say, 'twas not.

SCENE I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, Philip, King of France, and Forces; Lewis, Constance, Arthur, and Attendants.

Lee. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—Arthur, that great fore-runner of thy blood, Richard, that robb’d the lion of his heart, and fought the holy wars in Palestine, by this brave duke came early to his grave: and, for amends to his posterity, at our 5importance bither is he come, to spread his colors, boy, in thy behalf; and to rebuke the usurpation of thy unnatural uncle, English John:
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome bither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion’s death, the rather, that you give his offspring life, shadowing 1his right under your wings of war. I give you welcome with a powerless hand, but with a heart full of unstrained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lee. Who would not do the right? 1

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss, as seal to this indenture of my love;
That to my home I will no more return, till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France, together with that pale, that white-face’d shore, whose foot spurns back the ocean’s roaring tides, and coops from other lands her islanders, even till that England, bred in with the main, that water-walled bulwark, still secure and confident from foreign purposes, even till that utmost corner of the west

K. Phi. Well then, to work. Our cannon shall Against the brows of this resisting town:— Call for our chiefest men of discipline, To call the plots of best 5advantages, We’ll lay before this town our royal bones, Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen’s blood, but we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy, lost madness’d you stain your swords with blood. My lord Chatillon may from England bring That right in peace, which here we urge in war; and then we shall repent each drop of blood, that hot rash haste so 2indiscreetly shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish, Our messenger, Chatillon, is arriv’d!— What England says, say briefly, gentle lord; We coldly pause for thee: Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege, and stir them up against a mightier task. England, impatient of your just demands, Hath put himself in arms: the adverse winds, whose leisure I have stay’d, have given him time To land his legions all as soon as I. His marches are 4expedient to this town; His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along has come the mother-queen,

As *Até stirring him to blood and strife: With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain; With them a bastard of the king’s deceased, and all th’ unsettled humors of the land: Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries, With ladies’ faces, and fierce dragon’s spleens, Have sold their fortunes at their native homes, Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs, To make a hazard of new fortunes here. In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits, Than now the English bottoms have waft’d o’er, Did never float upon the swelling tide, To do offence and 4scaith in Christendom.

[Drums heard. 6

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand, To parley, or to fight; therefore, prepare.

Enter King John, Elizor, Blanche, the Bastard Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace Our just and lineal entrance to our own: [permit If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven;
Whiles we, God’s wrathful agent, do correct Their proud contempt that heats his peace to heaven.
K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return From France to England, there to live in peace, England we love; and, for that England’s sake, With burden of our armor here we swear, This toil of ours should be a work of thine; But thou from loving England art so far, That thou hast 4under-wrought 7her lawful king, Cut off the 6sequence of posterity, outfaced infant state, and done a rape Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.

Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey’s face: 1

These eyes, these brows, these moulded out of his; This little abstract doth contain that large, Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time Shall draw this 6brief into as huge a volume. That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born, And this his son: England was Geoffrey’s right, And this is Geoffrey’s. In the name of God, How comes it, then, that thou art call’d a king, When living blood doth in these temples beat, Which owe the crown that thou o’ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commis- To draw my answer from thy articles? [sion, France, K. Phi. From that 1supernal Judge, that stirs In any breast of strong authority, 6good thoughts To look into the slots and stains of right, That Judge hath made me guardian to this boy; Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong, And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. Phi. Excuse: it is to beat usurping down. Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France? Const. Let me make answer to thy usurping son. Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king, That thou may’st be a queen, and check the world! Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true, As thine was to thy husband, and this boy Liken in feature to his father Geoffrey,

A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Cons. Ay, who doubts that a will? a wicked will;
A woman's will: a canker'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate.
It ill beseeches this presence, to cry "aid"
To these ill-tuned repetitions,
Some trumpet summon'd hither to the walls.
The king of Angiers: let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

Cit. Who is it, that hath warn'd us to the walls?

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects, —
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's sub-
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle. [Jects,
K. John. For our advantage; therefore, hear us
These flags of France, that are advanced here [first.—
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have either march'd to your encompassment:
The cannons have their bowsels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Come 'fore your city's eyes, your winking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been disributed, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,
Whose publickly, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threatened cheeks,
Behold, the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle;
And now, instead of bullets wrap'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king: whose labor'd spirits,
Forwaried in this action of swift speed,
Craze harborage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.
Lo! in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely voy'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet,
Son of the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys.
For this dowa-trodden equity, we trend
In warlike march these greens before your town;
Being no farther enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. 'Be pleased, then,
To do that duty, which you truly own,
To him that Bow's it, namely, this young prince;
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up:
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And with a blessed and unvex'd retire,
With unack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundure of your old-fac'd walls

KING JOHN.

Can hide you from our messengers of war,
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbor'd in their rude circumferrence.
Then, tell us: shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challenge't it,
And shall we give the signal to our rage,
Or shall we break in to blood our possession?
In brief, we are the king of England's sub-
For him, and in his right, we hold this town. [Aside:
K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.
Ct. That we can not; but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal: till that time,
Have we remm'd up our gates against the world.
K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove
And, if not, I bring you your witnesses. [The king?
The fifty thousand hearts of England's breed,— Bast. Bastards, and else.
K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bloods as those,— Bast. Some bastards, too.
K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.
Ct. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.
K. John. Then God forgive the sins of all those
That to their everlasting residence
Before the dew of evening fall shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

K. Phi. Alien, Amen.—Mount, chevaliers! to Bast. St. George, that s'wung'd the dragon, and Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence! [To Austria.] Sirrah, were
At your den, sirrah, with your lions, [At home,
I would set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.
Aust. Peace! no more.
Bast. O! tremble, for you hear the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set
In best appointment all our regiments.
Bast. Speed, then, to take advantage of the field.
K. Phi. It shall be so;—[To Lewis.] and at the Command the rest to stand.—God and our right!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Alarums and Execcutions; then a Retreat. Enter a French Herald, with trumpets, to the gates.
F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in,
Who by the hand of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground:
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing thediscord'd earth,
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand, triumphantlv display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.
E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells:
King John, your king, and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day.
Their armor, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hitler return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood.
There stuck no plume in any English crew,
That is remov'd by

*Whipped.

Our colors do return in those same hands,
That did display them when we first march'd forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes.
Open your gates, and give the victors way.
Ct. Here, from off our towers, at this night behold,
From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies: whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censur'd:
Blows: Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd
Strength match'd with strength, and power confront—
Both are alike; and both alike we like.
[ed power:
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.
Enter, at one side, King John, with his power, Elinor, Blanche, and the Bastards; at the other,
King Philip, Lewis, Austria, and forces.
K. John. France, fast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right room on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'er-swell
With constant disturb'd even thy confining shores,
Unless thou let his silver waters keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.
K. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop of
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more: and by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
Before we will by down our just-borne arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we
Or aid a royal number to the dead,—
Bear, Gracing the scroll, that tells this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Bast. Ha! majesty, how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire.
O! now doth death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, e'mouzing the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings—
Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
You equal potent,

[ed spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death!
K. John. Whose party do the townsman yet admit!
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England who's your king?
Ct. The king of England, when we know the K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear prostration of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
Ct. A greater power than we denies all this;
And, till he be undetermined, we do stand
Our former scroyle in our strong-bar'd gates,
Kings of our fear; until our
Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.
Bast. By heaven, these

[ed Angiers float you, kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gaze and point
At their insatiables at the king of death,
Your royal presence be rul'd by me:
Do like the [mutineers of Jerusalem,

Be friends awhile, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town.
By east and west let France and England mount

[a] "Censur'd," i.e., determined; judged. — Deceiv'd.
[b] "Scroyle," i.e., scabby fellows. — Mutineers.
Their battering cannon, charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing clammers have brad'ld down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfeigned desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That thou discoverst thy united strengths,
And part your mingled colors once again;
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point;
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favor she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Sneaks it not something of the policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our
I like it well.—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?

Bast. An if then hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
That thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why, then defy each other, and, poll-mell,
Make work upon ourselves for heaven, or hell.

K. Phi. Let it be so.—Say, where will you assault.
K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

And so from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. O, prudent discipline! From north to south,
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.

[Aside.]
I'll stir them to it.—Come, away, away! [stay,

Ct. Hear us, great kings: vouchesafe a while to
And I shall show you peace, and fair-fac'd league;
Win you this city without stroke, or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field.
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favor: we are beat to hear.

Ct. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanch,
Is sent to England: look upon the years
Of Louis, the Dauphin, and that lovely maid.
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
If serious love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete of, say, he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that she is not he:
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
O! two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in;
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall do more than battery can
To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide open,
And give you entrance; but, without this match,

* Soul-appalling. — Fions. — Speed.

The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion: no, not death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carcasse of old death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
[seas;

As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs.
What cannoner begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon-fire, and smoke, and bane;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue:
Our cars are cudgell'd: not a word of his,
But buffets better than a fist of France.
Zounds! I was never so bestumph'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father dad.

Eliz. Son, list to this conjunction; make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough,

For by this knot thou shalt so surelie
Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown.
That yond' green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper: urge them while their souls
Are capable of this ambition,
Last zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of petty passions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and conged again to what it was.

Ct. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forword first

To speak unto this city: what say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely
Can without book of beauty read his love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea,
(Except this city now by us besie'd)
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed, and make her rich
In titles, honors, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blazon,
Holds hand with any princess of the world. [face.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? I look in the lady's Lew. I do, my lord; and in her eye I find
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of myself form'd in her eye,
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow.
I do protest, I've never lov'd myself,
Till now infixed I beheld myself
Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

[Whispers with Blanch.

Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye,
Hang'd in the crowning wrinkle of her brow,
And quarter'd in her heart, he dotheasy
Himself love's traitor: this is pity now, [be,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should
In such a love, so vile a lust as he.

Blanch. My uncle's will in this respect is mine:
If he see aught in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will;
Or if you will, to speak more properly,
I will enforce it easily to my love.
Farther I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,

* A stay," i. e., an interruption. — a * Table" is used here metaphorically for table, or writing-table.
SCENE I.

KING JOHN.

Then this,—that nothing do I see in you, [judge,
Though chariulish thoughts themselves should be your
That I can find should merit any hate.
K. John. What say those young ones? What say you, my nieces?
Blanche. That she is bound in honor still to do
What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say.
K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin: can you love this lady?
Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love,
For I do love her most unfeignedly. [Maine,
K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine, Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin,—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.
K. Phi. It likes us well.—Young princes, close your hands. [They join hands.
Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well-assur'd,
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.
K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at saint Mary's chapel presently
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd,—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much.
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.
Lew. She is mad and passionate at your highness' tent. [made,
K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have
Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow'd lady? in her right we came,
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own
K. John. We will heal up all;
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond, and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the lady Constance:
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity.—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet to some measure satisfy her so;
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlucky'd for, unprepared pomp.
[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens
Retire from the walls.
Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!
John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part;
And France, whose armor conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier,
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids,—
Who having no external thing to last
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,
Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is poised well,
Made to run even, upon even ground,
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This way of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifference,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same basis, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Chipp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aim,
From a resolv'd and honorable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
And why rail I on this commodity?
But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have poor to clutch my hand,
When his fair
angels would salute my palm;
But
for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raleth on the rich,
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say, there is no sin, but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say, there is no vice but beggary.
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee.
[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. The French King's Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married? gone to swear a peace?
False blood to false blood join'd? Gone to be friends?
Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, mishear'd:
Bo well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so.
I trust, I may not trust thee, for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man:
I have a king's oath to the contrary,
Thou shalt not punish this thy trusting,
For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits, I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
Why dost thou press upon my head thus?
Why dost thou look so sad upon my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds?
Be these sad signs conformers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.
Sal. As true, as, I believe, you think them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.
Const. O! if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which in the very meeting fall, and die.
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy! then where art thou?
France, art thou with Blanch? And when becomes me of thee?—
Fellow, be gone; I cannot break thy sight:
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.
Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?
Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.
Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.
Const. If thou, that bid'st me be content,wert
Ugly, and slanderous to thy mother's womb, [grim,
Full of unpleasing blds,
Insightly stains,
* Clasp.—Coins.—Because,—Susceptible.
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, profidious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;
For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature didth in thee the qualities to make great:
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with lilies boast,
And with the half-blown rose. But fortune, O!
She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee:
Sh'r addulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And in her majesty, that usurping France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John!—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forewarn'd?
Envenom him with words, or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-bear.

Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings — [thee.

Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt: I will not go with
I will instruct thy woes to be proud,
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stoop.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up. Here I and sorrows sit;
Here is my throne, bids kings come how to bow.

[K. Phi. sits on the ground.

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch, Elinor, Bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed Ever in France shall be kept festival: [day,
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist,
Turning, with splendor of his precious eye,
The meagre cloudy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course, that brings this day's Shall never see it but a holyday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! [Rising.
What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
That in golden letters should be set,
Among the high tides, in the calendar?
Not, nor, nor, turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame!—
Or if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd:
But on this day, let scamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made;
This day all things begun come to ill end;
Yet, faith itself to hollow falsehood change!

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause to curse the fair proceedings of this day.

Have I not pawi'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,
Reassembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried,
Proves valueless. You are forsworn, forsworn;
You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you oppress me with yours;
The grappling vigor, and rough frown of war,
Is cold in unity and faint in peace,
And our oppression hath used this up to make.

Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings! A widow cries: be husband to me, heavens!

Lest not the hours of this ungodly day

Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
Hear me! O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace! [War: war! no peace! peace is to me a war.
O, Lynoges! O, Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spell: thou shalt show it to the great:
Thou little villain, great in villany!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety: thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'd with greatness. What a fool art thou
A ramping fool; thy fear, and hate, and swear,
Upon my party? Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier! bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recrurent limbs.

Aust. That will I, and shall speak those words to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recrurent limbs.

Aust. Thou darst not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recrurent limbs.

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter Pandulph.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hall, you amount deputies of heaven.
To thee, king John, my holy crown is I Pendulph, of fair Milan cardinal,
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do in his name religiously demand,
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So willfully doth spurn; and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see
This, in our forenamed holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell me, this tale, and from the mouth of England,
Add thus much more.—that no Italian priest
Shall title or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme head,
So, under heaven, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without th' assistance of a mortal hand.
So tell the pope; all reverence set apart to him, and his nauph's authority.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christ-
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, lendem,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,
And, by the merit of vile gold, cross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
What in that tale, sells pardon from himself;
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curb'd, and excommunicate
And blessed shall he be, that doth revol

Sc. I.
KING JOHN.

From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call’d,
Canoniz’d, and worship’d as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.
O! lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile.
Good father Cardinal, cry thou amen
To my keen curses; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.
Pand. There’s a law and warrant, lady, for my curse.
Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong.
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?
Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic,
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.
[Hand.
Eliz. Look’st thou pale, France? do not let go thy Const. Look to that, devil, lest that France repent,
And by disjointing hands hell lose a soul.
Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal,
Bast. And hang a calf’s-skin on his recreant limbs.
Well, Ruffian, I must pocket up those wrongs.
Because—
Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.
K. John. Philip, what say’st thou to the cardinal?
Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?
Lev. Bethink you, father; for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend;
Forego the easier.
Blanch. That’s the curse of Rome,
Const. Of Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee;
In likeness of a new-uptrimm’d bridle.
Here, Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her
But from her need.
[faith,
Const. O! if thou grant my need,
Which only lives by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need:
O! then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep me as thou wouldst keep thyself; [this.
K. John. The king is mov’d, and answers not to Const. O! be remov’d from him, and answer well.
Aust. Do so, king Philip: hang no more in doubt.
Bast. Hang nothing but a calf’s-skin, most sweet
K. Phi. I am perplex’d, and know not what to say.
Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee
